Rev. J. H. Holland, P. C.: "The camp meeting on the American circuit, Seashore district, Mississippi Conference, closed on Oct. 10, with good results. We had a good revival in the church. Eighteen conversions and 4 accessions, and quite a number of backsliders reclaimed. It was said to be the best camp meeting for several years past. We had with us Rev. John A. Ellis, our much-beloved presiding elder, with health much improved. He was able to preach two splendid, good sermons. Also we had with us Rev. L. P. Meador, of the Meridian district; Rev. J. C. Long, from the Brandon district, and Rev. N. B. Young, of Seashore district; and the following local preachers: L. R. Roberts, Irvin Roberts, J. H. Havens, and Bro. Heister, from the Alabama Conference. All the preachers, both traveling and local, were full of the Good Spirit, and full of the interest of souls, and did good work in preaching and in the altar. Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held at the camp meeting. The circuit is behind, financially, but the stewards say that they will collect the assessment; so I think we will be able to carry up a good report at our Annual Conference."

Rev. Irvin Miller, P. C., Walnut Grove, Oct. 7: "I have finished my round of protracted meetings on Walnut Grove circuit, having held one at each of the five churches on the work. We have had good revival meetings at every appointment, and the church has advanced wonderfully in the spirituality of her membership. I don't remember to have attended better meetings in many long years. The accessions were not large at any appointment, but Christians were wonderfully revived, and the meetings at each appointment increased in interest from beginning to end, and large numbers of penitents came forward at the closing services. The best of order and attention prevailed, and not the least disturbance at any place. Congregations were large, and continued to increase to the close of each meeting. The membership of other denominations attended the meetings, and rendered valuable assistance with their songs and prayers, and enjoyed the services. In fact, I have never seen more union in feeling and sentiment among Christians. Bros. G. H. Galloway, J. C. Long, D. G. W. Ellis, and the local ministry rendered valuable service in assisting me."

Rev. W. H. Sanders, Sison charge, North Mississippi Conference, Oct. 12: "We feel that we have many reasons for which to praise God, for the way he has blessed us on this charge during this year. Our membership has been increased about 50 since this last Conference, and the church property nearly doubled, and the financial work of the charge fairly well up. We have completed and dedicated a beautiful church at the old site, Green Brier, which cost $1,200. On last Sunday Bro. J. S. Oakley, our pastor at Columbus, preached the dedicatory sermon at eleven o'clock A. M., and, after raising the amount necessary in cash and in subscription to pay the church out of debt, he dedicated it to the Lord. Bro. Oakley preached again at three o'clock P. M., and administered sacrament, and went the same evening to Greenwood and preached for Bro. Hargrove and his people. On Monday morning he and myself went back across the Yazoo river and spent the day, and that night he preached for us at Little Bena, and on Tuesday morning he left for Columbus on the nine o'clock train. You see, Mr. Editor, we fill his hands full when he comes to see us. We are always glad to have him with us, and he never comes but that we feel blessed for his having been with us. I am sorry to say that the people of this charge, and especially of the Sison Church, have lost one of the best officials and Sunday-school workers anywhere in the whole country, in the very recent death of Dr. J. M. Shivers."

Rev. Wm. B. Hines: "We have held three protracted meetings this year on Lake circuit, Mississippi Conference. The first at High Hill. The pastor was present on Sunday, and preached to a fine congregation, and at the close was sick, and went home, and did not return. On Monday, Bro. Ellis, of Hillsboro, came, and continued the meeting until Friday night. The brethren report a good meeting, the church refreshed, and they were much pleased with Bro. Ellis and his preaching. Our next meeting was at Lake, and began on Oct. 3, and continued until Friday night. Four days Bro. D. C. Rawls did the preaching, and did it well. The people were delighted with the preacher and his preaching, and much refreshed in their religion. Our third meeting was at Carr's Church. Bro. D. C. Rawls and myself repaired on Saturday, Oct. 8, to that. Only one service that day; two services on Sunday, and on Monday and Tuesday, and one on Wednesday. The people were highly pleased with Bro. Rawls as a preacher and a man. On Tuesday Rev. C. McDonald, our presiding elder, was present, and at eleven o'clock gave us a real good and opportune sermon, with which all were pleased. Then we held our fourth Quarterly Conference. Twenty-seven persons have joined our church this year by letter and otherwise; 20 children baptized. Wednesday, the last day of our meeting at Carr's Church, was a happy day. There were earnest shouts of praise went up to God, and the old, but beautiful, church-house seemed as happy as its members, for it sent down its echoing praise as really as their going up. Our finances are all woefully behind."

Rev. N. J. Roberts, P. C., Union circuit, Mississippi Conference, Oct. 14: "We have just closed a most profitable meeting at this place. Rev. Joe J. Jones, of Cartersville, Ga., was with us in great power. His preaching was clear and pointed, and accompanied with the power and demonstration of the Spirit; and, while he attacked sin in all its form, yet he showed the sinner he loved him and wished him saved. This meeting continued eleven days. Bro. Jones preaching, on an average, three sermons a day, to the largest crowds ever known to assemble in this place to hear the story of the cross. All business houses were closed for the morning services. God alone can tell, while eternity must prove the great good that has been and will be accomplished through and by this meeting. Twenty-five accessions to the various churches; 19 to the Methodist Church. Nearly every day we hear the good news that new family altars have been erected, and whole families have decided to live for God and the right. We have now in the Methodist Church, Tuesday night, a man's prayer meeting, composed of men who never prayed in public before. Still our number is on the increase. Bro. Jones left us on Wednesday morning for Hernando, Miss. He carried with him the love and respect of this entire people, and our prayers will follow him wherever he goes. All of our protracted meetings have been successful; many hearts have been blessed, and many homes made happy. Union circuit is on the upgrade, spiritually. Have a good, kind people to serve, and have received nothing but kindness and thoughtful care at their hands these three years I have served them. The preacher read out for Union circuit or station, at next Conference, may expect a pleasant year. The Lord be praised."

Rev. W. T. Browning, Lauderdale, Miss., Oct. 12: "We closed our meeting at this place on Saturday night. It was the last meeting on the charge for this season. On the third Sabbath of August we began a five-days' meeting at Bethel, which resulted in about 30 conversions and 8 accessions. The church was graciously revived, and both old and young blessed the name of our God for the outpouring of his Spirit upon us. On the fourth Sabbath in August we started a series of meetings at Brogan Chapel, which lasted four days. The church here had grown cold; but when God, through the mercies of his Son, sent down the baptism of fire upon the people, cold hearts were made very warm, and many were brought back to the Shepherd's peaceful fold. There were 3 accessions, 8 or 10 conversions, and 18 or 20 lukewarm members made to re-consecrate themselves to their Savior. At Soule Chapel we began a meeting on the second Sabbath in September, which continued four days. God was with us there in great power. Large numbers came to the altar for prayer, many were converted, and 11 joined the Methodist Church and 2 the Baptist. We began our meeting at this place on the first Sunday of this month, and continued it seven days. In our former meetings we had no ministerial help, except one excellent sermon preached at Brogan's Chapel by Bro. D. L. Barr, of the Presbyterian ministry; but Bro. Cogdell, of the North Mississippi Conference, came to our aid in the meeting at this place, and in his earnest, fervent way preached for us till Friday noon. His sermons were powerful, for God was with him, and they sent conviction to the hearts of his hearers. There were a number of conversions, 9 accessions, and a general revival throughout the church. Thus we have had a revival at each church on the work. The Christians generally throughout the charge have been revived, sinners convicted, and penitents converted. From the little barefoot boy to the old and gray-headed man, the people have been led to bless and thank our God through his holy child, Jesus, for his goodness and mercy to the children of men. 'Who is like unto our God? Praise ye the Lord! Bless the name of the Lord from this time forth and forevermore!'"

Rev. T. C. Wier, P. E., Columbus district: "As round and round we have gone, the presiding elder has encompassed his district for the third time. The preachers on circuits have made nine full rounds on their respective fields, while the station preachers, counting by weeks, have completed forty-five cycles—smaller, but not less laborious. Already we have entered upon the fourth round of the district, and the brethren are planning to 'round up' the Conference year. It has been a year of some privations, of solicitude and much toil, and yet a year of many blessings and of gladness to the laborers, our preachers accepting all things joyfully, for the Master's sake, looking upon their ministry as a labor of love. Columbus district is manned by the veteran guard of the North Mississippi Conference. Bros. Sage, Kendall, Newsom, K. A. Jones, A. P. Leach, T. L. Foster, K. M. Harrison, Oakley, Babb, Cogdell and Mitchell have all been preachers for a term sufficiently long to make them experienced and trained warriors—veterans. Mark you, brethren, I use the word 'veteran,' not 'venerable.' Mind the distinction. And some of these brethren, by the token of longer service, are twice veterans. From the reports that we get, there is some strong preaching and much good work done in the bounds of the district. Several younger men, capable and zealous—Bros. Randolph, Treadwell, Pittman and A. T. Buok—bring up the procession. We expect to present three young men at our next Conference session as applicants for admission into the traveling connection. Rev. T. J. Lowry, a supernummary, and a brother beloved, fell on sleep early in the Conference year. His last words were notes of victory. Rev. J. D. Newsom, in the midst of labors and growing favor with his people on Sparta circuit, was stricken down by slow, wasting sickness. After several months he was slowly regaining health and strength, but still unable to resume his work. Much spiritual benefit, however, he says, came to him by reason of this sore affliction. Great has been the cry of 'hard times, and worse a-coming.' Short crops, from excessive rains and destructive floods, have depressed the people generally, and yet we live about as well, and wear about as good clothes, as usual. To see one of our quarterly meeting dinners spread under the forest shade, one can imagine one still to be a land of plenty. Some of the preachers are well up with the collections ordered by the Conference, and the hope begins to revive that we shall make a fairly good financial showing. Spiritually, the churches in many places have been greatly quickened, and some of them have had seasons of revival of interest and power. 'The old-time religion' has been felt, the old songs have been sung with new songs added, and many have rejoiced in a Savior's love. We reckon about 300 accessions to the church, and many conversions. The meeting at Macon, conducted by Sam Jones and George Stewart, was one of marvelous power and success. The whole community, with few exceptions, was brought under its gracious influence. It was estimated that, perhaps, 100 persons, inside and without the church, were converted. Glorious things followed. The regular prayer meetings overflowed, and almost anyone, when called on, would lead in prayer; a hundred family altars sent up their daily incense of prayer and praise; a union meeting for prayer and testimony was largely attended, and many unused to service bore the cross with rejoicing. Religion, the great meeting, and its mighty results, were the fruitful and popular themes of conversation. Scarcely an oath could be heard on the streets, and whisky was driven out of its lurking-places. A stranger coming into the town and mingling with its people in their homes, in the churches and about the market-places, could see on every hand the high-water marks of the mighty flood. In the presence of such results following the work of 'the evangelist,' those who cry out against him, whether they be Bishops, or elders, or others, prevail nothing. The evangelist is solving the problem of reaching and saving the masses, while we are debating how it can be done. As illustrating the all-absorbing interest of the town in this great meeting, Bro. Rice Parker, of Macon, relates of a parrot in his possession, a loquacious and gifted bird after his kind, that he, too, caught on to some of the words, if not the spirit of the occasion, and was wont to cry out: 'I'm no Baptist; I'm a Methodist. Hurrah for Sam Jones!'"

GREAT REVIVAL AT WYNNE, ARK.

I have just returned from Wynne, Ark., where a great religious revival is in progress. Seventy-six have been added to our church, and the work still continues, with 50 penitents at the altar. The best element of the town is being reached. Wynne has had the reputation of being one of the toughest places in Northeast Arkansas, but the Lord can stir such places.

SHILOH CAMP MEETING.

The Shiloh Camp Meeting began on the evening of the seventh instant, and closed the following Thursday night. We may estimate the result, in part, by the following: 12 accessions, 14 children baptized. Besides, in the Quarterly Conference, Rev. J. H. Forman was recommended for admission on trial to the Annual Conference. The pastor married a couple in the immediate vicinity on Monday afternoon. The meeting was a good one. The attendance was larger than last year, as the prejudice against the wire fence and gate fee is giving way. The tabernacle has been enlarged and some new tents built the present year. It is now a large camp, with a good attendance from first to last. There were altogether nineteen preachers in attendance. There were two from outside of the district—A. B. Nicholson and A. D. Miller. There were twenty-five sermons preached, including the talk specially to the children, and all to the satisfaction of the hearers. I learned from one of the old members that the first Shiloh Church (log) was built here September, 1831. The camp ground was first built probably in 1832. The tabernacle and tents went down during the late war, and the present were built twelve years ago. Part of the citizens here are of German extraction, and originally from South Carolina. There has always been a high moral and religious tone among the people, and the Methodist Church is largely in the ascendency.

THE MASTER'S VOICE.

The waves were weary, and they went to sleep;
The winds were hushed,
The starlight faded
The hushed face of all the mighty deep.
The billows yonder are so dark and wild,
Wave strangely now—
A calm upon their brow,
Like that which rests upon a cradled child.
The sky was bright, and every single star,
With gleaming face,
Was in its place,
And looked upon the sea—so fair and far.
And all was still—still as a temple dim—
When low and faint,
As organ plaint,
Cried the last note of the vesper hymn.
A bark slept on the sea, and in the bark Slept Mary's Son—
The only One
Whose face is light where all else is dark.
His brow was heavenward turned, his face was fair;
He dreamed of me
On that still sea—
The stars he made gleamed through his hair,
And, lo! a moan moved o'er the mighty deep,
The sky grew dark,
The little bark
Felt all the waves awaking from their sleep.
The winds waited wild, and wilder billows beat;
The bark was tossed;
Shall all be lost?
But Mary's Son slept on, serene and sweet.
The tempest raged in all its mighty wrath,
The winds howled on,
All hope seemed gone,
And darker waves surged round the bark's lonely path.
The sleeper woke: He gazed upon the deep—
He whispered: "Peace!
Winds—wild waves cease!
Be still!" The tempest fell—the ocean fell asleep.
And, ah! when human hearts by storms are tossed;
When life's lone bark
Drifts through the dark,
And mid the wildest waves where all seems lost,
He now, as then, with words of power and peace,
Murmurs: "Stormy deep,
Be still—and sleep!"
And, lo! a great calm comes—the tempest's perils cease.

Bible Institutes and Summer Schools for Christian Workers.

Having given some attention to, and being convinced of the usefulness of such institutions, I was glad to see Dr. Carter's mention of Bible Institutes in the ADVOCATE, of Oct. 13. I trust his invitation will elicit such a discussion as shall ultimately in something tangible on this subject. Recently I heard a theological student—for whose excellent judgment I have great regard—say that he had derived more practical knowledge at one of these institutes than in a year of seminary work. However, their value has been demonstrated at Northfield, Lake Geneva, and other similar gatherings.

WHAT ARE THEY?

Some one may desire to have a more definite idea of the details. The work done is accomplished by lectures and conferences on the various departments of Bible study and Christian work, and these conducted by eminent specialists, or persons of large experience and success. The following outline may give some idea of what can be done in a few weeks: Let there be a department of Bible study, with daily lectures on methods of study, and outline studies of the various books and epistles. Also training classes for Christian workers, where methods of personal work in winning souls are discussed. Then lectures, and especially conferences on Sunday-school work, for superintendents and teachers to acquire new ideas and stimulate each other. There might be an occasional hour devoted to the song service and other interesting matters from time to time. The value of such a course to ministers, Sunday-school workers, and Christian workers in general, needs no emphasis.

HOW LONG SHOULD THE INSTITUTE CONTINUE?

I asked this question of a prominent worker who has conducted training classes at Northfield and Lake Geneva. He said that three weeks was as long as it was desirable or practicable. As a matter of fact, much could be done in two weeks.

WHERE SHOULD IT BE?

In answering this question, another factor should be considered. There must be provision for suitable recreation; all work will not do. A combination of the social and recreative privileges will enhance the value and charm of the more serious purposes of the gathering. Such places as the Seashore Camp Ground and the Ruston Chautauqua would be admirably adapted to the purpose. I see no reason why the managers of either property would be unfavorable to the use of their grounds for the purposes of the institute. However, this aspect of the question will have to be very thoroughly discussed.

TIME OF MEETING AND EXPENSE.

The month of August is the time for all such gatherings, it being the time of the greatest leisure generally. The question of expense will largely depend on the number of persons who attend. It will, of course, cost some to secure two or more lecturers a season; but it ought to be done at an expense of not more than two dollars, or less, per member. We believe this enterprise to be feasible, and extremely desirable. A thorough canvass of the matter will lead to mature views and wider information. This is evidently the object of the note published in the ADVOCATE, and we trust that all interested in the matter will give it their most careful consideration. As far as I am personally concerned, I shall consider it a privilege to do anything in my power to bring about a successful effort to give our earnest workers and Bible lovers such a means to gain wider usefulness and deeper knowledge in things spiritual.

FRANKLIN N. PARKER.

Whisky Traffic in Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Your timely utterance in the ADVOCATE, of the thirteenth instant, on the attitude of the Methodist Church in its teachings to the great question of temperance and abstinence, has prompted the following thoughts with reference to this great engine of evil in Mississippi. I most heartily endorse the statement in your "Brief," that "prohibition is not temperance." But I submit that temperance and abstinence is a thousand times more probable where prohibitory measures are enacted than they are where prohibition is ignored and abstinence insisted upon.

I understand you not to minify prohibition, but to magnify temperance. The subject of both temperance and prohibition has been agitated and discussed with commendable zeal, and the movement conducted with wise discretion by our most influential leaders throughout this State. The result has been an enlightened Christian sentiment against the saloon and a quickened conscience against the use of intoxicants.

"The Dram Shop Bill," passed by the Legislature in 1891, is a fair exponent of the sentiment, and as nearly approximates statutory prohibition as any regulation measure could. The restrictions in this bill are so numerous and binding that it is well-nigh impossible for any man who proposes to be law-abiding, to sell liquor. Scores of men who were in the business before the passage of the "bill" have gone out on the ground that they could not put themselves in the attitude of criminals before the public for money. They saw clearly that the design of the bill was to promote temperance and discourage "the sale." Others have abandoned the business because they felt that the State has, by legislative enactment, demanded a sum for privilege altogether disproportionate to the amount of money invested in stock, and they regard it more as a fine imposed than a privilege tax required. And there are others still who were unwilling to stem the current of enlightened, cultured Christian opposition, which they felt would put them at such a disadvantage, socially, that they were not willing to make the sacrifice of themselves and their families for gain (?). There is another class whose better judgment and sense of right has been a constant reproach to them since they entered the business. They have confessed the immorality and iniquity of the business, notwithstanding the humiliating fact that the State sells the privilege to commit the crime. Scruples they have had all the while, and have been awaiting the time when some tidal wave of influence would wash them out of the business.

I know men who are otherwise well disposed and friendly to every good cause who were in the vile business as a money consideration only, who were ashamed of their vocation, and who felt keenly their ostracism from society. I do not believe these men are in the business under the new "Dram Shop Bill." The business now, for the most part, is being run by a class of men who have no conscience on the subject to appeal to. They defy public sentiment; they defy Christian protestations, and every influence designed for the suppression of their nefarious business.

No sort of argument, however skillfully presented and sustained by fact, affects the saloonists of Mississippi. Compulsion is the only measure to be resorted to.

The Legislature has lodged the burden of responsibility in the matter of "sale" with the people, and it is for them to say whether drunkard-making shall be carried on in their midst. If the people do not avail themselves of the present advanced legislation on the subject, and rid themselves of this foul incubus, it will forever remain a smirch and a blot upon the intelligence and Christian enlightenment of the State. Already the glad tidings comes from several counties and a number of municipalities, where the sovereign people have seized this dragon by the throat, crushed him to the earth, and buried him out of sight without the possibility of a resurrection. Would to God that every county in the entire State would fall into line!

Nearly three-fourths of the counties are now under prohibition. This marvelous success has been achieved under circumstances not conducive to the prosperity of any other cause save that of solidarity in politics. It stands out before the people of Mississippi today upon its own merits unmixed with and untrammelled by party politics. It is upheld and strongly supported by men of every political preference. This state of things is largely attributable to the wisdom and heroic zeal of that apostle of temperance, the Rev. Bishop Chas. B. Galloway and his worthy coadjutors (not a few) who have stood by him in the thickest of the fight.

The day-dawn of prohibition for the entire State appears. May God abundantly bless every man, woman and child who has been instrumental in producing this great reform!

In Memoriam.

Rev. Louis Wallace Wood, son of W. W. Wood, and Euphemie Qnegies, was born in the city of New Orleans, La., on Saturday, the tenth day of March, 1856, and died in the village of Pascagoula, Jackson county, Miss., Aug. 26, 1892. He was thirty-seven years five months and sixteen days old.

Bro. Wood was reared in the city of Natchez, Miss., in the Roman Catholic communion, and was employed in the postoffice at the time of his remarkable conversion. He was introduced into the mysteries of personal, consoling salvation at the altar in the Wesley Chapel Methodist Church during the pastorate of Rev. Noel B. Harmon, of whom he delighted to speak as the instrument, under God, who led him to Christ. Connecting himself unhesitatingly with the church at that place, he was formally received Oct. 26, 1887. The conviction that God had made a specific work for him to perform seized him, and he straightway addressed himself to the work of ascertaining what his life-mission should be. After mature deliberation and much prayer he was moved by the Spirit to the conclusion that he must preach that blessed gospel to others which had so mightily delivered him. He argued that an expression of Christianity which had effectually overcome all his educational prejudices, and absolved his soul from conscious condemnation, and taken him, a physical wreck, from long-continued dissipation, and clothed him in his right mind, was the religion that the world ought to know; and he determined, by the grace of God, to spend the remainder of his days and years in telling others "what a dear Savior he had found." Accordingly he applied for recognition by the church, and was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference at Wesley Chapel, the Rev. W. L. C. Hunnifont, D. D., conducting the examination and signing the license in behalf of the Conference, January, 1888.

About this time he was married to Mrs. Mary W. Hobbs, who was a strong support to him in his brief, though eminently successful and laborious career as a Methodist itinerant preacher.

His first appointment, after he was admitted on trial at Vicksburg, was Covington circuit, La., Bishop Hargrove making the appointment. There were eight appointments on the "plan" received from his predecessor. Bro. Wood added five more, making thirteen. He preached three times every Sunday and several times during the week, riding on horseback about four thousand miles during that year.

Having been appointed to this field the next year, the presiding elder, Rev. I. W. Cooper, discovered that his health was giving way; sent him to Bay St. Louis, on the seashore, making the exchange with the Rev. H. Brown, in the interim of the Conference. At the close of this year, while he had given satisfaction, he felt, perhaps, some more experienced preacher might accomplish more at the Bay than he could, and he asked to be removed.

China Grove circuit was the charge assigned him by Bishop Galloway. In 1891. Here he did faithful work, and was beloved.

In 1892 there was a request lodged with the presiding elder by some of the officials of the Soranton charge, who knew him, to send them Bro. Wood. The appointment was made. Here is where the writer became intimately acquainted with him and his work.

He had just closed a protracted meeting in the village of Pascagoula, where it was my privilege to be with him for one service only.

Bro. Wood preached three times on Sunday before he died, and every night, save one, up to Wednesday night.

He passed a creditable examination on the first, second and third year's course of study, and was addressing himself studiously to the accomplishment of the course of the fourth year.

He said to me: "My dear brother, you have no idea what exquisite pleasure I have, in anticipation of finishing my course of study and receiving 'elder's orders' in the town of my boy-hood, and where 'I first saw the light,' and felt the powers of the world to come."

The honors he has received transcended by far any that the Mississippi Conference can give.

To his saddened, chastened wife, the brethren of the Mississippi Conference extend heartfelt condolence.

Leaf River Camp Meeting.

This encampment is located in Jones county, Miss., one and a half miles from Tusculum station, on the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad. Leaf river, a beautiful stream, skirts the western border of the camp, while a large, bold stream of cold, clear spring water affords an abundant water supply. The tabernacle shed, 40x75—with seating capacity for 500 persons—is enclosed on all sides by board tents, ample room being allowed for streets and walks. A room for preachers and choir is found at the west end of the tabernacle shed. A commodious sleeping-tent, also hotel, were at the service of transient visitors. It had been advertised that Rev. Joe Jones would be the main attraction, and the meetings would continue some eight days. Great things were expected.

Bro. Jones preached twice Saturday and Sunday, and three times Monday. Some 1,500 persons were on the grounds Sunday. His preaching was peculiar to himself, but, for some cause, failed to impress the people favorably. He formed a poor opinion of the financial consecration of his Sunday audience, as the collection proved quite small. Monday he said he "had received a telegram calling him to the bedside of a sick child," and that night he left. While we had such men as A. F. Watkins, Jas. S. Parker, M. M. Moore, W. G. Backus, R. A. Breland and B. F. Rawls present, yet Bro. Jones' sudden departure cast a dark shadow over the future prospects of the meeting. "Jones gone, what was to be done?" The people had been looking to him, and not to the Lord.

Some of the ministers concluded it was best for them to depart also. Well, things did look unpromising; but, in a little while, some of our little "pliny-woods" preachers, that "don't know how to preach," concluded to try the flint-lock muskets of our fathers' day, and see if they would not bring down game when properly loaded and correctly aimed. All day Tuesday the battle waged hot, and we had hope of success. Wednesday the tenters became restless; some moving off. At eleven A. M. Bro. Breland, besides the pastor, Rev. G. R. Ellis, and this scribe—was the only effective itinerant left. It fell to his lot to preach three sermons that day, and—thank God! they were attended with motion from on high. The night service about swept the field of all opposition. From sixty to one hundred penitents crowded around the altar, and before the service closed about thirty professed conversion and eight united with the church. Every body seemed restored to the joys of God's salvation, and gave glory to God.

Next year the trustees will rely upon the regulars, with their flint-lock guns, and the power of the Holy Ghost. The visible results net eighteen accessions and some fifty conversions, and the gospel preached to hundreds that never heard it from the lips of Methodist preachers before. One "blind tiger" had his den near by, but was captured, put in irons and properly cared for. The moral backbone of Christian people was wonderfully strengthened. After all, the meeting closed with flying colors and shouts of victory.

Great credit is due to Rev. G. R. Ellis for his untiring efforts to make this camp ground a powerful agency in redeeming this section from the power of Satan unto God.

Marked improvements were made this year upon the campus of 1891. God grant that the meeting for 1893 may be a success from beginning to end!

R. B. DOWNER.

The Old-Time Singing.

The singing of hymns has always been a prominent feature in Methodism—indeed, the rapid growth of the Methodist revival was largely attributable to the fervor and vigor of its song. When that revival commenced, congregational singing was almost unknown. The Psalms were drawn out by the clerk, who was supported by a few choristers, the congregation, as a rule, remaining seated, and making little, if any, attempt to join in the service. Thus it was only natural that the hearty singing introduced by the Wesleys should, by contrast, prove a great attraction to the people. Wesley himself attached great importance to the singing of hymns; and although many of his opinions on music were peculiar, and would fall to find acceptance now, he was greatly in advance of the service of praise of his own times. In the preface to his Sacred Harmony he gives instructions as to how the hymns should be sung, and certainly some of his directions might be observed with advantage at the present time. Such advice, for example, as: "Sing modestly; do not bawl so as to be heard above, or distinct from, the rest of the congregation. Sing in time . . . take care that you sing not too low. This drawing way naturally steals on all who are lazy, and is altogether unnecessary in some of our churches."

In those days the lines of each verse were read out in couplets, the last couplet being repeated; and, as is well known to some of our older readers, this custom was maintained until quite recently—indeed, it still lingers in a few distant country places. The tunes, too, were pitched much higher than at present, the women rejoicing in a high G. Grace notes in tunes were also introduced, and when the melody moved a third, the intervening note was invariably sung; and, strange though it may seem, this custom likewise lingers, and may be detected in some of our older members, who have never shaken off the training of their youth. As a taste for something more elaborate developed, the old fugue tunes were introduced. These largely originated from the influence of Handel's choruses, and although, from a musical standpoint, they were unsatisfactory, they were sung with a vigor and fervor unknown to us of the present time. To-day, in Lancashire, some of these tunes are still occasionally brought into regulation, probably as a reminiscence of old times; but no modern congregation can impart the zeal and energy to them which formerly they obtained—indeed, the effect now is seldom satisfactory.

Before the general introduction of organs into the chapels the accompaniments were frequently played by a small band consisting of some of the following instruments: clarinet, flute, violin, double bass, bassoon and serpent. They were generally played by the working men of the village, and these players were not a little proud of their position. It is, no doubt, largely owing to the substitution of organs that there is at the present time such a scarcity of amateur players on wind instruments; and there is nothing re-arouses the passion for psalmody in the older of our churchgoers than the recalling of these "good old times," when the people sang with heart and voice. In those days the people exerted themselves more than they do to-day. No doubt this is in part accounted for on the ground that the singing of hymns was the only form of musical enjoyment available in country places. The opportunities of bearing the best singers and orchestras were only within the reach of the wealthy classes. The poorer people were entirely dependent upon themselves for any musical recreation. The consequence was, they took a keen interest in the musical performance in their own chapels, meeting together to comfort and entertain one another with psalms and hymns, making melody in their hearts unto God. The tendency now-a-days is to pay some one to do this for us. We have hardly the energy to seek our own spiritual recreation. We employ others to conduct the musical service in our churches and chapels. We pay for large organs, usually twice the necessary size for anything required of them; we establish a choir, either paid or voluntary, and then we think we have done all that is required of us. It does not occur to us that it is as much our duty to sing, and to sing well, in the congregation, as it is for those whom we have engaged, or whom we sanction, in the choir. Yet, verily, it is, every bit so. The excuse that the modern hymn tunes are more difficult will not avail. No doubt the harmonies are not so simple as in the old times. But the facilities for learning music and the low price of instruments and books, render ignorance of musical notation inexcusable. Formerly those wishing to learn what was termed "the gamut" often walked miles after their day's work in order to obtain instruction, and it was no uncommon occurrence for the musical folk of those days to tramp the lanes and moors to distant places of meeting for practice. It is, then, to be wondered at that they cherished what simple music they could obtain, and went into the performance of it with heartiness and enthusiasm, determined to make the most of it.

In bringing this first paper to a close we see that, whatever else may account for the decline of congregational singing, it is not the introduction of modern music. Indeed, we venture to assert it may rather be traced to the apathy and indifference of our members, and to the lack of that zeal and fervor which distinguished the earlier years of the Methodist movement.—Free Methodist.

A Day of Fasting and Prayer.

"The Friday before Thanksgiving Day has been chosen as a day for fasting and prayer by the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, and all the members are earnestly requested to keep it in true humility before God. All who desire greater consecration and more earnest work for Christ are asked to unite with us in prayer on the day appointed."

The Gospel Preached at Antioch.

Acts xi, 19-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"A great number believed and turned unto the Lord." (Verse 21.)

Antioch in Syria was a magnificent city in the days of the apostles. Founded by one of the generals of Alexander the Great, it was Greek in type, both with respect of its architecture and its modes of thought and life. Its position on the Orontes river kept it in constant communication with Southern Europe, and made it the most favorable point for the dissemination of gospel truth, although Christianity had once been established there. Our lesson tells of the founding of the church at Antioch, and its practical expression of brotherly love for the Christians in Judea.

Ver. 19. The persecution of Christians by Saul and his confederates was used by the Lord for the advancement of his kingdom. It scattered the truth abroad. The revival in Samaria grew out of it, and another revival, far-reaching in its influence, was brought about in the same way. Some of the scattered ones went northward, keeping near the coast of the Mediterranean.

Just beyond Carmel came Phenice, a narrow strip of country about one hundred and twenty miles long, lying between the sea and the mountains. Here the disciples preached to the Jews. Some fifty miles westward in the island of Cyprus; here, also, the gospel was proclaimed, still to the Jews only. At Antioch also was the Word spoken, still, so far as the majority of the disciples were concerned, "to the Jews only."

Ver. 20, 21. These "men of Cyprus and Cyrene" were, of course, Jews, but association with Gentiles had somewhat lessened their prejudices and broadened their sympathies. Cyrene was on the north coast of Africa, west of the mouth of the Nile. These men ventured, moved by the Spirit, to preach to Greek as well as Jew. God witnessed with them, and a great number believed; a most wonderful beginning for the church outside the Holy Land, this preaching of the gospel to the Greeks by untrained disciples feeling from persecution.

Ver. 22. Barnabas was a man of Cyprus. He was a broad-minded, large-hearted man, sympathetic and discerning—just the man to be sent by the mother church on a tour of observation and organization.

Ver. 23, 24. Barnabas was satisfied that the work was genuine. "The grace of God" was manifest. Doubtless he saw, also, some things that called for counsel; but, being "a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost," he did not hunt for flaws and weak places in the work, but "was glad." He did not stop to carp and find fault; he threw himself into the work at once, not to correct "irregularities," but to exhort. Force was, to him, more than form; form would be taken later, as occasion might suggest.

Ver. 25. Some have thought that Barnabas had known Saul in early life, before the conversion of either. The nearness of Cyprus to Tarsus, together with the reputation of the latter as an educational center, make this probable; but we do not know. We first see them together at Jerusalem, Barnabas introducing Saul to the apostles and relating to them the story of his conversion and of his ministry at Damascus. This suggests former acquaintance.

Saul had gone to Tarsus because his life was threatened at Jerusalem, and because Christ had chosen him as the missionary to the Gentiles.

Barnabas recognized the need of such a man at Antioch. Saul's learning, his energy, his enthusiasm, his thorough acquaintance with Greek thought and manners, all joined in fitting him for the work. Barnabas knew also, no doubt, of Saul's calling to the work among the Gentiles.

Ver. 26. It is probable that the people of Antioch—not the Jews, but the disciples themselves—first used the term "Christian" as a reproach. Ver. 27, 28. We are told that "the reign of Claudius, from bad harvests or other causes, was a period of general distress and scarcity over the whole world. In the fourth year of his reign . . . that the price of food was so severe that the price of food was enormous, and great numbers perished." (O. and H. Life and Epistles of St. Paul.) Agabus, moved by the Holy Spirit, foretold the famine, and so made it possible for the church at Antioch to aid the Judean Christians.

Ver. 29, 30. "Every man" will refer to reference to how much or how little he might own. "According to his ability"—the only righteousness required. This means each as much as he could, not as little. "Determined to send relief"—made up his own mind "purposed in his heart," did it freely, "not grudgingly." This was a "free will offering," not in the nature of a assessment. "God loveth a cheerful giver." St. Paul quotes our Savior as saying, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." This famine in Judea, calling forth the gift from the disciples at Antioch, occasioned an expression of true brotherly kindness between Jewish and Gentile Christians, and helped to broaden both.

HOME LIFE.

HOME.

Home's not merely four square walls
 Though with pictures hung and gilded;
 Home is where affection calls—
 Filled with shrines the heart has builded.
 Home! Go watch the faithful dove Sailing 'neath the heaven above us;
 Home is where there's one to love!
 Home is where there's one to love us.

Home's not merely roof and room—
 It needs something to endear it;
 Home is where the heart can bloom,
 Where there's some kind lip to cheer it!
 What's home with none to meet,
 None to welcome, none to greet us?
 Home is sweet, and only sweet,
 Where there's one who loves to meet us.

Never Destroy Religious Literature.

BY A. V. C.

Never destroy religious literature. I have noticed a number of accounts lately of conversions which could have traced directly to the chance finding of some abandoned religious paper. One was blown to a woman's feet while she was hanging out her washing. Another was found lying in a horsehoe track by a man. Both were converted. These are only examples of what is happening daily.

"God says," "My word shall not return unto me void." Our various Advocates, The Herald, etc., are full of his Word. It is hardly possible that you can save all your religious papers and use them wisely for one year without at least one soul being saved or blessed thereby. You will never know the result in this world. But you will meet those thus saved on the other side. Is it not worth your effort?

You may live in a sea-coast town; there are hundreds of sailors who need the Word. Send it or take it aboard their vessels. Perhaps you live near some railroad station; place your papers in some neat little box and label it "Free reading," or "Take one." Possibly you know of some one either too poor or too indifferent to purchase this "bread of life," supply them with yours when read. If you have more papers than you can use to the best advantage, send to some local society, Salvation Army captain, or minister; or to some league in a neighboring town. It may be the beginning of the work in that community. Nearly all barbers, and even some saloon keepers, will allow you to put your papers in their rooms. Send them to hospitals, reform schools, and prisons. Put them up in hotels, postoffices, and public libraries. Drop them in street cars and other public places. Pray God to bless your efforts, and "while you are yet speaking he will answer."

You may think you can not speak, sing, pray, or lead a meeting in public, but you can do this much surely if you are in earnest. Exhort your friends to join you in this work.—Epworth Herald.

The Things That Are Unseen.

There is a feeling abroad that we can not touch the invisible and eternal until we get out of this world. When death has closed our eyes to the material, then we shall behold the spiritual. This is a dangerous error. The unseen and eternal are all about us. We face them every moment. We touch them now. They are in the world to be grasped and realized by the soul. We move in the midst of two empires, the seen and the unseen, and we are foolish if we separate our lives from either.

The things we can know are not merely the things we can see. Agnosticism about invisible things is not the true creed of man. Our life does not lie simply in the realm of the five senses. The visible world is not the reality. It is a symbol of another which is real. We can not ask any questions about the world we see without going back to the world we do not see for an explanation. The material world is rooted in the immaterial world. The noblest forces in all the universe are the unseen forces. It is a vain thought that the things which we can touch and handle are more real than those which are beyond our reach; that the electric wires are more real than the messages that flash through them; that the physical structure of the planet is more real than the life forces which work within it. So the mighty forces with which we have to do are the forces which are at present out of sight.

If this is true, we should not view the supernatural as something vague and indefinite. We should not feel that when the preacher and teacher urge spiritual things they are dealing with matters of which they have no knowledge. We should understand that in the realm of the unseen we must find our truest life of life. We live to-day for to-morrow. Its hopes and anticipations fill our hearts. God's discipline is to make us ready for the larger life beyond, for the joys which shall never end. Victory over self! Unyielding faith in God! Buoyant hope! Superlative success in every Christ-like undertaking! These are given to the Christian who firmly and courageously lays hold upon the unseen arm of God. "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."—Epworth Herald.

Will It Pay?

Yes, it always pays to be polite. Politeness does not cost much, but in the long run it always brings its own reward. Here is one of the many incidents told in illustration of this: of a clerk who is now reaping a rich harvest from a little kindness and politeness. For several years a grizzled, ill-tempered old man had been in the habit of worrying the clerks in the postoffice of Tacoma, Washington, about his mail. He is a farmer living some distance out of the city, and whether from his peculiar calligraphy and that of his correspondents, or from some other cause, there was constantly recurring trouble about his letters. His entrance into the postoffice came to be regarded at last as the precursor of an unpleasant wrangle. The old farmer became decidedly unpopular with the clerks. About a year ago a new clerk was appointed, and she soon had an interview with the old farmer. She took a great deal of trouble in tracing a letter for him, and was at some pains to explain the irregularity to him. For the first time the old man went away satisfied. From that time forward he always asked for the clerk when he made his weekly visit to the postoffice, and would suffer no other clerk to attend to him. He made several attempts to reward her for her trouble, but his presents were always declined. A week or two ago, however, he placed a package in her hands with the remark that it was something she could not return. She found that it was a deed of five acres of land, worth $120 an acre. The old man said that she was the only person who had ever spoken a kind word to him. If that be true, he must have had a dreary life. He is evidently capable of appreciating kindness, though his manner may have led people to suppose that it would be wasted upon him.—Exchange.

"CULTIVATE HAPPINESS."

BY PAUL H. HAYNE.

Is happiness a plant of mortal birth,
 Which, shrewdly cultured, grows in gracious earth?
 Rather a heavenly blossom, or bright dew,
 Slipped from the bosom of the cloudless blue,
 On some fair morning, to the soul's surprise,
 Fresh with the fragrance born in Paradise.

Enthusiasm.

BY REV. A. C. DIXON.

We are in a fast age. We travel by steam, talk by electricity; everybody and everything rushes. We must quicken our step to keep up. But we are not careful to keep up with the spirit of the age; we prefer the spirit of the Bible. When the spirit of the age is in harmony with that spirit we rejoice; when it is in conflict, we prefer to oppose the spirit of the age. There is such a thing as making progress by standing still. Two sail vessels were in a race along the coast. One of them noticed that, though the wind seemed to be carrying them rapidly along, the current was really stronger than the wind, and was driving them backward. The captain who cast anchor won the race. He made progress by standing still, and amid the currents of sin and infidelity that surge about us we need to cast anchor in the truth of God. But such faithful conservatism need not prevent our being enthusiastic—"tools for Christ's sake," if need be.

While John Vassar was a liquor seller, nobody thought he was a fanatic in pressing his business, but when he became a Christian, and his one thought was to win men to Christ, they pronounced him a fool. The politician who talks nothing but politics, the lawyer whose mind is absorbed by law, the merchant who thinks of little besides merchandise, is commended by the world; but let a Christian have only one thought, and that for Christ, and make that prominent, he is put down as a fanatic. May God fill our churches with just such fanatical men, men who are not ashamed to carry their hope and the promise on which it is based into any circle, and contend for the faith once for all delivered to the saints, among any company!

A life devoted to doing business for God is the great power under heaven. I emphasize the word "power." We hear much of influence. It is not a New Testament word, and is used but once in the Old Testament, where "the sweet influences of the Pleiades" are mentioned. John had to go a long way from home to bring it in, and it was cold before he got there. It is an old word. "Power" throbs with the sympathy, the love, the energy of God's heart and hand. What we need is to be "endued with power." Influence, the manward side of us, should be consecrated to doing good; but more important than influence is "power," the Godward side. We need, first of all, to be in right relation with God, and then our influence will take care of itself. It has occurred to you, I am sure, that Jesus Christ was not a man of influence. He made himself of "no reputation," but the power of God was upon him. The early disciples did not have enough influence to keep out of jail, but they had power to shake the jail doors open and walk out. Let us not despise the influence of money, mind, position, numbers; but all these together are not sufficient for the needs of the church. The one great need is power from God. Link with that your money, your personality, and life will be a success for both worlds.—Exchange.

The Joyous Life.

The life of a believer is a cheerful, joyous life. There may be seasons when nervous affections, extraordinary trials, or unusually severe temptations will temporarily depress him, but he can not be habitually gloomy or sad. Wherever sadness does reign over a Christian's life, there must be some defect either in his creed or in his loyalty to Christ.

There is so much in the truth which is the root of faith to begot gladness; such an exhibition of God's infinite love to man in the incarnation of Christ; such rich consolation from the indwelling Comforter; such causes for gratitude in the promises of his daily life; such visions of heavenly glory; that one who really embraces God by faith can scarcely prevent his bubbling over with joy. Paul gave the key-note of true Christian life when he said to the church at Philippi: "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, rejoice." And Luther echoed this sweetest bird note when he said to the first-born sons of the Reformation:

"Dear Christian people, all rejoice,
 Each soul with joy upspringing;
 Four forth one song with mighty voice,
 With love and gladness singing.
 Give thanks to God, our Lord above,
 Thanks for his miracle of love!
 Dearly he hath redeemed us."
 —Daniel Wits, D. D.

The Charm of Good Manners.

No one who has any appreciation of grace and beauty in nature or in art can fail to recognize the charm of fine manners in an individual. We rejoice in them as we do in a lovely sunset view, or a beautiful piece of architecture, or a fascinating poem, for their own sake and for what they express; but even beyond this they have another attraction in the magnetic power they exert upon all beholders. In setting them at ease, in sweeping away shyness, awkwardness and restraint, and in stimulating them to the expression of what ever is best worth exhibiting within them. It is undoubtedly true that the presence of fine manners, whether it be in the home or the social circle, in the workshop or the counting-room, in the visit of charity or the halls of legislation, has an immediate effect in reproducing in all a diffusion of happiness, in developing the faculties, and in eliciting the best that is in every body.—Selected.

THE EVER-LIVING BOOK.—We outgrow some of our books. A growing man, enlarging his outlook and his knowledge, leaves some of his books behind him. They have served him well for the time; have ministered to his needs; furnished him knowledge and inspiration and comfort for many exigencies. But the man who grows will find that many books have served their purpose, have accomplished their mission for his soul. These books he may cast aside, give away, or send to the second-hand book store. But there are other books that never wear out. They have in them a fullness of meaning, a tonic power, an inspiring influence, which make them a vital force for all time. At the head of books of this sort is the Bible, which has a stimulating, vivifying, fruitfulness power possessed by no other volume. The student who wants to keep his soul tingling with new life every day, will make the Scriptures his daily study.—Central Christian Advocate.

RESURE HOW YOU BEGIN!

When once begun
 The work's half done,
 So says the proverb old;
 But even here
 You'll see I clear
 The truth is not half told;
 For wisdom says
 There are two ways,
 One loses and one wins.
 You'll find, young friends,
 That all depends Upon how one begins.

If wrong begun,
 And work half done,
 So much the worse for you;
 It right—go on Until you've won
 The goal you had in view.
 In life you gaze
 Upon the ways
 Of virtue and of sin;
 Be led by truth,
 And in your youth
 Be sure how you begin.

MR. EDITOR: I have often thought of writing to your paper (which has been in our family for years and years), but have not; so now I will. I am a little girl fourteen years old. I am not so very little now, but still consider myself so, as I am the youngest in the family. I have four brothers and two sisters. My oldest brother, George, is a merchant in Hattiesburg. He is also superintendent of the Sunday-school there. My next is brother Henry, who is teaching on that far-off island, Japan. We do not feel uneasy about him, for we know God is there as well as here. My brother Coke is next. He is a merchant in Pachuca. My sisters, Mary and Lula, are going to the E. M. F. College, in Meridian. I am very proud of my mother, brothers and sisters. God took my papa, who was a minister in this Conference, seven years ago. Bro. Chambers is our pastor. We have just been blessed with a splendid protracted meeting. Bro. Clarke, of Meridian, assisted Bro. Chambers. We have a good Sunday-school and day-school. Mr. T. J. Davis is our superintendent. Mrs. Estes is my teacher. She is such a good, sweet woman. I will close, as this is my first letter to you. Your little friend,
 MATTIE HAWKINS,
 Enterprise, Miss.

By Right of Conquest.

Professor Drummond in his latest booklet has told a story which perfectly illustrates a truth which all Uncle William's nephews will do well to bear in mind. It is an old story, but it can not be better told than in the professor's own words:

"Have you ever heard of the castle that was taken with a single gun? It stood on the Rhine, and its walls were yards thick, and the old knight who lived in it laughed when he saw the enemy come with only a single cannon. But they planted the cannon on a little hill and all day long they loaded and fired, and loaded and fired without moving the muzzle an inch. Every shot struck the same spot on the wall, but the first day passed and they had scarcely scratched the stone. So the old knight drank up his out of wine and went to his bed in peace. Day after day the more they fired the louder the knight laughed, and the more wine he drank, and the sadder he slept. At the end of a week one stone was in splinters, in a month the one behind it was battered to powder; in ten months a breach was made wide enough for the enemy to enter and capture the castle."

Now for the moral of the incident. The prizes of life are not left lying ready to the hand of the first chance-comer; they are strongly secured. Those treasures which fly open at the cry of some magical "Open, Sesame!" will generally yield ill-gotten gains. The true joy of reward is in the labor which wins it, and only he who assails the gates of his desire with dauntless perseverance can know the fullness of attainment, for he alone enters upon his possessions "by right of conquest." Boys, remember this!

Counting the Stars.

I was walking along one Winter's night, hurrying towards home, with my little maiden at my side. Said she:

"Father, I am going to count the stars."

"Very well," I said, "go on."

By and by I heard her counting—"Two hundred and twenty-two, two hundred and twenty-four, two hundred and twenty-five. O, dear," she said, "I had no idea there were so many!"

Ah, dear friends, I sometimes say in my soul: "Now, Master, I am going to count thy benefits."

Soon my heart sighs, not with sorrow, but burdened with such goodness; and I say to myself, "I had no idea that there were so many!"—Mark Guy Pearse.

George W. Childs, editor of the Philadelphia Ledger, a journalist who does not print a Sunday edition of his paper, says: "Would you learn the lesson of success? Here it is in three words. Would you climb the ladder? It has just three rungs: industry, temperance, frugality. Besides these, I have had during my business career the following mottoes: 'Be true'; 'Be kind'; 'Keep out of debt.' 'Do the best and leave the rest.' What can't be cured must be endured; 'The perfect man is one who has a clear commission, an honest purpose, a bright mind, and a healthy body.' I can't bring too great stress on the matter of strict temperance. Drinking wine, beer, or opium is a needless and dangerous habit. It does no good, and it is persisted in if it is almost sure to lead to destruction and death. You should have courage enough to say no if you are asked to drink. There is no safety in moderate drinking. The man who touches alcoholic drink at all is in danger. As to sociability, you should try to make companions of the best people that you can become acquainted with. In order to do this you must have something in yourself that may be a return to them for what they give you. A man is known by the company he keeps. I can not snuff up my advice to young people better than to say the greatest pleasure in life comes from doing good to others. Do good constantly, patiently, and wisely, and you will never have cause to say that life was not worth living."

School-boy:—"Mama, I wish you'd let the hired girl put up my lunch instead of doing it yourself!"
 Mama:—"It's no trouble, my dear."
 School-boy:—"I know." Mama:—"Then why do you want her to do it?"
 School-boy:—"Cause she's got a better appetite than you have, and she puts more in."—Good News.

Allice's grandpapa had set her bentam hen on eleven hundred white eggs, and Allice was greatly interested in watching the result. One day she ran into the house, calling excitedly: "Mama, mama, two chickens have bloomed!"

The Man Destined to Long Life.

Here is a portrait, by Anseland, of a man destined to long life. He has a proper and well-proportioned stature, without, however, being too tall. He is rather of the middle size, and somewhat thick set. His complexion is not too florid. At any rate, too much ruddiness in youth is seldom a sign of longevity. His hair approaches rather to the fair than to the black; his skin is strong, but not rough. His head is not too big; he has large veins at the extremities, and his shoulders are rather round than flat. His neck is not too long; his abdomen does not project; and his hands are large, but not too deeply oiled. His foot is rather thick than long; and his legs are firm and round. He has also a broad-arched chest, and round. He has a complete harmony in all his parts. His senses are good, but not too delicate; his pulse is slow and regular. His digestion is excellent, his appetite good, and his digestion easy. The joys of the table are to him of importance; they tune his mind to serenity, and his soul partakes in the pleasure which they communicate. He does not eat merely for the sake of eating; but each meal is an hour of daily festivity, a kind of delight, attended with this advantage with regard to others, and it does not make him poorer, but richer. He eats slowly, and has not too much thirst. Too great thirst is always a sign of rapid self-consumption. In general, he is serene, loquacious, active, susceptible of joy, love and hope, but insensible to the impressions of hatred, anger and aversion. His passions never become too violent or destructive. If he ever gives way to anger he experiences rather a useful glow of warmth, an artificial and gentle fever, without an overflowing of the bile. He is fond also of enjoyment, particularly calm meditation and agreeable speculation; is an optimist, a friend to nature and domestic felicity, and has no thirst after honor or riches; and banishes all thoughts of to-morrow.—Exchange.

The Beginning of Our Understanding of Storms.

In the year 1821 a severe storm prevailed along the Eastern coast, which for many years was known as the "great September gale." It held that title until September, 1869, when another and more remarkable one occurred, which rather disturbed its claim to the honor. It was a little time after this first storm that Redfield, while making a journey in Massachusetts, was struck by a somewhat curious fact. He noticed that in Massachusetts the trees prostrated by the wind all lay with their heads to the southeast, showing that the gale there was from the northwest; but in Connecticut the trees blown down in the same storm lay head to the northwest, showing that the gale had been a southeast one. He ascertained, moreover, that when the wind was blowing southeast in Middletown, his home, it was northwest at a place not seventy miles from there. It was then that the idea flashed across his mind that the gale was a progressive whirlwind. That was a great thought. It was such a flash of perception as came to Newton when he connected the falling apple with the planets in space. It was such an insight into the meaning of a fact as James Watt had when he saw the possibilities of the force that was rattling the lid of the kettle on his mother's fire. The development of that idea was destined one day to put Redfield in the ranks of the great scientific thinkers of his day. He made this storm the basis of his investigations, following his researches into its movements by a careful collection of facts in relation to others like it. For ten years he studied, and examined and compared his facts, before he published his theory of storms.—Popular Science Monthly.

ABOUT SPONGES.—Sponges do not look like subjects of interest, yet as early as three centuries before the Christian era, Aristotle, the great philosopher of Athens, made a study of them. He was unable to decide whether they were animal or vegetable, and for 2,000 years this was considered doubtful. They are generally conceded now to be endowed with animal life of the lowest order while they are living in the water, their native element.

These sponge fisheries of the Aegean are thought to be conducted just in the same manner they were when Aristotle lived. The sponge divers go out in small fleets. Each man has a bag or net suspended around his neck by a hoop, in which to place the sponges. They put a sponge dipped in oil in their mouths, and some of them, after practice, can remain under water longer than an hour. The gelatinous matter is stamped out by the divers, and then dried in the sun and are ready for sale.

The principal sponge markets of the world are Rhodes, Smyrna, Naxos. Fifty-six species have been enumerated, ten or eleven of which are found in the British Isles. Some of them are of bright orange color when taken out of the water, and if rubbed on the hand will raise blisters. In the warm seas sponges hang in gorgeous masses from caverns, some a brilliant scarlet, others bright yellow, black, brown, green and purple; the latter will stain a beautiful color, which can not be removed by several washings.—Philadelphia Times.

THE INCREASED LONGEVITY OF THE PRESENT GENERATION.—The statistics of life insurance companies show that in the last twenty-five years the average of man's life has increased five per cent, or two whole years, from 41.9 years to 46.9 years. Woman's life average has improved even more than this, from 41.9 to 45.8 years, or more than eight per cent. Out of every one thousand males born at the present day twenty-four more will attain the age of thirty-five than used to be the case prior to 1870; the combined life of every one thousand persons born at the present day is two thousand seven hundred and eighty years longer than it was twenty-five years ago. The average human life is now being added to at the rate of nearly ten years each century.—Exchange.

The caves of the world are divided by geologists into five principal classes, viz: 1. The caverns excavated in limestone rock by subterranean streams. 2. The chambers and chambers hollowed out by the ascending waters of hot springs. 3. The sea caves and grottoes, worn by the battering of the waves against soft spots in shore cliffs. 4. The cavities formed beneath streams of lava. 5. The rifts in the rocks which have been left by the mountain-building forces.

THE LITTLE BUSY LEE.—Bless must, in order to collect a pound of clover honey, deprive 62,000 clover blossoms of their nectar. To do this the bee of 3,750,000 bees; or, in other words, to collect his pound of honey one bee must make 3,750,000 trips from and to the hive. As bees are known to fly for miles in quest of suitable fields of operation, it is clear that a single ounce of honey represents millions of miles of travel.—St. Louis Republic.

Do you know that you can buy a chimney to fit your lamp that will last till some accident happens to it?

Do you know that Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass" is that chimney?

You can have it—your dealer will get it—if you insist on it. He may tell you it costs him three times as much as some others. That is true. He may say they are just as good. Don't you believe it—they may be better for him; he may like the breaking.

SHEKMAN-F. B. SHEKMAN was born in the city of New Orleans, April 29, 1850, and died at his home in Brookhaven, Miss., Oct. 7, 1892. At the age of sixteen he was called from school to the home and care of his widowed mother and two half brothers, to whom he unconsciously devoted his time and talents, until they were comfortably provided for. On Nov. 2, 1876, he was married to Miss Hattie M. Martin, who with five children now mourn the loss of the affectionate husband and loving father.

Beginning life as a clerk, he closed it at the head of a prosperous mercantile and banking firm. Yet his success was not attained by over-reaching, nor by oppressing the poor. A young man who had been several years in his employ said to me the day after his death: "A good man is gone, and one that will be missed more and more as the days go by. When I began to work for him he called me to the scales and said, 'Now watch me weigh myself, to see how the beam goes up and gives me full weight.' That is the way this firm weighs every pound weighed that is sold from this house." From the law of his Lord he had learned that "a just weight and balance are the Lord's."

He joined the church under the ministry of the now sainted J. T. Heard; and while he was a perfect gentleman—too high-toned to be otherwise—devoted to the church, and was all that his family could wish as husband and father, he did not experience that change of his spiritual nature our Lord declared necessary until during his last illness. It was interesting and beautiful to see his strong and well-trained mind moving from point to point until the surrender of self was complete and the acceptance of Christ was perfect. And from that time to the close of life his devotion to Christ and to his Christian duties was strong and beautiful. Every night his family gathered about his bed, and he prayed earnestly for them. He often told me how he was going to live if he got well, and that he would devote his life as constantly to the service of God as he had to business. A little while before he died he called for his wife and children, and when his wife said, "We are all here but little Freddie"—the babe that died a few months ago—he said, "Yes, and I see him, and he is so changed." The last words he said to me were, "God loves me and I love God."

J. M. WHEAT.

MUMFORD—Miss Edna Mumford, daughter of Dr. J. H. and Mrs. Georgia Mumford, of Grand Cane, La., departed this life, Aug. 1, 1892.

She was converted and sanctified at Scottville Camp Meeting in August, 1891, and joined the Methodist Church. In less than one year she was called away, but was found ready. She had rendered a willing service; was a cheerful Christian, full of the Holy Spirit and was the life and sunshine of home. When afflictions came she bore them with patience, and when she felt the approach of death, with a wonderful victorious spirit, she met this last great enemy. Death had come to do his mighty work, but he was robbed of his sting. Fear was gone; no hesitation to pay the great debt. The Lord had called for her, and she was going to meet him. When she knew that she must go, she called her loved ones around her bedside, and with beaming face and burning words, exhorted them to live religiously and meet her in heaven. With joy and praises to God, she spoke of the wonderful sustaining grace and assurance that was being given to her. Looking up to me, she said: "When you reach, tell the people what a glorious thing it is for a Christian to die." With firm faith, she went down into the valley and peacefully passed away.

Her sister Gertrude had preceded her to the Father's home only a little over one month, and now they join hands amid the glories of the unseen world in the home of the good. May the grief-stricken hearts find comfort in Jesus, the great Comforter, and follow the goodly admonition of these departed loved ones!

J. S. SANDERS.

LEWIS—Little Wesley, youngest child of Joe and Fannie Lewis, departed this life, Sunday morning, Sept. 13, 1892.

Just as the sun had dispelled the shades of night, and we were entering upon the duties of that bright Sabbath day, the angels came and gently waited the sweet spirit of our darling into eternal rest. God is gathering up his precious jewels. Wesley was a sweet, intelligent child, and a general favorite with all who knew him. He was a brave little Christian. Dear little boy! He loved his mama so well, and called for her so often during his illness. Home is very desolate without him, and his sweet voice calls, "Dear mama, no more. But we know he is in the arms of Jesus, and with a sweeter voice calls papa, mama and brother Willie to a brighter world. Were it not for our blessed religion, the darkness of that home-to-day would be unbearable. No more do we hear the sweet, childish voice in prattle around the hearthstone; no more the patter of his little feet coming in from school, for he is with Jesus. Faithful, loved ones. God will take care of your "baby" until you come.

FANNIE BULLOCK.

LITTLE-McNEIL ("Mac.") POWELL LITTLE, son of Rev. D. A. Little, of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Clinton, La., on Aug. 24, 1884, and died suddenly, of congestion, in Port Gibson, Miss., Sept. 26, 1892.

The bitter cup of sorrow has been pressed to the lips of every member of that sacred, happy Christian circle. Gentle-spirited, dignified and loved, little "Mac" has been removed to the Father's house of many mansions.

The writer baptized him in 1884. He gave his heart to God and joined the church last year in a meeting for children conducted by the Rev. George C. Smith, of Georgia, in Jackson, Miss.

A shadow has fallen athwart the home, but—thank God!—the sunshine accompanies the shadow. The blessed Christ, touched with a feeling of all our infirmities, does not allow the shadows to long remain. He knows just how to bestow comfort upon, and speak peace to, a saddened, broken circle. The grief-throes which he experienced and manifested in the home of Mary and Martha, after the lifeless body of the beloved brother had been removed, shows us how deeply "touched" he is by the sorrows which come upon us.

The grief-stricken father, in writing to me, said: "I am willing that the Lord should have him; but we do miss him so much! When we sit to the table, and look around and do not see him, a silence falls upon us and tears come into our eyes."

My beloved brother and sister, Christ knows what that unoccupied place at the table means. He knows about the silence that reigns supreme when all hearts are burdened with the same feeling of loneliness and loss. I bespeak and devoutly implore the sympathy of the blessed Christ upon my sorrowing loved ones.

C. A. POWELL.

CARAWAY—Died, Sept. 12, 1892, in the town of Fannin, Rankin county, Miss. Mrs. FRANCES LENNETTER CARAWAY, aged eighty-four years seven months and seven days. She was born and reared in the State of North Carolina, and in early childhood professed the Christian religion and joined the Methodist Church, and ever afterwards lived a consistent Christian life. On Nov. 13, 1825, she was married to Calvin J. Caraway. About 1835 they moved to Lowndes county, Miss., and finally in 1844 settled in Rankin county, Miss. She was the mother of twelve children, only four of whom are now living. For the last thirteen years she lived with her youngest daughter, Mrs. Anna Brown, in Fannin, who, though a widow with three small children and without means, gave her a home and divided her living with her, and lavished on her all the care and devotion that a loving child could upon a dependent parent. (All honor to Mrs. Anna Brown. God bless her and her children!)

Grandma Caraway constantly lived in communion with God and her Bible. Oh! she loved to peruse its sacred pages, and, as a result, in the very jaws of death, cried out, "Glory! glory!" So passed from earth to heaven one of the most devoted Christians I have ever been my privilege to know. May her Christian life and triumphant death be duplicated in the life and death of all her surviving children and grandchildren! Is the prayer of her former pastor.

F. M. WILLIAMS.

WHANN—Whereas, Our heavenly Father has seen fit, in the dispensation of his providence, to take out of this world the soul of our deceased brother, ROBERT S. WHANN, who was a member of our church and Sunday-school, and also of our Epworth League and Band of Hope; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death we lose from the church one of its most active members; from the Sabbath-school, a scholar; faithful and true; from the League, an Epworthian of great promise; and from the Band of Hope a temperance soldier, who remained true to his pledge to the very last.

Resolved, That we shall ever cherish the memory of our deceased young friend and brother, and ever seek to imitate his bright and consistent example.

Resolved, That we mingle our tears and heartfelt sympathy with the bereaved family, and commend them to the consolations of the Divine Spirit.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the Minutes of the Louisiana Avenue Sunday-school, and also a copy of them be sent to the family of the deceased, and also to the Rev. O. W. Carier, D. D., editor, for publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Respectfully submitted,

L. T. BELT, for Committee.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, croup, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

ACME BLACKING is cheaper at 20 cents a bottle than any other Dressing at 5 cents.

A LITTLE GOES A LONG WAYS

because shoes once blackened with it can be kept clean by washing them with water. People in moderate circumstances find it profitable to buy it at 20c. a bottle, because what they spend for Blacking they save in shoe leather.

It is the cheapest blacking considering its quality, and yet we want to sell it cheaper if it can be done. We will pay for a recipe that will enable us to make Wolff's ACME BLACKING at such a price that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. This offer is open until Jan. 1st, 1893.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Mrs. Harrison, the wife of the President, died in Washington, Oct. 25.

The four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Columbus on the soil of the Western World—Oct. 21, 1892—was observed throughout the United States.

The Navy Department has been placed in possession of the check for $75,000 sent to the State Department by Chili, through Minister Egan, for indemnity to the sailors of the United States steamship Baltimore.

One hundred and eighty-five thousand children gathered in the public schools of New York, on Oct. 20, in accordance with the proclamation issued by President Harrison, to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus.

The Draymen's Union, which demanded a new tariff and ten hours' work, have gone on a strike in this city, their demands being refused by their employers. In consequence, business is retarded, and stagnation of trade is inevitable if a compromise is not effected.

Mr. Frank Damrosch, of New York, is conducting people's singing classes at the Cooper Union, New York. The classes have just been opened and it is said that more than 500 members have been enrolled. The object of the class is to teach all that care to learn how to sing by note, and it is hoped ultimately to organize from its members a grand popular chorus that will be able to sing the greatest works of the great masters. The classes are practically free, a small charge of ten cents a lesson being made to cover the incidental expenses of the class.

According to the official figures of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, the cotton crop is short. Up to last Saturday the marketing of the crop showed a shrinkage compared with the same number of days last season of 735,224 bales, or, in other words, the amount of the crop which had come into sight at this time last year was 2,191,357 bales as compared with 1,456,133 bales marketed during the same time last season. The statistics also show that during the past week the movement of the crop to market has fallen behind the same week last year to the extent of 160,000 bales.

The dedicatory ceremonies of the World's Columbian Exposition were inaugurated on Oct. 19, beginning with the reception and entertainment of distinguished visitors by the various committees on the evening of the day, and followed in the evening by the citizens of Chicago to the guests of honor. A pleasing feature was the "Columbus Day" celebration, in the afternoon by thousands of school children throughout the city. A grand parade took place on Oct. 20, in which 75,000 persons (including representatives from every State) took part. On the twenty-first the World's Fair buildings were formally dedicated with imposing ceremonies. The governors of all the States, and their staffs, were present. The dedicatory ceremonies were preceded by a military parade.

FOREIGN.

Hamburg has been declared free from cholera by the authorities. No fresh cases of cholera have been reported in Havre.

To mark the christening day of the infant princess in Berlin, 400 women who were imprisoned for various offenses have been released.

The French Chamber of Deputies has appointed arbitrators to settle the Carmaux labor troubles, and it is believed that an adjustment of differences will be effected.

According to a report on the Italian harvest, all the crops are above the average except barley, which is slightly below the average. The bounteousness and excellence of the crops have had a favorable effect on all branches of the national economy.

Several French deputies have resolved to support in the Chamber a measure fining absent members 10 francs a day, the amount of the fine to be deducted from their official salary. The measure is intended to reduce to a minimum the absenteeism, from which the Chamber has suffered serious embarrassment frequently in recent years.

Some three or four months ago Baron Hirsch distributed all his earnings on the turf for the previous year, amounting to $70,000, among deserving English charities. He has since accumulated fresh profits from the races won by his horses, and he intimates that a further sum of $100,000 will be available for charitable purposes at the beginning of 1893.

At the School of Fine Arts, Paris, the Jean Leclerc prize of 500 francs, awarded annually in the course of architecture to the student who passes through the second class in the least time, and enters the first class in the best form, was this year divided between Mr. Howard, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Mr. Arthur A. Strong, of the School of Mines, Columbia College.

The terrible storm and flood in Sardinia on Thursday and Friday was calamity in which hundreds of lives were lost and hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property was destroyed. Rain fell in torrents and all the low lands were flooded in a very short time. The river Manu and other streams soon overflowed their banks, inundating an area of fifteen square kilometers. Among the villages invaded by the waters were: Deomomannu, Assemini, Elmas, Samathal, San Sperate and Braccas, with a total population of 6,000 souls. One hundred bodies have been recovered at San Sperate alone. The total death toll must reach several hundred. An immense amount of cattle and live stock perished.

To-day Hood's Sarsaparilla stands at the head in the medicine world, admired in prosperity and envied in adversity by thousands of world-becoming men. It has a larger sale than any other medicine. Such success could not be won without positive merit.

Hood's Pills cure constipation.

Former Times Not Better Than These.

Some good men burden the air with sighs and groans over the moral degeneracy of the times. "The former times," they tell us, "were better than these." If this logic is correct, why then the gospel is a grand failure, and God made a great mistake in sending his Son to redeem a lost world. That the moral sense within us should be shocked and outraged by the revelations of crime—the murders, divorces, suicides, robberies, frauds, etc.—is due to the light poured into the conscience by the teachings of the Divine Word. "Pure religion makes darkness visible." The Sermon on the Mount makes the morality of the nations ghastly. Christ's law of love, the Golden Rule, shows the blackness and deformity of human hate and revenge.

A recent writer has pointed out "the indifference with which Caesar, in his Commentaries, tells the story of the most inhuman acts committed by him in his conquests, so that the heart becomes sick in reading the recital." The reader need not be told that all this has been changed since the coming of Jesus Christ.

The author of that remarkable book, Ecco Homo, says truly: "The creed which makes human nature richer and larger, makes men at the same time capable of profounder sins; admitted into a holier sanctuary, they are exposed to the temptation of a greater sacrilege." In the Iliad, Homer hardly recognizes the distinction between right and wrong.

"There is not a villain in the book," says the author just quoted. "The reason of this is that the feeling of moral indignation, so strong in later poets, was so feeble in him that he is incapable of hating any of his heroes for their crimes."

Our forefathers, five hundred years ago, worshipped wooden and other heathen gods in the German forests. In the latter part of the seventeenth century witches were executed in Massachusetts and the Virginia master of 1793 made it penal for the master of a ship to bring a Quaker into the State; ordered those already here to be imprisoned until they abjured the State. The penalty for the third return to the State was death. Great jurists, like Blackstone and Sir Matthew Hale; great preachers like Baxter, Cotton Mather and John Wesley; and Ralph Ordworth, one of the foremost philosophers and theologians of England, believed in witches and wizards. "Say not that the former days were better than these."—T. F. G., in Holston Methodist.

Ways to Brains and Hearts.

The gospel preacher who really tries to be faithful, and who waits and watches for fruits of his labors, will soon learn two things without waiting very long. First, that the devil is not, and does not seem likely to be, afflicted with any of the infirmities of old age, which we are sure to experience if we live long enough; that he gets around in the same lively way as he did when he broke into the old garden of our first parents and drove them out of it, "the woman" having to bear the burden of it, as she often does in these days. The second discovery will be that among those who receive the truth, there are very different degrees of receptivity. Some seem to open their hearts and hearts to it, as the Bereans did to the preaching of Paul. While some of them remind us of the "early dew" of the prophet, there will be found among them instances of a simple and growing faith. After these will come a discouraging realization of the fact that the devil seems to have so closed the avenues to the brains and hearts of many people that the truth must be hammered into them as nails are driven—by frequent and heavy blows. There is still another class of hearers, as the preacher will find, into whose brains and hearts the truth must be introduced by a sowing-the-seeds process, which may seem slow, but is often the only way to get into obtuse minds and obdurate hearts. —Evangelist.

A Right Thing.

Recently our porter, G. W. Thompson, a colored man, was standing on Camp street, near the office, when he saw a man drop a pocketbook. He picked it up, and passed into the man, but the latter had passed into some office; so he did not overtake him. Thompson found there was $1,000 in currency, and some notes and papers in the pocketbook. Presently a man ran up the street, looking distressed. Thompson asked him if he had lost anything, when he described the pocketbook and its contents, on which Thompson handed the owner his pocketbook and its entire contents. Thompson is a consistent Christian and a member of the Methodist Church.

H. B. Stevens & Co.

It affords us pleasure to request our readers to note the advertisement of Messrs. H. B. Stevens & Co., dealers in clothing and underwear for men and boys. This firm has in its employ Mr. Wm. H. Pierson, who for over twenty-five years has sold clothing to many of the preachers and their friends who reside in Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas. He has proven himself reliable and fair-dealing, and enjoys the well-deserved patronage of a host of customers.

Messrs. H. B. Stevens & Co. are among the oldest and largest dealers in New Orleans, and keep on hand the latest styles and best goods in their line. They spare no pains to suit their numerous customers. Their spacious and well-lighted stores are Nos. 122 and 124 Canal street.

The steamer Oceanic, which arrived at San Francisco from Hong Kong, brought the most valuable cargo that ever came to that port. It is valued at $3,000,000—$2,000,000 in silks and the remainder in tea and general merchandise.

BOOKS.

THE MODEL SUNDAY SCHOOL. By George M. Boynton, D. D. Pp. 175; 75 cents. Congregational Sunday-School and Publishing Society, Boston and Chicago.

This is "a handbook of principles and practices" by one who shows himself to be an authority in all matters pertaining to the Sunday school. Principles should determine and regulate practices. Many superintendents make mistakes in practices through not understanding the principles which should decide their course of action. It is refreshing to get hold of a book which makes the principles so clear, and which therefore may be safely followed in the methods which the commands. The book discusses the organization of the school and its various methods and relationships. It is clear, concise and helpful. There is something in it for each worker in the Sunday school—superintendent, pastor, teacher, librarian, secretary, chorist, etc. It is verily a "handbook" of one that should be within reach of the hand at all times. A wise superintendent or pastor will have it where he can consult it frequently. Its size permits it to be carried in the pocket.

CHANGES SUGGESTED.

By the laws of the church the Bishop shall "fix the appointment of the preachers in the Annual Conference," and, with minor qualifications, his power in that respect is supreme, and, as a whole, has been exercised with wisdom and moderation. It can not be denied, however, that there is a growing disposition to limit the prerogative, to reduce this power to the reach of the people. That a change is necessary is conceded by many of the cloth, and if proper agitation is started, the question may be in condition for the next General Conference, in which is vested the power to make the change.

Our church is, in the main, a democracy. The voice of the people is heard, directly or indirectly, in all its departments, except the most essential one—the calling of its preachers. Considering the relation between pastor and people, the latter ought to, and do, regard this privilege almost as priceless as their membership. It is true, man may worship in the woods or the fields without let or hindrance, but when you confine him within church walls, and force him to listen to another's exhortation, the wisdom, the virtue, the faith of the most peerless turns to gall and wormwood. If only one is offended, the door is open to leave and he suited elsewhere; but what a mistake is committed when the great body of the membership is compelled to accept an undesired preacher!

I concede the plain duty of the churchman. He should accept the appointee, and strive to be gracious, reasonable and Christianly, and I believe the membership, as a rule, submits and does its duty. But there is a vast difference, so far as the soul is concerned, whether we receive inspiration from a beloved and honored voice, or merely follow first principles because we will not altogether abandon the church.

The Bishop should have no personal interest in these appointments. They are not his spoils of office, and he ought rather to be glad than sorry if his power in this regard is curtailed. I suggest, therefore, that the question of selection of preachers be left to each congregation, and upon the recommendation of a majority let appointment follow.

There is really no argument to be offered in favor of the present system, except ancient custom. Whatever its original necessity, it has outlived its usefulness, and there is now crying need of reform. It is a "rotten borough" system, with limitless capacity for evil. It is against every principle which governs in the affairs of life, and sooner or later it must go down before the enlightened opinion of today.

The people provide the sinews of war; but to fight the devil they need a leader, and what army ever followed to success an untried general? I would not abate one jot or tittle of the Bishop's authority over the appointee after his appointment, but I would have him to feel that he must stand "four-square" in all things with his people.

Having carried the question of appointment, the next (if not the first) question is the change of term of service. The preacher should remain as long as his people desire his service. The "flying preacher" should be unknown. Imagine any man, in any occupation, establishing himself for one year with the knowledge that the next year he may be located five hundred miles away! How can such men establish corner-stones or cement congregations? Recruits for a year never gave strength to an army. They must enlist for the war! The battle is for my soul. My captain must know the country surrounding it and the enemy which attacks it. Though each succeeding preacher points the way, only he who knows me can successfully lead me to the victory.

The preacher needs a home, a library, an extensive acquaintance, and a general reputation for strength, godliness, and all the attributes of holiness and good character. These things come with permanency, and the individual stands for his church as the great preachers and great orthodox of England stand, and have stood, for centuries. They are makers of epochs in history and in the lives of men. Who goes to New York without hearing her great divines? Who would ever hear them if one year they were in New York City, another in Albany or Schenectady?

Two generations have listened in one church to Palmer; the name of his predecessor is not yet forgotten. What Methodist can repeat a like story of the holy and sanctified leaders of our church? They have jested from pillar to post; they have been thistles blown up and down by the winds of Annual Conferences. They should have been giants biding one fortress—a helm to the grandeur, a blessed tower of strength to his grandchildren.

The church in New Orleans, and doubtless through the State, needs a new impetus. We are weary of the old system, and though it had glorious results, they can only be perpetuated by such changes as the times demand. The people are reading, studying, and thinking. There is still plenty of room and vast material for the field preacher and the evangelist; but we must have permanent congregations to leave the lump of raw material. The established preacher must hold the fort for the convert. He must not drift as the fiery exhorter passes to other scenes. In his regeneration he should be taken by the hand into a quiet, settled congregation, where he will find social and material assistance to the people, and an able and comforting leader in the pulpit—a fixture who, knowing his past, will hedge his future with all the allurement which permanency only can give. In no other way may the great fight be won.

Let us, therefore, court discussion, and if the changes are desired by the church, then let us, in proper spirit, admit its necessity and set about its achievement. Let us hear from the thinkers in the church on the question.

A MEMBER AT LARGE.

New Orleans.

Tennyson and Shakespeare.

BY F. M. GRACE, D. D.

On my first trip to Conference, going down the Alabama river on a steamboat in company with Bishop Andrew, Dr. Wightman, Walter H. McDaniel, James L. Cotten, and others who have long since "crossed the bar," Bro. Cotten made a quotation from Shakespeare. Immediately Bro. McDaniel—who, though a man of some education, affected roughness of speech—proclaimed his opinion that Shakespeare "was a hog." It was not long till the elegant and classical editor of the Southern Christian Advocate came to the relief of Bro. Cotten, and stated the indebtedness of the world of letters to the bard of Avon. Bishop Andrew quietly held the scales of debate while the rough presiding elder of the mountains and the refined editor from Charleston piled up their arguments on either side. To, at least, one interested listener this controversy was instructive.

When it was announced that Tennyson had died with a copy of Shakespeare in his hand, I could not help wishing it had been the Bible instead of Shakespeare. But when I turned to the dirge of Cymbeline, that elegant ode to death, it seemed appropriate that one great poet should thus do honor to another. It showed, at least, that his thoughts were turned to the awful subject then before him, and it was natural he should wish to read the sentiments of the greatest of England's poets on the grand event of life.

A remark in the last edition of the Advocate that Walter Scott died listening to his son-in-law reading the Bible, called up again the question of their respective claims upon the Christian world. What did Scott write in behalf of Christianity to compare with the works of Tennyson? To every pious admirer of Scott, the absence of a distinct religious character from all his many novels has been a painful experience. His religious characters are either Jews, or Catholics, or hypocrites. Had Scott chosen to do it, no one knew better how to make piety and humility attractive; but his Pound-texts and Muckle-wraths are the types he has given us of Scotland's Christianity in the days of religious persecution. The Jewish Rebecca in "Ivanhoe" comes nearer our standard of holiness than any other of his characters.

On the other hand, Tennyson is the great Christian poet of this century. Born in a parsonage, bred under the influences which formed our own Wesley, he has never said or sung a line that was not true to the faith of modern Christianity. Poetry is not religion, and we must not confound things that God has made diverse in kind; but the true poet sings with the inspiration that made the prophets, and his word is not in vain. While Shakespeare was non-religious, he has written according to the spirit of his age, and Tennyson has done the same; but the age of Tennyson is Christian, far more than even that of Walter Scott. The reader of Tennyson must go beneath the surface to get his meaning. Take the "Idylls of the King." Gareth and Lynette, for instance, might appear to the reader as mere fiction; but underneath the guise of mail and chivalry and love there is a deep allegory of the Christian life. The serving-man becomes a knight; the imprisoned maiden to be won from Castle Perilous is heaven; the river, with its three passages, is the stream of life, and the three knights that defend the passages are youth, middle age, and old age; the fourth knight who holds the imprisoned maid in his castle is death. After vanquishing the three that came in morning, noon and evening, he is about to encounter the fourth, when the greatest of all the knights, Sir Lancelot, typical of Him who conquered death, comes upon the scene and furnishes Gareth with his own spear and shield. With these he conquers. The beautiful tribute to the poet in the Advocate, of Oct. 13, was altogether just and appreciative. If anyone doubts Tennyson's piety, let him read "Crossing the Bar."

"Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea."

"But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound or foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep Turns again home."

"Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell
When I embark."

"For though from out the bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar."

Bible Institute and Summer School.

MR. EDITOR: I am impressed with the wisdom of Bro. F. N. Parker's suggestion concerning the organization of a Bible Institute and Summer School for Louisiana and Mississippi. To young preachers who have not had the advantages of training at a theological seminary; to Sunday-school teachers and those who are to become teachers; to leaders in the Epworth Leagues and other Christian societies for young people, such an institute as he suggests and outlines would be almost invaluable; while to those of us who are older and more experienced it would be refreshing and helpful. Held at some place already in use as a Summer resort, it would not only furnish healthful exercise to the mind, and so meet a recognized want at all "vacation homes," but it would also, by its uplifting religious influence, send back to the churches their members, and, in particular, their younger members, more intelligently pious and better fitted for legitimate church work.

Never in the history of the church, the world over, has there been such pressing demand for trained, well-informed workers. Unscholarly exegesis and loose exposition underlies nearly all the vagaries of the pulpit, while commonplace moralizings and dull religious platitudes in the Sunday-school beget in the minds of pupils a distaste for the Bible, and drive them away from the school as soon as they can control their own movements.

We need fresh, intelligent, interesting scriptural teaching in pulpit, from platform, at Sunday-school. Few, comparatively, of our young people can get proper training at the schools and colleges. Not one in fifty can spare time and money for that. The plan of Bro. Parker meets the want largely; meets it better than any other plan known to me. Our best scholars, our ablest men—men of sound judgment, large experience, whose own success in chosen fields will give force to their teachings—brought into contact for three weeks every year with our young men and women, could not fail to raise them to higher intellectual levels; and if these are men of spiritual force also, how deep and how lasting would be the religious impression made! What a boon to the preachers, and to those expecting to be preachers, would be a series of lectures from Bishop Keener on the Epistle to the Hebrews! And Hunnicutt and Murrah—how they could spring the latent intellectual energies of our youth!

The organization of the Epworth League, already alluded to, emphasizes our need of such work. Even in the short time since that took place, the need of larger opportunities for information and for training has become evident. Our various League Committees, all over our Conferences, would hail with delight such an institute as Bro. Parker proposes. It would be in exact line with League effort, and would inspire that tentative department of church energy with new life.

Put me down, Mr. Editor, as heartily favoring the enterprise.

WM. H. LA PRADÉ.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. G. H. Galloway, Carthage, Miss., Oct. 21: "I report a most gracious meeting here at Carthage; 25 conversions; over 100 professed special blessings; 16 joined the church; almost anybody I call upon will pray in public; a good number have family prayers. There is hardly a family in the place but have been positively blessed. The Spirit was with us in power. Bro. Miller helped two days. Bro. Hays was with us the most of the time. God has blessed my work as never before."

Rev. W. T. Griffin, P. C., Terry, Miss., Oct. 22: "We held three meetings on our work this Summer, closing the last one in September, and are indebted to Bro. R. Havers and J. G. Cammack, of Summit, and Bro. A. B. Nicholson, of Hazlehurst, for faithful work. We had fourteen applicants for membership; the churches greatly revived, so that we hope they can tide it over the Winter. Bro. Nicholson was in his element at old Spring Ridge, where he had enjoyed seasons of refreshing years before. It made him feel young again. We are making good headway on a new church at this place."

J. H. Rogers, Corinth circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Oct. 22: "Our protracted meetings have all been held—eight in all. Sinners were convicted and converted after the old-time method. I think I can safely report 23 conversions. Received on profession of faith, 10; received by certificate, 5; infants baptized, 12. We were kindly assisted in these meetings by Revs. W. M. Young and Jo McKeown. These brethren did earnest, faithful preaching for us, for which we feel grateful. Our fourth Quarterly Conference has just closed. Our beloved presiding elder (W. S. Lagrone) was on hand, and preached with power and demonstration of the Spirit. Praise God for every blessing."

Rev. E. H. Rook, Sweetman, Miss., Oct. 20: "We have finished our protracted meetings on the Chapel Hill circuit. At Spring Hill we had a very gracious meeting, with 11 additions to the church and some backsliders reclaimed. At Mars Hill we had a good meeting, with some accessions to the church. At Gore Springs we had a very gracious meeting, with 9 additions to the church. We had just finished a new church at this place. At Chapel Hill we had a triumphant time. Thirteen additions, many backsliders reclaimed, and the church powerfully revived. We had just completed a new church-building here worth five or six hundred dollars, and the brethren were happy, anyhow, over their success. Well, in short, we have been greatly blessed this year, for all of which we thank God and take courage."

Rev. M. E. Tumlin, P. C., Verona and Nettleton station, North Mississippi Conference, Oct. 20: "Both of the churches in my charge have recently been blessed with good meetings. Bro. E. H. Moon, of Tupelo, preached for us a week at Verona. The people were moved by, and very much delighted with, his preaching. He did us much good. Bro. Stone, the faithful presiding elder on the Aberdeen district, who lives here, and is a power for good in any spiritual campaign, pronounced the meeting here the best for some years. The church at Nettleton has also had a revival under the magnetic touch of the inimitable Bowen, of Aberdeen, and the faithful and powerful preaching of Bro. F. P. Spencer, of Shannon, Miss. Ten have been received, and more will follow. This is a good charge and a delightful people."

Rev. W. J. O'Bryen, Black Hawk, Miss., Oct. 22: "I have closed my round of revival meetings, four in number; the work spiritually strengthened. Have received into the church during the year, 37. We have in cash and subscription about all the collections ordered by the Conference. Hope to be able to report every dollar in full at the Conference, with a number of renewals and subscribers for the Advocate. Thanks to the following brethren, for the assistance rendered: Revs. D. C. Foust, of West Station; J. T. Howell, of Pleasant Hill; W. H. Sanders, of Sifton, assisted in the meeting at Black Hawk; Rev. R. M. Davis, of Lexington, at Sweetwater; Rev. W. J. Johnson, of West Texas Conference, at Acona. We regret to chronicle the death of one of our best citizens, Dr. John Shivers. His remains were interred in the cemetery of Black Hawk by the Knights of Pythias, assisted by the writer, on Oct. 11. He leaves a bright record as a physician, a citizen, and an official member of the Methodist Church. We deeply sympathize with his grief-stricken companion and the three sweet little girls who were left to mourn his absence. May the grace of God comfort all the relatives!"

Rev. R. S. Ishell, Lake Providence, La.: "The financial condition of our people is not encouraging. We have suffered as much from overflow and continued rains during the Spring and Summer, probably, as any parish in the State. A good corn crop, but cotton very short, not yielding, as many think, a half-crop. Result: Many of our people involved, with no prospect of paying out. Hope to bring up to Conference a fair, if not a full, collection. Have just held a very interesting protracted meeting in Providence. It was of one week's duration. Dr. I. W. Cooper, of Hazlehurst, Miss., assisted me. He preached every sermon, except one preached with good result by Rev. John W. Crisler, Mayersville, Miss. Dr. Cooper preached with much power. His sermons were noted for purity of diction and deep pathos. They were cumulative, eminently practical, and full of the Holy Ghost. Congregations and interest increased from beginning to close of the services. Apparent result: Quite a large number publicly pledged themselves to lead a better life. Many reconsecrated themselves to the service of God. There were 6 accessions and conversions, and 3 or 4 more yet to join. Have baptized during the year some adults and quite a number of children. Have received into the church during this Conference year, 18. Have had much sickness among our people. Wife and I have had good health, for which, with all the other mercies of God, we are devoutly thankful. We are thankful for the blessed results of the year. To God be all the praise."

Rev. Geo. W. Ferrer, Whittington circuit, Mississippi Conference, Oct. 21: "We are grateful to God and under inexpressible obligations to our visiting brethren for the great things done for us at our camp meeting at Palmer Camp Ground. Souls converted, accessions to the church, and the souls of believers soundly blessed. We had a glorious meeting, for which we praise God, from whom all blessings flow. Bro. Howell, of Purvis, did effective work. 'God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform.' We desired, we prayed, we sought for a burning herald of gospel light and power, and God graciously heard and sent him. Bro. Howell electrified us on the first round, and hosannas and hallelujahs were heard in the camp, and at each successive sermon the celestial blaze deepened and widened until multitudes arose to join their exclamations of victory through him who loves us and saves us by his grace. Bro. Howell impressed himself indelibly upon the hearts of us all, and 'God bless Bro. Howell!' is the unanimous verdict of all our people. Also we tender our gratitude to Bros. Selby, Forsythe, Holland, Enochs and Young, who rendered us good service. We had some 35 or 40 conversions, 6 accessions on profession of faith, several infants baptized, and the church membership wonderfully revived. Our beloved presiding elder and wife were with us. Bro. Ellis, on account of feeble health, was unable to participate in the ministerial work of the meeting, but presided in the Quarterly Conference to the great satisfaction of all. We all love Bro. Ellis and his accomplished wife. Our finances are considerably short to date, but we are hopeful that by a good, solid effort, from this until Conference, to make a good report. Our people have assumed, perhaps, twice the amount of financial responsibility this year than any year previous. They have built a parsonage at a cost of about $400, and have expended about $200 in improving church property, which makes it hard on a poor circuit; and if some of our collections come up short, we hope that the Bishop will just 'wink' and pass on to the next business."

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

Bishop Galloway has returned from Nashville, Tenn., where he spent last week holding the Tennessee Conference.

The theater, circus and hall (ing) season is upon us. Every Christian church is opposed to them. When you started to the last one, did you stop and ask why the churches opposed to them? Had not you better do so before you go to the next one?

The press is a wonderful vehicle for the conveyance and dissemination of truth or falsehood, and its effects upon the civilized world for good or evil is almost incalculable. Public opinion is moulded, forces organized, sovereigns moved, kingdoms revolutionized, souls saved or lost.

From one of our exchanges we learn that during the Columbian opening over 200,000 papers in single wrappers were handled daily by the Chicago Postoffice in addition to the regular editions. The mail carriers were compelled to hire express wagons and other vehicles to gather the mail from the boxes, papers being piled in heaps under and around them.

All the blessings God bestows on mankind are positive in their character and tendency; hence he unqualifiedly demands of humanity a Christianity positive in its character and tendency. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.—Southwestern Christian Advocate.

The brother who is so much exercised over the very high price of the Advocate (about four cents per week) can read with profit the article from the Southern Christian Advocate published elsewhere. He need be in no very great hurry. Let him take his time and read it at leisure.—Texas Advocate. That brother was never known to be in a hurry, especially in reading his own condemnation. He will likely continue growling about the price of the Advocate (though he never reads it) until he can grow no more.—Southern Christian Advocate.

The Pearson meeting closed last Friday night. While it was not all that had been desired, it was not fruitless. Quite a number professed conversion, backsliders were reclaimed, and the churches revived. Could it have gone on two weeks longer, a sweeping revival would have been the result. Bro. Pearson does not go into philosophy, science, or anything out of the Bible. He preaches The Book in its simplicity and incontrovertibility.

The following, from the Nashville Advocate, we commend to the favorable and practical consideration of all whom it may concern:

Twenty-five years ago that great pulpit genius, Dr. Wm. E. Munsey, was sweeping like a comet through our Southern heavens. Very naturally there was much imitation, or attempted imitation, of his methods of thought and speech. The result was a painful surfeit of overdone rhetoric. We have seen many young preachers and a few older ones undertake to fly like the apocalyptic angel, when the most they ought to have essayed would have been to climb to the top of an ordinary sapling. In these latter days the tendency is in the other direction. Simplicity has in many instances degenerated into puerility, and the use of plain English into unwholesome slang. The former error is less objectionable than the latter one.

THE DEAD POETS' NEED.

BY VICTOR HUGO

My soul drinks in its future life
Like some green forest thrice cut down
Whose shoots defy the axman's strife,
And skyward spreads a greater crown.
While sunshine glides my aged head,
And bounteous earth supplies my food,
The lamps of God their soft lights shed,
And distant worlds are understood.
My soul is not a cloud
Resultant of my body's power,
She plumes her wings to fly to God,
And will not rest outside his bowers.
The winter's snows are on my brow,
And summer suns more brightly glow
And violets, lilacs, roses now Seem sweeter than long years ago.
As I approach my earthly end
Each plainer can I hear afar
Immortal symphonies which blend
To welcome me from star to star.
The tomb is not an endless night,
It is a thoroughfare—a way
That closes in a soft twilight
And opens in eternal day.

Letters from O. B. Diah.

ECONOMY—(CONTINUED).

My Dear Cousin Jack: I am glad you enjoyed my last letter, and that you are resolved to proceed with it, at least, one eye open, and to obey the scriptural injunction not to owe any man anything. This is also one of the General Rules. That is, we are to avoid taking up goods without a probability of paying for them. That includes everything salable, even board and horse-feed.

It took me a long time to learn that everything negotiable was "goods." I used to think it only meagre things bought out of a dry-goods store, but since I have been out in the world awhile I have learned that even hardware is called "goods." But you must remember that I had to learn by actual experience, and often at my cost, too, for I am a graduate of Brush College, not of Centenary or Vanderbilt.

Now, in order to owe no man anything, resolve, as a good brother lectured me one time; to go on the motto, "P. P. P." He said that was his trade-mark, and by his consent I adopted it as mine, too. I have found it a good sign to sail under, as good as the ancient sign, "Castor and Pollux." It means, "Preach, Pray and Pay" as you go. Now, I don't make much fuss about money matters among my people. I just preach and pray, and the pay comes itself. But even if it don't come, don't spend it till you get it—don't go in debt. You must discern the future. By that I mean you must calculate ahead. There are certain months when, of necessity, only a few dollars will come into your hands. You must foresee this, and not live too high in Spring or spend too much on things unnecessary, else you may hunger in Summer or have to do without something that you really need. Learn to "spin out" your money. I do not wish you to be stingy or mean, but simply to watch around. Keep your eyes open.

I told you I'd tell you how I came out when I got married, and with rent to pay. I was getting on finely when I was married. I was stationed in a small town and had a good congregation, and so I fell in love, and was married. In about two days after I became engaged I began to think on the seriousness of the situation. I had been getting along so well up to then, but now, as I ran my eye over the future, prospectively, I could see nothing but rent bills, grocery bills, dry-goods bills, market bills, until it seemed that everything would have a "bill" to it. I didn't have much either to meet these bills with; only a few bills of small figures. But I had too much courage and love for my intended to back down, so I put on a bold front. (Be independent, Jack, however dependent you may be. I learned that from politics.) I boldly announced my intentions and went ahead, rented the house, and by that time here came the people to my help. Well, since that time I have had many close calls in finances, but never really destitute. I believe I did a good thing when I married, for I got a good wife—economical and pliant. In addition to the trademark I give you in this letter, I will add, for fear that the subject of marriage incidentally mentioned in this letter may excite you to like action:

1. Don't marry till you are ordained and admitted fully into the Conference. Any girl who marries a gawky, unskilled, unordained preacher commits a serious blunder. He is not fit to have a wife, and if he dies before he gets into full connection, what would become of his wife?

2. When you marry, be sure the girl is pious. My wife is more pious than I am. Don't at any time waste yourself on a light-headed, stamping, non-religious, or dancing girl. Now, don't take this to yourself unless it fits you. I am advising you as a dear cousin ought to advise another. In my next I will tell you how to conduct yourself on circuits, and in stations, and, in fact, advise you further.

Your cousin,
O. B. DIAH.

In Memoriam.

REV. E. B. O'QUIN.

By a divine decree all that live and move must, sooner or later, bid farewell to earthly scenes, and enter that bourne from which no traveler returns. But how sad and how hard to realize that Death, in his onward and never-ceasing march, plucks the brightest flowers as well as the grain ripe for the harvest; that in the very prime of youth, when the rainbow of hope shines brightest and clearest, when the fond dreams and ambitions of childhood and youth seem about to be realized, this grim monster declares his supremacy, and proves how vain it is to indulge in the delusive phantom of Hope! But this it is that on the seventh of September, just as the sable goddess of night had spread her wings over our clime, Death entered our home, and, regardless of the efforts of kind friends and loved ones, snatched from our midst our only preacher, Edgar Byron, aged twenty-two years, five months and four days. Having just graduated from Emory College, he was desirous of pursuing his high calling; but, being called and detained home by lingering illness, he was compelled to resign the position to which he had been elected, but still clung to the cross of faith and the anchor of hope, trusting in that hand that had always steered his bark over the rough billows of adversity. But though all earthly hopes were blighted by the interposition of God's will, there are heights far grander than any ever achieved by mortal man in the annals of fame, and we know that to these he has winged his flight, for even when a child he had bright visions of the land beyond, and all his earthly ambitions were made subservient to his one grand purpose of serving God and living with him hereafter. In the language of Dr. W. A. Candler, the noble president of his beloved "alma mater," "The good are useful in either world," and though we feel an aching void in our hearts that time can never fill, we bow in submission to him, all-wise, all-powerful, who knoweth the end from the beginning. Our home is, indeed, left desolate; but how sweet to think that he has a home in that beautiful place where no sorrow ever comes; and while we are still groping our way in this world of darkness and sin, he has safely passed through the valley and over the dark river of death, and with a crown of glory on his brow, and a harp in his hand, he is beckoning us onward to that celestial city beyond the tide, where he is mingling with the saints in glory, his voice attuned to the praises of him he served on earth.

Yes, dear brother, though thou art sadly missed on earth, we hope to meet thee in the New Jerusalem, where God shall wipe all tears from our eyes—

"Where the faded flower shall brighten,
Brighten never more to fade,
Where the shaded sky shall lighten,
Lighten never more to shade."

We'll meet you there; yee, we'll meet you there. Till then, farewell, farewell.
SISTER.

Peter's Denial.

I recently listened to a sermon in which Peter's denial of his Master was strangely mixed and confused with Christ's prediction that each denial would be made. Peter's denial of his Lord and Master was evidently attributable to his momentary loss of faith. That this denial could not have taken place through fear is clear, not only from Peter's well-known personal courage, but from his conduct in resisting single-handed and alone the troop of officers sent to arrest Christ, and also at the end by the brilliant courage displayed in his death. It is also equally manifest that Peter's denial is not attributable to hope of reward. There was no bribery or attempt to bribe, and nothing to be gained by bribing, for Christ's death had been determined on by the Jews independent of evidence or even of a trial. So, then, why did Peter deny his Master when a few hours before he was willing to die for him?

To answer this question we must look back at the past life of Christ and Peter. Peter had seen Christ walk on the sea; Peter had seen Christ stand at the grave of the sleeping Lazarus, and cry with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth," and immediately the grave gave up its dead; Peter had seen the palsied man at the touch of Christ tremble and vibrate into life; but when he saw this man split upon, stripped, and loaded with ignominy and disgrace, then, for the moment, his faith failed.

And this accords with the experience of human nature. Let any man, matters not how good or what exalted position he may occupy, happen to misfortune; let the man who is rich and possessed of abundance of money, friends and supporters suddenly become poor, and, above all, should the voice of slander malign his character, then observe how his friends will fall away, and even good men will say, "Well, after all, what so many men say must be true. I was mistaken. He is not the man I thought he was."

That Christ's knowledge that Peter would deny him in no way effected or caused such denial is too manifest to require argument. Christ could not have been God without such knowledge. He was necessarily omniscient. Omniscience is not at all casual.

To illustrate: I may know that a crime will be committed, yet a State's attorney would scarcely include me in the indictment with the actual criminal. Something more is required. It must be shown that I aided or abetted the criminal; then I can be indicted as accessory. No, Peter denied his Lord and Master through momentary failure of his faith. A LAYMAN.

Our Hymnology.

MR. EDITOR: As presumptions and hazardous as it may appear to antagonize an editor, and that in his own paper, with your permission we draw our pencil and rush into print.

You say you are sorry to see other song books taking the place of our hymn book, and make a sweeping assertion, and denominate all such "namby-pamby"—in other words, weakly, sentimental, or affectingly pretty. We are sorry, too. We did hope that our hymn book, so elaborately revised and compiled, would meet the demand, and thus satisfy a long-felt want; but it does not. Notwithstanding the distinguished Committee of Revision, and the time required and the money expended in the work, it does not meet the demand. Our people may be wanting in piety, and heterodox in theology, and subnormal in taste. We do not raise this question, but we know that we are sustained in our position by a large number of the laity, and not a few of our ministers. We use our hymn book and the "Prayer and Praise" in church and Sunday-school, and regard one as orthodox as the other. Why not? Who are the authors of "Prayer and Praise"? Bishop A. G. Haygood and Prof. McIntosh. If you object to the book, object to the authors. Why do many prefer it, and others like it to the hymn book in Sunday-school and in revival meetings? Because the music is more lively, and they are, therefore, better adapted to each service. The objector may reply that our hymn book is supplied with 125 revival songs. True; but judging by the demand, it has not held enough of the namby-pamby kind in it. The book has 618 hymns, and, according to the demand, half these should be "namby-pamby." Very cordially,

H. ARMSTRONG.

"The World in the Church."

I have just read the biggest little book that I have ever been my fortune to lay my hands upon—"The World in the Church," issued from our Publishing House at Nashville by Rev. John T. Sawyer, D. D., of the Louisiana Conference. The subject is "handled without gloves." This book should be in the hands of every Methodist in the connection—verily, in the head and heart as well. Preachers, station and circuit (particularly the former), should sow it broadcast over their charge, and Epworth League make it a text-book. The Doctor not only covers the ground of his subject, he does more; he dug down to the bottom, and, like Vesuvius or Popocatepetl, sends forth truth red-hot in streams of lava that must burn its way into the hearts and consciences of the worldly-minded; the double and twofold back-action membership who cumber the church of God-to-day—those who are conspicuous for their absence, or back seats at church, class and prayer meeting, but who crowd the altar when an exhibition is given in the church, "entrance free." Discipline, standards, Bishops and the press have been brought into service, and the best of each culled and collated in the big little book that may throw light on the subject discussed. The time had come for such a book, the want was felt everywhere, and the Lord has raised up the man to compile it. Read it, heed it, and Methodism will be back in the "old paths," and, like the "three hundred" who paused not to drink, will put to flight the hosts of sin. Men will honor the church, for then God, and not the world, will be its strength.

"The World in the Church"

Is the title of a modest 18-mo pamphlet of 104 pages by Rev. J. T. Sawyer, D. D., of the Louisiana Conference, and recently issued by our Publishing House. It is a compendium of information, official and otherwise, upon the subject treated, and at the same time gives a liberal extract from the opinions of many able and good men on this vexed question. The wise discrimination evinced by the author in these selections, and their arrangement, is equally apparent in the hortatory portions of the little book, which are timely, earnest and genuinely spiritual. Its reading was to me a source of personal edification, and I doubt not will be helpful to me in preaching. I loaned my copy to a venerable minister who has been preaching nearly seventy years. He read it at a sitting, and, on handing it back, pronounced it "very good," and rejoiced that its publication betokened a return to the old paths.

A lady of our church, who has recently shown a disposition to seek membership in another, where, as she expressed it, "the legitimate drama and other amusements might be enjoyed without infractions of church rule," also read my copy, and, I hope, is cured. She insists that it ought to be in the hands of all our people, and so do I.

Contributions to Indian Mission.

MR. EDITOR: One brother sends me a check for $25 to help build a church for the Indians, but will not allow me to give his name. May God abundantly bless him!

Bro. P. A. Johnston is still at work, and, as a result, he sends me since last report $10, raised at the following places:

Bluff Creek C. Meeting.... (Pd.) $8 00
St. Tammany C. Meeting.... (Pd.) 0 00
Mandoville..... (Pd.) 1 00
Matthew Howes..... (Pd.) 1 00

And subscribed on installment plan for five years:

Matthew Howes.....$1 00
Walter Boyce..... 1 00
Rev. W. T. Woodward..... 1 00
Mrs. W. T. Woodward..... 1 00
Levi Wells..... 1 00
W. A. Holden..... 1 00
William Harper..... 1 00
Miss Lizzie Howes..... 1 00
Miss Jennie Howes..... 1 00
Miss Ella Wells..... 1 00
Miss Jennie V. Fennelton..... 1 00
Miss Nettie Boyce..... 1 00
Mrs. L. B. Wells..... 1 00
John Badox..... 2 00
Rev. J. P. Haney..... 1 00
Mrs. J. P. Haney..... 1 00
W. A. Dutch..... 1 00
Emile Weleb..... 1 00

Bro. Johnston has raised and sent in cash during the year $41, and also the above subscriptions. Many thanks to Bro. Johnston, and may the good Lord bless him more and more! If we only had a few more like Bro. Johnston, we would soon have all we need.

I also wish to report $1 received from Mrs. Jennie Carr, of Brandon, Miss.

A. D. MILLER.

Brethren and sisters, please remit at once, as we want money now to pay the fourth quarter of Bro. Cammack's salary; and we ought, by all means, to give Simpson Tubby something to help him, and also to encourage him, and we need money to educate him and some others. Can we not find a few more that will give $25 each, or $50, or $100? We certainly ought to push this work now, as we have neglected it so long. Please remit by registered letter to me at Barlow, Copiah county, Miss.

Your Opportunity.

We have the entire Bible (agate type, cloth-bound) to supply to Sunday-school scholars in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference for the insignificant sum of ten cents, and a larger one (million type, cloth-bound) for only fifteen cents. This is just one-half of what it costs to publish them. Brother preacher or superintendent, every Sunday-school scholar on your work who can read ought, especially at this rate, to possess his own Bible.

If some children of your school can not pay this amount, raise the money and buy the Bibles for them. They need them; they must have them. If you honestly can not raise this small amount, collect all you can and send it to us, and we, the Sunday-school Board, will help you out. Now lay your time to do God, the church and your community an inestimable good. The devil would not ask you to do more than be diligent and inactive.

Jeans said: "If you love me, feed my lambs," and, brother, he is waiting your answer now.

Address H. M. ELLIS,

Some Possibilities of Electricity.

BY PROF. WILLIAM CROOKES, F. R. S.

Until quite recently we have been acquainted with only a very narrow range of etherial vibrations, from the extreme red of the solar spectrum, on the one side, to the ultra-violet on the other—say from three ten-millionths of a millimeter to eight ten-millionths of a millimeter. Within this comparatively narrow range of etherial vibrations, all our knowledge has been hitherto confined.

Whether vibrations of the ether longer than those which affect us as light, may not be constantly at work around us, we have never seriously inquired. But the researches of Lodge in England, and of Hertz in Germany, give us an almost infinite range of etherial vibrations or electrical rays, from wave-lengths of thousands of miles down to a few feet. Here is unfolded to us a new and astonishing world—one which it is hard to conceive should contain no possibilities of transmitting and receiving intelligence.

Rays of light will not pierce through a wall, nor, as we know only too well, through a London fog. But the electrical vibrations of a yard or more in wave-lengths, of which I have spoken, will easily pierce such medium, which, then, is revealed the bewildering possibility of telegraphy without wires, posts, cables, or any of our present costly appliances. Granted a few reasonable postulates, the whole of time experimentalists are able to generate electrical waves of any desired wave-length from a few feet upwards, and to keep up a succession of such waves, radiating into space in all directions. It is possible, too, with some of these rays, if not with all, to refract them through suitably shaped bodies acting as lenses, and so direct a beam of rays in any given direction; enormous lens-shaped masses of pitch, and similar bodies have been used for this purpose. Also an experimentalist at a distance can receive some, if not all, of these rays on a properly constituted instrument, and, by concerted signals, messages in the Morse code can thus pass from one operator to another. What, therefore, remains to be discovered is simpler and more certain means of generating electrical rays of any desired wave-length from the shortest—say of a few feet in length—which will easily pass through buildings and fogs, to those long waves whose lengths are measured by tens, hundreds and thousands of miles; secondly, more delicate receivers which will respond to wave-lengths between certain defined limits, and be silent to all others; thirdly, means of directing the beam of rays in any desired direction, whether by lenses or refractors, by the help of which the sensitiveness of the receiver (apparently the most difficult of the problems to be solved) would not need to be so delicate as when the rays to be picked up are simply radiating into space in all directions, and fading away according to the law of inverse squares.

It may be fairly assumed that the progress of discovery will give instruments capable of adjustment by turning a screw or altering the length of a wire, so as to become receptive of wave-lengths of any preconcerted length. Thus, when adjusted to fifty yards, the transmitter might emit, and the receiver respond to, rays varying between forty-five and fifty-five yards, and be silent to all others.

This is no mere dream of a visionary philosopher. All the requisites needed to bring it within the grasp of daily life are well within the possibilities of discovery, and are so reasonable and so clearly in the path of researches which are being actively prosecuted in every capital of Europe, that we may any day expect to hear that they have emerged from the realms of speculation into those of sober fact. Even now, indeed, telegraphing without wires is possible within a restricted radius of a few hundred yards.

The discovery of a receiver sensitive to one set of wave-lengths and silent to others, is even now partially accomplished. The human eye is an instance, supplied by nature, of one which replies to the narrow range of electro-magnetic impulses, between the three ten-millionths of a millimeter and the eight ten-millionths of a millimeter. It is not improbable that other sentient beings have organs of sense which do not respond to some or sensitive, but are able to appreciate other vibrations to which we are blind. Such beings would practically be living in a different world from our own. Imagine, for instance, what idea we should form of surrounding objects, were we endowed with eyes not sensitive to the ordinary rays of light, but sensitive to the vibrations concerned in electric and magnetic phenomena. Glass and crystal would be among the most opaque of bodies. Metals would be more or less transparent, and a telegraph wire through the air would look like a long, narrow hole drilled through an impervious, solid body. A dynamo in active work would resemble a conflagration, whilst a permanent magnet would realize the dream of medieval mystics, and become an everlasting lamp with no expenditure of energy or consumption of fuel.

In some parts of the human brain may lurk an organ capable of transmitting and receiving other etherial rays of wave-lengths, hitherto undetected by instrumental means. These may be instrumental in transmitting thought from one brain to another. In such a way the recognized cases of thought-transference, and the many instances of "coincidence" would be explained. I will not speculate on the results, were we eventually to catch and harness these "brain-waves."

These are but a few of the many possible discoveries in electrical science. The total amount of vis viva which the sun pours out yearly upon every acre of the earth's surface, chiefly in the form of heat, is 500,000 horse-power. Of this supply of energy a flourishing crop utilizes only 3,200 horse-power. The great problem of science is the utilization of the waste energy.—Fortnightly Review.

BOOKS.

FAITH-HEALING, CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, AND KINDRED PHENOMENA. By the Rev. J. M. Buckley, D. D., editor of the New York Christian Advocate. Published by the Century Company, New York. For sale in New Orleans by Geo. F. Wharton, Price, 21.25.

This is a book of 300 pages treating of dreams, somnambulism, presentiments, spiritualism, apparitions, astrology, animal magnetism, witchcraft, and the subjects discussed, makes Dr. Buckley one of profound interest. His view of the psychological questions discussed, and has been to abundant pains to verify the many curious anecdotes, with which the book abounds. The book shows a most diligent industry in collecting many curious things on these curious subjects, and the reader's interest does not flag from beginning to end.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Nov. 6, 1892.

By Rev. Wm. H. LAPELLE, D. D.

Peter Delivered from Prison.

Acts xii, 1-17.

TIME.—A. D. 41. PLACE.—JERUSALEM.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." (Ps. xxxiv, 7.)

The spirit of persecution seemed to slumber after the conversion of Saul, the great leader of the aggressive movement against the disciples of Christ; but the steady growth of the church, and its evident purpose to incorporate with itself converts from among the Gentiles, awakened it again to activity.

The Herod Agrippa of our lesson was the grandson of Herod the Great (who slew the babes at Bethlehem), the nephew of Herod Antipas (who caused John the Baptist to be beheaded), and the father of the Agrippa before whom St. Paul afterward made his celebrated defense. He had been made King of Galilee and Perea by the Emperor Caligula, and afterwards had Judea and Samaria included in his dominions by Claudius. To gain favor with the Jews he posed as a defender of their faith, making rich offerings to the Temple treasury and observing with strictness the outward requirements of the law. Like all the Herods he was unscrupulous, malignant, treacherous. When he saw how deep the hatred of the Christians ranked in the hearts of the Jewish leaders, he began to afflict the disciples.

Vers. 1, 2. About the time that Saul and Barnabas left Antioch for Jerusalem, with gifts for the famine-stricken brethren of Judea. The killing of James (not the author of the Epistle of James), the brother of John, was intended, no doubt, to convince the Jews of his devotion to the Sanhedrim.

Vers. 3, 4. During Passover week. It was contrary to Jewish custom to condemn and execute any one during Passover week. So Peter was imprisoned until the time should come to bring him forth and publicly condemn him. "After Easter" should be, properly, "after the Passover." The object of Agrippa was to make himself popular with the Jews, who heartily hated Peter.

Vers. 5. The arrest and imprisonment of Peter sent the church to its knees. Peter was necessary to them; they thought; so they prayed, earnestly, constantly, for his deliverance.

Vers. 6. The precautions taken to prevent his escape were unusual. Agrippa did not propose that his prisoner should be released. Next day should witness his death, and another wave of popular applause should come to the king. Peter, knowing that his Lord could be trusted, slept soundly.

Vers. 7. Herod Agrippa, with all his precautions, could not guard against Heaven. God's angels are not kept from his followers by bolts and bars, and quarters of soldiers. God had much use for Peter yet. At the touch of the angel his sleep and his chains at once elapsed from him.

Vers. 8, 9. When commanded by the angel to put on his sandals and his outer garments, Peter obeyed mechanically. So he followed him, thinking all the while that the whole affair was a vision—a dream.

Vers. 10. Passing the first and second guard, they reached the outer gate, an iron one, which swung open miraculously. The angel continued with Peter until he might safely leave him to find his way to the house of some friend.

Vers. 11. Left to himself, Peter rallied from his dazed state, and realized that what he had thought to be a dream was really an actual fact of experience. God had delivered him; the Jews would not see him publicly condemned; Herod would be disappointed.

Vers. 12. What should he do? Mary (the mother of the John Mark, who afterwards went part of the way with Saul and Barnabas on a missionary tour) was a disciple; her house a place of gathering for the brethren; he would go there. He did not know it, but even then many were there, praying for him.

Vers. 13, 14. How natural that Overjoyed at Peter's appearance, Rhoda could not wait to admit him until she had told the good news.

Vers. 15. They doubted, and yet had been praying for this. "Deliverance come in an unexpected way, and at an unlooked-for time. So it often is. They decided that Peter's guardian angel—for the Jews believed in such—had come, in his form and with his voice.

Vers. 16, 17. At last, hearing the knocking again, they opened the door, and, astonished, let Peter in. Recalling to them the particulars of his miraculous deliverance, he bade them tell the brethren, and James in particular. This James, a brother of our Lord, was a leader among them, probably head of the Jerusalem Church. He is mentioned in Acts xv, being president of the council there alluded to. Peter, after his explanation and message, left the house. His own safety, and the safety of the company, probably, made this necessary.

Program for Week of Prayer and Thanksgiving,
Woman's Missionary Society, M. E.
Church, South.BEGINNING MONDAY, NOV. 21. AND ENDING
SUNDAY, NOV. 27.

(Auxiliaries are expected to hold daily meetings. The offerings made at each are to be sent through the usual channels.)

MONDAY, NOV. 21.

Let the services be opened with prayers of gratitude to God for the many blessings that have attended the work through the past year; for his loving kindness in having so graciously spared the lives of our missionaries, for their preservation from disease and disaster; and for the gentle reign of quietude that has marked the work everywhere. Thank him, too, for the doors that stand wide open to us; for the funds that have been provided; and let prayers of special gratitude be offered for the many new recruits that have gone to the field.

Bible readings: Joel II, 21-29, and Pent. xxviii, 1-12.
Hymns: 6, 716, 724 and 869.
Leaslet: "What Ye Will."

Close with an earnest appeal for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon these meetings, and that every woman in the church may be aroused fully to her duty and to her obligation either to go or send.

TUESDAY, NOV. 22.

Pray for China, our oldest mission field. Mention each missionary by name. Pray that health and strength and courage may be given them, and wisdom from on high. Pray, too, for the work—that every obstacle may be removed, and that the glad light may spread and glow more gloriously bright day by day.

Readings: Isaiah lxi and Eph. iii.
Leaslet: "My Becky's Thank-offering."

Hymns: 669, 670, 666 and 658.

(These exercises may be made more interesting still by the reading of short sketches of our missionaries in China; when they went to the field, where they are at work, etc. A map of China ought to be at hand, and questions asked and answered with reference to its geography, history, religion, etc. To go further still, some one might be called upon to name the hindrances to the advancement of the work in China, and another to name the encouragements, etc. This same plan might be pursued in taking up each of the other mission fields.)

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 23.

Pray for Mexico and Mexican Border. Remember each of our missionaries by name. Let not one be forgotten. Petition God to help them and to bless them as he sees and knows the peculiar needs of each. Pray earnestly, too, for the work that it may prosper and grow at every station.

Bible readings: Isaiah xxxv and Acts x, 34-43.
Hymns: 566, 580, 665 and 915.
Leaslet: "The Lottery of Souls."

THURSDAY, NOV. 24

(Thanksgiving Day.)

Service of song and thanksgiving. Pray for all work projected by our Board at home and abroad. Make special mention of the Bible and Training-school, and return sincere thanks to God for its present prosperous outlook.

Bible readings: 1. Chron. xvi, 23-34, and Ps. cxviii.
Music may be selected.

Leaslet: "A Cup of Thanksgiving."
(See that the thank-offerings made at this meeting are as large as possible. Make pledges, too, at this service, the amounts to be handed in the following Sunday night.)

FRIDAY, NOV. 25.

Pray for Brazil. Let each of our workers there be mentioned, and God's blessing be asked upon each, and God's help for each. Pray especially that the health of those that are sick may soon be fully restored.

Bible readings: Ps. lxxiii, 1-19, and 11. Cor. v, 5-21.
Hymns: 727, 663, 658 and 916.
Leaslet: "Uncle Dan's Prayer."

SATURDAY, NOV. 26.

Indian Territory. Pray fervently for the work at Anadarko and for our laborers there. Pray earnestly that the light may continue to spread among those wild tribes of red men until all the dark corners of this portion of the earth, so near our own doors, may be filled with the knowledge and the glory of God.

Bible readings: Ps. cxviii and Matt. xxi, 14-46.
Hymns: 666, 662, 677 and 876.
Leaslet: "Yes, You Do, Lucindy."

SUNDAY, NOV. 27.

A. M.—A sermon on Woman's Work by the pastor.

Afternoon—Children's Praise Service.

Night—An open session of each auxiliary, in connection with Young People's Society, when thank-offerings, pledges and other funds may be collected.

(For the leaflets, "What Ye Will," "Uncle Dan's Prayer," and "Yes, You Do, Lucindy," write to Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, No. 53 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y. Price, five cents for all. For the leaflet, "My Becky's Thank-offering," write to Miss Clara M. Green, No. 1 Lath St., Lynn, Mass. Price, five cents. For the leaflet, "A Cup of Thanksgiving," address Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, 1384 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Price, two cents, postpaid.)

Rural.

"I lead a very monotonous existence; am little more than a household drudge. Poverty makes farm life very unlike that of the old plantation. I really do try hard to think."

"Who sweeps a room as for thy laws, Makes that and the action fine."
but I doubt if George Herbert ever swept a room. I know he never cooked."

The above is an extract from a letter from one of the many women of America who can say with Miss Broughton's heroine, "This is an up-and-down world." Being married, she is not afraid to air her recollection of that remote historical period known as "the war," a time when in the South only "po' buckrahs" did their own housework, and when the establishment of a wealthy planter, with its overstock of servants, was, according to Thackeray, suggestive of a light carriage drawn by a team of elephants. Reconstructed Southern editors, politicians, and such persons will have it that the new state of affairs is better than the old, but no more than did the good old poet, do they ever sweep rooms or cook meals.

However, as a sermon is to be preached, not a jeremiad moaned from the text contained in the given epistolary extract, let us proceed to our first. This overwork of women whom farmers have vowed themselves to cherish is no new thing. Lunacy reports tell us that it is these women who crowd the asylums for the insane, and the reason given for their madness is that for too long a period their life has been all work and no joy. It was no doubt some poor soul of this description that Mother Goose had in her mind when she sang,

"There was an old woman, and—when do you think?"

She lived upon nothing but victuals and drink; Victuals and drink were the chief of her diet, And yet this old woman could never be quiet."

But let it be said for the unknown worker half of this old woman, that possibly her lack of mental pabulum was owing to having said, "I'd rather do the work myself than be bothered with a servant," a saying which often means, "I'd rather save the servant's wages—$120 or perhaps $150 a year—to spend in dress. It is true I have no time to go anywhere except to church, and there only occasionally, but all the same I'd like to look like a lady." She forgets, or perhaps doesn't know, that in society this being well dressed requires not only a gown, but a smile, and to smile successfully "with the greens on one's mind" is well nigh impossible. We read in The Wide World that that notable housekeeper, Miss Fortune Emerson, made herself ill by being too smart. Smart must here be understood in the American sense of the word, as the writer goes on to say that she took the workmen in to board during the winter, and refused to hire help for the housework; but possibly she was too smart also according to the word's English meaning, putting the money that might have hired a cook into fiery wherewith to captivate Mr. Van Brunt.

Why have country boys and girls such a wild longing to make their way towards the city? Isn't it because at home they live upon nothing but victuals and drink?

"What do you think? They haven't even read Robert Elsmere!" exclaimed a young girl employed down town as a type-writer, in describing a visit to some friends living in the backwoods. She had hard work and plenty of it, but she also had her hours off, hours of recreation in which she could read, or go sight-seeing as best pleased her fancy.

What is to be done about it? How are city attractions to be lessened to the imagination of youth in order to bring about greater contentment with country life? The answer is easy, and it seems strange that country parents are so slow in guessing it. Make home more attractive by lessening Jack and Jill's work. Hire another farm hand, and let Jack go fishing whenever he does want. Deacon Gradgrind may say you are bringing him up in idleness; that when he was young boys worked fifteen hours a day, etc.; but don't mind what Deacon Gradgrind says. Take a lady's magazine for Jill, and if she likes, let her have a flower garden. Buy books for both of them, and talk with them about what they read. Above all things, cultivate the virtue of domestic civility. Let not meal times be mere feeding times of the kind described by Dr. Holmes as "gobble and git;" a little lingering at the table surely will not cause poverty to come upon you like an armed man. Insist upon table manners. If there is no waitress, teach the children to wait upon one another without being asked. And do not let it be with your children—as with the little country boy whom his teacher was kindly trying to help out of a difficulty. "Can not you tell me what g-r-a-c-e spells? What does your papa say when he sits down to table? And the pupil replied promptly, "He says, 'Godamighty, what a dinner!'"

What an easy matter it is to interest children of ordinary intelligence in almost any subject of conversation! Explain political topics to your boys, or talk to them about Stanley's travels in Africa, and they will soon begin to regard the old folks at home as very comfortable persons.

Remember that while much has been said in praise of the dignity of labor, there is such a thing as overwork—work that wears out the body and brutalizes the mind. There is such a thing, too, as what the negroes call "concessory work," the kind for which fidgety housekeepers are most distinguished. But work or no work, let the amenities of life be preserved. Because a man becomes a tiller of the ground is no reason for his sinking into a hosier, any more than it would necessitate him becoming a Cain. That he lives twenty miles away from the nearest railway station does not relieve him of the obligation of being given to hospitality. That he uses rake and hoe does not oblige him to use Saxon words now repudiated by polite society. When it is once thoroughly understood that in spite of the old rhymester, Father Adam may have delved and still been a gentleman, then we may hope that the ambitious country boy will be content to remain on the farm.—Christian at Work.

Thousands of Dollars

I spent trying to find cure for Hood's Sarsaparilla and I had 13 years. Physicians said I never saw so severe a case. My legs, back and arms were covered by the humor. I was unable to lie down, could not walk without crutches, and had to have my arms, back and legs bandaged twice a day. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon could see change. The flesh became healthy, the sores soon healed; the crutches fell off; I was able to give up bandages and crutches, and a happy man I was. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla 7 months; and since that time, 2 years, I have won no bandages whatever and my legs and arms are sound and well. S. G. DERRY, 45 Bradford St., Providence, R. I.

BRIEFS.

The Tennessee Conference did a wise thing in passing a resolution requesting our College of Bishops to appoint representatives from our church to the Congress of Religions, to be held in connection with the World's Fair at Chicago, next September. By all means our great connection should be represented in that unique congress.

If you want to read a book that will help you, that will stimulate thought, that will refresh your intellectual powers, that will broaden your horizon of God's work and man's destiny, that will deepen your sympathy for every fellow-creature, then get Dr. J. W. Lee's "The Making of a Man." It will do all that for you, and more.

It is said that Germany has spent $150,000,000 a year for the last twenty years in maintaining her armies. It looks like that is enough to bankrupt any government under the sun; and yet that government is asking for more money to maintain more soldiers. What if that amount could be turned into some other channel for the next twenty years!

The Publishing Committee of this paper met in annual session in our office, Wednesday, Oct. 26. All the members were present. ADVOCATE matters received due attention. We regret the necessity that caused our assistant, Rev. B. F. Lewis, to hand in his resignation, which was accepted. Bro. Lewis has done good and faithful work, for which we are grateful. We trust his work in the pastorate will be rendered more efficient by the experiences of the past year.

The reason some preachers cross "the dead line" so early is because they try to live on the record of their past lives! Past records may be good; but they are gone and afford no ground for recognition in the living present. If a man's work today does not show that he is in touch with present needs, and alive to present opportunities, the past can not save him, no matter how brilliant it may be! The same is true of churches and governments! Hence, Jesus said: "Let the dead bury their dead."

The article in another column, on "Changes in Our Itinerary," is from the pen of a layman of our church, and shows the drift of, at least, one man's thoughts. We are satisfied that the laity are thinking more on the subjects touched upon than formerly. Whether it is an evidence of progress in the right direction can only be determined after a full and free discussion. If we are satisfied with things as they are, we will say, "Let well enough alone." If we think things can be improved, we ought to speak out. The church needs to know its own thoughts on these things. If you have anything to suggest on the line of improvement, speak out!

Merely Suggestive.

When a great poet dies the minds of the people turn to thinking about poetry. If he was a man whose songs found echoes in the popular heart, his own creations pass in review. We suppose that in the last month Tennyson has been more universally read than ever before. His long career as a poet of unquestioned ability—as one whose poetry found a sympathizing public, whose songs awakened noble aspirations in youthful hearts and gave cheer to those discouraged under life's trials—naturally raises the presumption that poetry has its value in the common walks of life. There are some people who pride themselves upon being "utterly prosaic," and hoot at every indication of poetic genius in a youthful mind, and attempt to disparage every utterance in poetic form, no matter by whom made. These people have no sympathy with any thought that is not given to the world in plain, dull prose. But real poetry takes fast hold upon the hearts of the majority of men. This has been so from the beginning, and it is so today. The human heart recognizes that poetry is the highest style of human speech, that it is the language of the emotions and imagination, that it is the language of the soul when it comes into companionship with what is true and great, lovely and good. And this language strikes a chord that runs through nearly all human souls, and men listen and are charmed by its music. This fact is the reason we find so much poetry in the Bible. God's revelations, for the most part, come to us clothed in the garments of poetry. His great thoughts are borne to us in poetic measures. God himself speaks to us in this universal language of the human heart. "Holy men of God, as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," speaking in this manner, oftener than in any other, raises the point if the origin of poetry is not found in God himself!

The Apostle Paul does not hesitate to speak of God's works as poems. He uses the word from which we get our word "poem" in two remarkable connections, and he only uses the word twice. It is not used by any other New Testament writer. Take this passage: "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead." (Rom. i, 20.) In this passage the Greek word for "poems" is used; but our translators have translated it, "by the things that are made." We suggest that the truth and beauty of Paul's thought is obscured by this translation. We think he said this: "The invisible things of God, namely, his eternal power and Godhead, from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being perceived by his poems." Paul looked upon the creation, not only as a manifestation of eternal power and Godhead, but as God's great epic. The material universe, with its sublime origin and its rhythmic movement and its eternal harmonies and its unity of design, looked to Paul like a grand poem, and he did not hesitate to call it such.

The other connection in which Paul uses the word "poem" is just as remarkable as this. He uses it in describing the Christian character! In Ephesians ii, 10, he says: "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus." The word translated "workmanship" is "poem." What Paul says is this: "We are his poem, created in Christ Jesus." The Christian character is the creation of the Divine Spirit, and is a divine poem. In these two realms, the material and the spiritual, God has spoken, and Paul says he spoke in poems. The material creation is his poem to show his eternal power and Godhead. The spiritual creation is his poem to show the efficacy of the redemption that is in Christ. To us there is much beauty in this line of thought; but, as our caption intimates, this article is merely suggestive.

Church-Going and Dress.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

We think, as the result of much observation, that too many make church-going a dress occasion. This is, for several reasons, to be deplored. Let us consider some of these.

Church service is for the worship of God and the spiritual good of those who go up to the house of the Lord. If an hour or two is spent in the toilet for the occasion, to make an elegant, elaborate display of costume and charms, it would seem to be a poor, not to say an unsuitable, preparation for so solemn and important an occasion. Then it looks like (though many may not really intend it) a deliberate intention to rival God, and divide with him a large share of the interest and attention of his worshipers. We suppose that most who thus act have not thought of the presumption and almost profane audacity of what they are proposing to do, but, nevertheless, we fear some are so doing.

This elaborate display of dress works a bad result in keeping those away from the house of the Lord whose straitened circumstances do not allow them to array themselves in clothes so costly, fine and attractive. Of course, this is a foolish pride in the poor; but, nevertheless, some feel it, and permit it to influence them. They feel ashamed and humiliated to set down beside and among those so splendidly attired; their plain calicoes and muslins and cheap wraps and bonnets are sadly disparaged by the comparison. It is more than their weak hearts can bear, so they will not come at all, or only at night, when the contrast will not be so obvious and glaring. Of course, this is wrong. People ought to dress according to their circumstances. It is equally good taste and enlightened wisdom to do so, and it is bad taste and folly to do otherwise. But, notwithstanding the obviousness of all this, it is not seen and felt by many as it should be; the humiliation is felt, and some are kept from the house and public worship of God.

Now, dear ladies, you that have the means to dress in fine and costly attire, take this matter into serious consideration. Do not make church attendance a dress occasion. Do not humiliate the poor, and keep them from church service. You will have abundant and, perhaps, proper opportunities for the use of your costly robes and ornaments where no ill will come of their exhibition.

We mention one more reason why church attendance should not be a dress occasion. It not only keeps too many of the poor away, but it often keeps the well-to-do away as well. Many of the plumes, the ribbons, laces and other fabrics of ladies' wear are frail, delicate and easily soiled. A little rain almost ruins them. These articles are costly, and it looks like wrong and waste to be careless of their preservation. So if the weather is the least inclement, and threatens any injury to these costly ornaments, their owners and wearers stay at home. Now, if church attendance was not a dress occasion, ladies could attire themselves in plain, substantial habiliments, not likely to be injured by inclement weather. It is sadly true that many men will not go to church unless the ladies of their household will go also. The upshot of this condition of things is that on many a Sabbath, when the weather is such that it would not hinder men from attending to the various business of their callings, they are not at church because the ladies can not expose their church-going attire to the risk of injury. The preacher goes, of course, and the sermon that has cost him much prayerful study is preached for the most to a beggarly account of empty benches.

Our theme may seem an humble one, and unworthy to occupy a column in a church journal; but it seems to me to involve consequences of serious import, and, therefore, I have written it, hoping it may do good.

Letter from Dr. Lambuth.

MR. EDITOR: Success is assured if we will work the plan which has been adopted for extinguishing the missionary debt. Subscriptions and good cheer in the way of checks and drafts are coming in daily. Two of our heroic missionary men in Japan send a hundred yen each; one detained at home gives a hundred dollars. The China Mission is gathering up its quota, and Brazil proposes to help.

Every Conference thus far, excepting two in the West, struggling over debt themselves, has pledged liberally, and in some cases gone over the amount distributed.

The Missouri is hard at work over the $5,500, having pledged to raise it by Dec. 21. The S. W. Missouri, at its late session at Independence, leaped over all bounds, and subscribed $4,495—or $1,200 more than we asked, and has already sent in $800 to apply to the debt. Bro. W. B. Palmore, that Great Heart of Missouri, gave $500 himself. Bro. Cobb, the treasurer, who gave very liberally also, writes me to-day that they will collect, at least, $3,272 by Jan. 1, and $1,000 more by March 31.

Again, the Tennessee Conference, on last Friday, in a collection taken by Dr. Morrison, subscribed $5,120 of the amount distributed to it, and authorized me, as Conference solicitor, to immediately adopt measures to raise the remaining $2,760—which I shall not be slow to do.

Give Bro. Frank Parker a cheer and bid him God-speed. Brethren of Louisiana, rally around your standard-bearer.

WALTER R. LAMBUTH.

Some Editorial Utterances.

In a sound leader on "The Revival," the Wesleyan closes with this paragraph about the use of a revival:

Brethren, your revival work is only half done when you have had a big revival. You must direct this force to some useful end, or else the good already done will soon leave you, and with nothing to show for it. Give your converted and revived members to know that they must do something for God's kingdom here, or their revived life is worthless—will need reviving again in less than a month. A true revival is a blessed thing, but unless you use it for better work, more Christ-like sacrifice, and more unselfish help to others every way, a basket of chips would be of more value to you. Have you noticed that each year it is becoming harder and harder to have a revival? You did not use last year's revival to any lasting end, and now you must have all the new men and methods, and maneuver in every way to arouse the church. Use your revival all the year, and build on it next year, and you will soon climb to the light where God works.

The Alabama Advocate gives this utterance on "making appointments":

We believe that God makes many appointments, but he makes them through fallible agents; and sometimes these fallible agents make mistakes just like other fallible beings, and often for want of light, and this, too, when they are moved by the highest motives. God never does a Bishop's work for him any more than he does the work of a shepherd. He helps us all in what we have to do, but every man who has anything to do must first help himself before he has a right to expect help from God. For this reason the good and wise Bishop possesses himself of all the necessary and available facts bearing on a certain case, asks God to help him, and then does what he believes is best. And for the same reason the wise circuit rider makes known his condition and desires to his presiding elder, does what he can to get the best appointment in his range, and if he fail to get what he wants, then let him accept what he gets as from God, and make the best of it he can, and try to go up to Conference loaded down with sheaves.

We greatly fear that what appears below, clipped from the Arkansas Methodist, is a sample of what may be found to exist in other places than Arkansas:

Last year our three Conferences in this State embraced 268 pastoral charges. Of these 268 charges three paid their pastors $1,500 each, one $1,400, three $1,200 and over, four $1,000 and over, two $900 and over, six $800 and over, nine $700 and over, fifteen $600 and over, seventeen $500 and over, thirty-five $400 and over, while one hundred and fifty-five charges paid their pastors less than $300 each, and many charges paid their pastors less than $200 each for a whole year's labor. And many of the pastors who received less than $300 each and others who received even less than $200 each for the support of themselves and their families, were not provided with parsonages furnished or houses rent free. When 155 out of the 268 charges in this State pay their pastors less than $300 each—many of them less than $200 each—does any man of intelligence and "business sense" really believe these pastors can or will be as devoted to and efficient in their ministerial work, as they should and would be with fairly reasonable support? But it will not be contended that these 155 preachers could support their families on the meager salaries paid them. Then if they must engage in other work to supplement their income for necessary expenses, how can they do full and acceptable work as pastors and preachers?

Speaking of the Congresses of Religion that are to be held in Chicago next year, in connection with the World's Fair, the St. Louis Advocate says of the Parliament of Religions, which is to occupy ten days:

But the most interesting, unique and important of these gatherings, will be a ten-days' Parliament of Religions, at which, for the first time in history, the representatives of the leading historic faiths of the world will meet in fraternal conference over the great things of human life and destiny. This parliament will be a great school of comparative theology, where the ablest representatives of the historic religions of the world will state their faith and the ground of their belief.

Who can doubt but that this will be one of the most important and interesting bodies that ever assembled in the world? And the most beneficial results can not but follow to the Christian faith, as its vast superiority will thus be shown to all the faiths of pagandom.

And in reference to our representation in that parliament, the St. Louis says:

We can not afford to be unrepresented in so important a gathering of the religious forces of the world. A great church of 1,200,000 members should be known and felt in so phenomenal an assembly, and we should not be behind our sister denominations. We are sure any action that the Bishops may take will meet with hearty approval and indorsement of the church.

To which we say, Amen! Why should the Southern Methodist Church stay in the background any longer?

Yale College has admitted women to its post-graduate courses; and thirty have already registered. The presumption is that this is preliminary to admitting them to the under-graduate courses before a great while.

NOTES.

"It is always daylight toward the Father's face."

Mr. Spurgeon: "The best possible committee is a committee of three—two of whose members are sick or out of town."

When asked the secret of his success, Mr. Spurgeon, in a quiet, humble, reverent manner, replied: "I have a people who pray much for me."

Every preacher, in preparing his sermons, should remember that in every congregation there are persons who rarely read the Bible, and who get all their knowledge of it from the pulpit. Be sure to expound the Word that such persons may be fed.

Old Dr. Sam Johnson was accustomed to say that "spite and ill-nature are among the most expensive luxuries in life." Every exhibition of passion involves an expenditure of vital force, and that which does harm only to the exhibitor is expensive indeed!

A writer, whose works show him well acquainted with the history of the world, both ancient and modern, has indited this melancholy reflection: "Nations, as a whole, have in all ages refused to sustain for any length of time a high morality, which curtails their self-indulgence and imposes strictness of life."

Another writer, whose thoughts are read by thousands every week, has written this: "Superstition and barbarism, though ostensibly expelled by modern civilization, lurk in the shadows stealthily seeking entrance; and the united forces of reason, science, religion, law, self-interest, freedom of speech and of the press, with 'eternal vigilance,' are needed to prevent them from regaining a direful ascendancy."

The first edition of Dr. Lee's book, "The Making of a Man," has already been exhausted. This almost unprecedented sale is not only a tribute to the worth of the book, but is an encouraging indication of general interest in really high subjects of thought. Dr. Lee's book should be in the library of every thinking man, and especially every thoughtful young man.

Preach the fact, emphasize the truth in all its bearings on sin and salvation, and leave the philosophy of the statement to those who have time and taste for metaphysical discussions leading to conclusions made only to be unmade by a new argument. What the world needs to-day is the fact of the statement in all its simplicity and power; and concerning that fact there is theological explanation as once explicit and easy of comprehension for all who go to the New Testament for light.—Rev. D. Sutherland.

If the Christian people in this country don't get nearer together and work more in harmony with each other for the advancement of the Lord's cause, they will not win the victories and make the progress they ought to make. The enemy is getting stronger all the while, and will soon be able to take the denominations in detail and crush them one after another. It is no use to say, "The Lord is on our side," unless we concentrate our forces. The Lord is not on the side of folly. The Lord is on the side of those who band together in his name and fight together for the defeat of the devil.

A writer in one of our exchanges gives "the signs of the times" after this manner: "The power of ungodliness embodied in the subtle materialism of the present day; the atheism of modern scientific writings; the semi-Iconoclasm of the higher criticism; the practical paganism produced by the almost universal liquor traffic; the steady aggressions upon the sanctities heretofore investing the Sabbath day; the liberalism in social life and the lax laws of custom that palliate lewdness, profanity, and public immorality, as of the lotteries, the race courses, the speculative exchanges; the corrupt practices and common scandals which evidence the degradation of present-day politics." What a catalogue it is!

We call the attention of our preachers to this from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate:

The Wesleyan has gone, in two years, from six thousand subscribers to eleven thousand, and in spite of hard times and other difficulties, has been forging its way to the front all the time. As the Fall and Winter comes on, a new impetus is given which we hope will result in placing it in many more homes. All this success is largely due to the energy and fidelity with which the preachers have worked. With few exceptions, they have had a mind to work, and their work has told in the best results for the paper and the church. If the preachers will stick to us, and we know they will, we hope soon to make the Wesleyan of such character and put it in such position as to be of yet greater benefit to the church in many ways.

We do not believe that the Georgia preachers can do more than the Mississippi and Louisiana preachers, but we publish the above that our brethren, upon whom we have always relied with confidence, may be stirred up to emulate the good example. Why should we not have as many additions to our subscription list as any paper? It depends largely upon our preachers. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Prof. C. J. Maynard, author of "The Birds of Northern North America," says: "Contains the best pictures of the species which I have ever seen."

Dr. J. S. Newberry, President Academy of Science, says: "The work is accurately and masterfully prepared, and I take pleasure in recommending it as the most attractive popular exposition of our ornithology yet given to the public."

From Prof. Wm. D. Hornaday, Taxidermist, U. S. National Museum: "I have carefully compared the figures in 'The Birds of North America' with those in Audubon's great work, and am free to say that they are more accurate in outline as well as more faithfully colored to nature."

HOME LIFE.

THE LITTLE LIFE.

BY IDA WORDEN WHEELER.

O lost delight! How chill and gray
The breath and bloom of Summer day.
In robin's song there lurks a moan.
The breeze takes on a sobbing tone,
Since baby died.

O vanished joy! The hours thrice blessed
When closely to my bosom pressed
The faxen head. And now the smart
Of lightened arms, and weighted heart,
Since baby died.

O mother love! To dream, to wait,
To hope, to bear, to bless my fate,
Then death. Of what avail to rave?
There still remains the little grave,
Since baby died.

O pure, sweet life! Thy fragrance rare
Still lingers in the silent air.
Like voiceless prayer it fills my pain,
Like voiceless prayer it fills my pain,
Since baby died.

Two Girls.

They had apparently just entered on their twenties in a good station in society; had been brought up in comfortable homes; and were both at a Summer resort hotel. Thus far they were on a par; as to their personal appearance, neither had any decided advantage; to use a market phrase, they were "fair to middling" in their looks. Here, however, the parallelism comes to an end, for they were alike—with a decided difference. Let us look at them in contrast, one with the other.

One of them had a loud, boisterous laugh, that was occasionally heard throughout the hotel corridors and in the dining-room. Her manners were not exactly forward or masculine, but they were lacking in the quiet dignity, the womanly reserve, the gentle refinements, which have so much to do in the revelation of character.

She did not in any one thing, perhaps, seriously overstep the proper bounds of propriety, and no breath was whispered against her behavior, judged simply by the standards of morality. But, she loved to stay on the veranda where all the other ladies were in the parlor, and there she tarried, at least one evening, until it was fully eleven o'clock. Three or four of the young men who formed the gay and boisterous group about her had been drinking; not one of them was tipsy, but all of them had flushed faces, and their laughter was loud, and their conduct more than trifling. The group laughed, and made puns, and quoted poetry, and indulged in jollity—none of it coarse, or perhaps unseemly; and she staid and made a part of the festive company, as giddy and jolly, and sunny as any of the others. In the parlor, evening after evening, she was found at the card table, playing euchre, with these same young men, once in a while her father, being in the room, looking on. Her mother, where was she? Dead? At home? Where? Had this girl lacked a mother's training? Or, was her home a place where she was taught these manners, so lacking in gentle refinements?

The other girl—what about her? There really is not much to say about her. She was simply intelligent, modest, and quiet. She made no advances to the other sex; she held her own with dignity, sometimes with wit and skillful repartee, when advances were made toward her. She was not seen on the corridor at night with young men who but yesterday were strangers; she was not found playing cards in the parlor; she went out of her way to say a pleasant word to two of the old folks who seemed lonely; she strolled out walking along the beach with two or three young girls who wanted to hunt for pebbles; she read two or three books that had substance in them; and her laugh was never such as would call the attention of a dozen guests in her direction. She was simply modest and discreet, gentle and refined. Either by inheritance or training she had received the marks of good breeding.

To the girls who may chance to read this editorial we have a question to suggest: Which of these characters do you admire? Which one do you think you resemble?—Central Christian Advocate.

Greasing the Wheels.

I have but just returned from the railroad station, where everyone I saw seemed to have ardor in his heart, and hurry in his eye. It was a half as much in earnest in preparing for heaven as we are for jaunts of pleasure, and our journeys of business, it would be something! What a bustle pervaded the whole station—loading and unloading, running backwards and forwards, some going into carriages, and others coming out, while the rattling vehicles set off and arrived by turns.

In the midst of all this bustle, I noticed a man walking coolly along with a tin pan in his hand, greasing the wheels of the carriages. He took no notice of the fine folk or bustle; whoever and whatever the people might be, did not appear at all to trouble his head; whether they came or went, was not his business; on he went with his employment; it was his duty to grease the wheels, and grease the wheels he did.

Thinks I to myself, "Here's a lesson for me. This man is but a picture of what I should be." Oh, that I had humility and godly integrity enough in my breast to go straight on with my work! "Greasing the wheels," it needs be patiently and cheerfully occupying the lowest station assigned me by duty, until it should be said unto me, "Friend, go up higher."—Selected.

Daily Blessing.

"I have experienced that the habit of taking out of the hand of the Lord every little blessing and brightness on our path confirms us, in a special manner, in communion with his love."

Here is a bit of experience which we may prove for ourselves during the coming year. "Little blessings," "little brightnesses"—how full our lives are of these, many of them so common that we fail to make any note of them. Each evening of this year, no matter what the year may bring, if we could but realize God's hand in anything, we would sing:

"Minutes and mercies multiplied
Have made up all this day;
Minutes came quick, but mercies were More swift and free than they."

Let us be mindful of the little blessings—the kind word of a friend, the helpful book which has come to our hand, the adjustment of some difficulty, the opportunity to say or do some kindness for another. Oh, the thousand and one "little brightnesses" which come into each day—let us "take them out of the hand of the Lord," and thus walk and talk with him every hour!—The Christian Advocate.

Pleasure's Magic Wand.

BY REV. J. W. HARMON.

Seldom, indeed, do we measure ourselves up to the ensembled standard of wedding pleasure's magic wand with the sole desire of enhancing the happiness of others. Ten thousand lessons, however, taught on ten thousand organs, and in ten thousand forms, have been given to teach us how to use the magic wand of pleasure in dispensing happiness to our fellows. What enameled and fascinating pictures have been hung up on the walls of this world by the hand of the Divine Artist; what wondrous lines of variegated beauty adorn the landscapes; what rainbow hues and exquisite flowers are spread out over the face of nature, blooming in all their matchless richness and fragrance, to give us pleasure in our brief existence!

But this art of pleasure-giving is one of the neglected chapters and forgotten lessons in this world's history, save in rare exceptions, which excite a world-wide comment, and, because of their rarity, demand an earnest, moral and religious culture among us. And yet, to dispense pleasures along the pathway of oppressed and distressed humanity carries with it a magic power, printing poems of beauty on human hearts, to be held in memory dear, and more lasting than cathedral domes or monumental piles. To share our pleasures and sympathies with our fellows doubles our joys, and dries our own tears the sooner, when we witness eloquent tears flowing down the furrowed cheeks of the unfortunate.

In the circle of our friendships we have found delightful homes, sweet dispositions and loving natures, who exert a magic power in dispensing pleasures around them; real homes of paradise, where angels come and go, charmed with the sweetest minstrelsy that ever flowed from human lips, and where the holy incense of prayer floats heavenward, morn and night. Talk about finding the secret hiding-place of happiness in gold and silver, in real estate and precious gems; it traverses the ethic of sound philosophy and religious science. And why? Because immortal natures—"these souls that never grow old"—can not find "pleasures forevermore" in the transient goods and fleeting chatties of this life.

Then let love have her rightful sway, and begin at once to wield pleasure's magic wand by lifting up the head of poverty, giving pleasure where nothing but blows were dealt; by uttering gentle and soft words where cruelty has bowed the head and pierced the heart; by giving sunshine where storm and darkness prevailed, and thus pilot the vessel of humanity away from dangerous reefs and the roar of the breakers out into the open and smooth sea of safety, where the stars glitter again through the passing clouds.

Oh, thou man of stern looks and harsh expressions, of contracted sympathies and forgotten loves, begin "at high-twelve to-day" by taking pleasure's magic wand in your hand, and then witness, with ecstasy, the magnetic magnetism that will encircle your home! Just let the sun of pleasure shine once more into your home and heart. It will be grand, sublime, wonderfully entrancing; it will turn your heart to a gold mine of pleasure; while good humor and happiness will flow out like a crystal river; and it will be "worth a capital of five thousand dollars a year." We have the word for it of the good and wise Bishop who summons it at Ocean Springs.

Be Filled with the Spirit.

Why not? Is there anything unreasonable in such a command? We can be full of almost everything else, why not of the Spirit. This man is full of business, and this man full of politics, and this one full of pleasure. Why not be full of the Holy Spirit?

It is not as easy to serve God as it is to serve Satan? Here is a man full of unbelief; may I not be full of faith? Here is another full of anger; may I not be full of love? My neighbor is full of cunning; may I not be full of praise? The fullness of the Spirit is Christ's legacy to his church. It came upon his disciples at Pentecost, and abode with them. Stephen was "full of the Holy Ghost." Paul exhorts the Ephesians to be "filled with the Spirit." But if the Spirit comes in, sin must go out. If we would have the Spirit dwell, or abide, in us, we must part company with every other guest. He will not share honors with a foreign foe. The Spirit must have all, and to his he is entitled. He is the teacher, the guide, the sanctifier, the comforter.

The great need of the church is the fullness of the Holy Spirit. We have wealth, and culture, and social influence, and almost everything but "power from on high," which can come only of the Holy Spirit. Without this wealth is a curse, culture fosters self-conceit, and social influence is pride of position, making our rule more dark and certain. When filled with the Spirit wealth is employed in building gospel chariots, culture seeks only to make truth and duty more plain, and social influence is turned to lifting up the fallen and saving the lost. Who will fail to see the fullness of the Spirit?—Christian Witness.

Husbands and Peaches.

The following instructions were given by a minister's wife in Saginaw, Mich., in reply to the question: "How can a young woman best preserve the love of her husband?"

Husbands, like peaches, will not keep the year round unless they are well preserved. First, select him carefully. Be sure he is not too green, neither should he be overripe. He might look very tempting and mellow in the market, but if he is too old he will not stand the test of the preserving process, but will expose his hard, stony heart. Husbands grown in the tropics of pleasure look very fine, but are usually insipid. The home-grown are best. Select your husband, if possible, from a family tree growing on the sunny side of a church. You will be sure then that he is sound at heart. Unsound husbands, like unsound peaches, often have to be sorrowfully cast away.

Having selected your husband, you should have a clear, steady, cheery line of love. Your preserving kettle must be "meat and clean." Husbands, like peaches, look very black if this is omitted. Give him plenty of sweetness. Much sugar is needed. Vinegar is never used in sweet preserves. If you think he demands a little spice, use it with caution. Do not keep stirring him up, neither should you keep poking him with sharp points to see if he is done; it will spoil his looks. If the above recipe is followed, and you have selected the right sort of husband, you will find his love well preserved.

We mustn't be in a hurry to fix and choose our own lot; we must wait to be guided. We are led on, like the little children, by a way that we know not. It is a vain thought to flee from the work that God appoints us, for the sake of finding a greater blessing to our own souls; as if we could choose for ourselves where we shall find the divine presence. Instead of seeking where alone it is to be found, in loving obedience.—George Elliot.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

THE BOY THAT LAUGHS.

I know a funny little boy—
The happiest ever born;
His face is like a beam of joy
Although his clothes are torn.
Although his clothes are torn.

I saw him tumble on his nose,
And wait for a groan—
But how he laughed! Do you suppose
He struck his funny-bone?

There's sunshine in each word he speaks,
His laugh is something grand;
Its ripples overrun his cheeks.
Like waves on snowy sand.

He laughs the moment he awakes,
And till the day is done;
The school-room for a joke he takes—
His lessons are but fun.

No matter how the day may go,
You can not make him cry;
He's worth a dozen boys I know,
Who pout, and moan and sigh.

—Wide Awake.

To Japan.

AS FAR AS CHATTANOOGA.

The beans and tomatoes which are grown at Enterprise for the Cincinnati market disappeared from view; blackberries and peaches showed themselves along the way. In Japan I have every day tomatoes just like those; but Japanese beans are not good to my palate. The peaches are all right, but the wild berries are almost flavorless. The cotton had just been chopped, and the corn, as seen from the car window, was two or three feet high. These are cultivated by the Japanese, but do not grow half as large as in America. Much corn was seen in the journey, but the sight of cotton in Japan was like meeting an old acquaintance changed by time and circumstance.

From Meriden to Nashville are three routes at the same cost. The one by Chattanooga having been chosen, as far as Birmingham there was the company of Rev. J. V. Penn. He has friends in Japan. We slept as the train passed many regions in Alabama dear to me by the associations of childhood. The loss of a glimpse at the scenery near Epps's Station is always to be regretted. Upon and about the cliffs of the Tombigbee there much tragedy occurred in Indian times. A teacher who wrote an article upon them for one of the monthly magazines was paid $500. Some who read this might, by careful study and practice, learn to do as well.

The next morning, at the waking hour, the train was passing through a corner of Georgia. Lookout Mountain was upon the right, and Chattanooga not far ahead.

A Story for the Children.

MR. EDITOR: A few weeks ago, in preching to the children, I told them about the heathen children, who do not know about Jesus, nor his love for them, and how they all might do something to help teach these poor heathen the way to love Jesus. There was to be a theatre in town the next Monday night. I told them the theatre was not a good place to go, and asked them if they would not stay away from it, and give me the money it would cost to go, and let me send it to the missionaries to help them in leading the children to Jesus. I am sorry to say that some of the children went to the theatre; but one sweet little girl, named Sally, brought me twenty-five cents, and said, "Here is the money for not going to the theatre." I hope this story of little Sally's self-denial, and her desire to do good, may encourage many other children to do like her—to stay away from places where good people and children ought not to go, and to all they can to make others happy, and to lead them to Jesus, that they may love him, and that he may make them happy while they are in this world, and take them to heaven when they die. Many of the little folks who may read this could give twenty-five cents for missions, and I hope they will do so. If they would do without candy and toys sometimes, and give the money these would cost to missionary societies and other good things, how much good they might do, and how happy it would make them; and Jesus would love them, because they tried to be like him.

J. D. HARPER.

MR. EDITOR: I thought I would write a few lines to the dear old Advocate to-day, as I have never written a letter to the cousins before. I love to read the dear old Advocate, as it is always full of good reading. My father is a preacher. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. We have a good Sunday-school here. We have Bro. J. B. Streeter, our Sunday-school superintendent, and think he is the best in the State. Our school started the third of October. We have a large school. Prof. J. R. Edmonds is our teacher. We all like him so much. I will close by asking some of the little cousins a question: Where is the word "bitter" found in the Bible? With kindest love to you, dear editor, and all the cousins, and wishing the dear old Advocate much success, I remain, Your unknown friend,

Where Music-Boxes Are Made.

The old industry of Geneva, Switzerland, is the manufacture of music-boxes. Thousands of men, women and children are employed in the factories, one of which was visited by a young American, who thus writes about the visit:

An attendant invited him to take a seat. He did so, and strains of delightful music came from the chair. He hung his hat on a rack, and put his traveling staff in the stand. Music came from both rack and stand. He wrote his name in the visiting register, and, on dipping his pen in the ink, the music burst forth from the inkstand.

The manager of the factory explained the process of making music-boxes, a business which requires patience and nicety. The different parts are made by men who are experts in those parts, and they do nothing else, year in and year out. The music is marked on the cylinder by a man who has served several years of apprenticeship. Another man inserts in the marked places pegs which have been filed to a uniform-length. The comb or set of teeth which strikes the pegs, and makes the sound, is arranged by a man who does nothing else. The cylinder is then revolved to see that every peg produces a proper tone.

The most delicate work of all is the revolving of each peg. It is done by a workman who has a good ear of music. He sees that each peg is in its proper place, and bent at the correct angle. When the instrument is in its case, an expert examines it to see that the time is perfect and good.

The best workmen—those who mark the cylinder and adjust the pegs—earn a dollar and eighty cents a day, after serving an apprenticeship of ten or twelve years. An ordinary workman earns a dollar a day.—Chicago Journal.

SCIENTIFIC.

Historical Notes on the Gold Cure.

BY PROF. H. CARRINGTON HOLTON.

Avoiding all discussions of the merits or demerits of the so-called bio-chemical-gold cure, now so prominently forced on the public attention, we propose to show that the use of gold, in its various forms, is not only a common remedy, but to indicate the opinions held with respect to alleged cures of gold in past ages.

The precious metal has been employed externally, internally and by sympathy, for a great number of thousands of years, for a great number of thousands of years, for a great number of thousands of years. Evidently the alchemists and the alchemists, imagined that some of the noble properties of the precious metal world, in some mysterious way, be transferred to the patient who took it.

Something of this sympathetic and mental effect was evidently sought to be attained in the very first instance of the administration of gold recorded in history. "And Moses took the golden calf which they had made and burnt it with fire, and ground it to powder and strewn it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it." (Exodus xxxii, 20).

Pliny, in his marvelous compilation, "Natural History," written about 70 A. D., has a paragraph on the "medicinal virtues of gold, which in divers ways is effectual in the cure of many diseases. For first of all, sovereign it is for green wounds if it be outwardly applied." Pliny describes a form of Haimum of gold, "correlated with salt and schist" which "healed the foul tetter that appeareth in the face," fistulas, etc., and he alludes to a preparation of gold in honey which "doth gently loose the belly if the navel be anointed therewith." In conclusion, Pliny quotes Marcus Varro as authoritatively for the statement that gold will cause worms to fall off. This carries back the belief to a century before Christ.

The Arabian physicians, who, for numbers of years, possessed almost exclusive knowledge of chemistry, often record the virtues of gold as a remedial agent in disease. Geber, Avicenna and Arnold de Villanova, all wrote in its praise.

The preparations of gold in a potable, innocuous form occupied the attention of the alchemists during many centuries. They commonly called it aureum potable, and ascribed to it not only remedial virtues, but the power of prolonging life. Ashmole (1682) says of this elixir: "It is doubtless the true Alchodion, or giver of years, for by it man's body is preserved from corruptions, being thereby enabled to live a long time without food; nay, 'tis made a question whether any man can die that useth it."

The alchemists argued that this golden elixir is not to be made from vulgar gold, but only by philosophical gold prepared by hermetic art. Recipes for manufacturing this panacea abound in alchemical works; they are mostly very tedious, requiring much faith and imagination on the part of the operator, and the product used rarely contains the gold, which is generally thrown away in the waste products. Roger Bacon, the Franciscan friar of the thirteenth century, to whom so many wonderful inventions and discoveries have been ascribed, had unbounded faith in the elixir of life and wrote of its wonderful powers to Pope Nicolas IV.

The belief in a life-prolonging elixir, sometimes claimed of the elixir of gold, and sometimes of secret preparations, prevailed for centuries. Even so great a philosopher as Descartes believed he had attained the art of living a few hundred years; this belief was shared by some of his friends, and when he died before reaching sixty years they concluded he must have been poisoned.

Oswald Croll, a German physician of the sixteenth century, taught that "the two greatest lights of Heaven, the two principal parts of Man, viz., the Heart and Brain, in things of Nature lately rests in Gold. . . . For Nature had endowed Gold with no contemptible virtues which whose knows how to draw out, and by ingenious artifice is able rightly to use. He will find Gold, which seemed so dead and barren, so lively and pregnant that it germinates, and of itself produces new Gold. . . . Paracelsus and Glauber are also among the famous physicians and chemists who lauded the efficacy of gold.

Robert Boyle, in his Usefulness of Natural Experimental Philosophy (1663), was the first to suggest a doubt of the efficacy of potable gold, and in the eleventh edition of Lemeray's Cours de Chimie we read that "potable gold, so much praised by the alchemists, is commonly only a vegetable or a mineral uncture of the color of gold, which sometimes excites perspiration," but he intimates that the gold, if present, has nothing to do with it.

The medical virtues of gold appear to have no basis save credulity and superstition, and, we may say with Ludovic, "It is better to make good out of medicines than medicines out of gold."—Popular Science Monthly.

MUSCULAR ACTION CONNECTED WITH MENTAL SENSATIONS.—The outward sign of a joyful emotion is a drawing up of the corner of the mouth. The elevation of the angles of the mouth is the muscular action going parallel with the emotion of joy. The excitation of the nerve center causes the elevator to act. There is but one definite idea from which the elevator muscles can be made to act, therefore joyful emotions must take their start from this center. When, then, a joyful emotion excites this definite portion of gray matter, a nerve-current passes to the lower center—the center for the movement of the elevator muscles—and causes them to act. As the brain is a very complex machine, other effects may be produced at the same time, but this one has always been associated particularly with exalting emotions. Persons of very cheerful dispositions make the elevators act so frequently that the mechanism of the nerve-display is easier appreciated; these special impressions. The elevators will be in time so accustomed to act that they will leave impressions on the face so marked to enable people to recognize who are of such disposition.—Exchange.

ANIMAL ELECTRICITY.—In a discussion of the electric supply of certain animals—such as the Gymnotus electricus and the Raja torpedio—M. d'Arsonval states that the phenomenon is governed by the will. A shock is not always given when the animal is touched; but only when it wishes. The electrical apparatus of the Gymnotus is underneath the animal, the positive pole being at its head and the negative at its tail. To give violent shocks it curls itself into a circle, and completes the electrical circuit through the body of its prey. M. d'Arsonval has one of these creatures that is capable of magnetizing electric magnets, and of giving a maximum pressure of 100 volts and a maximum current of probably two amperes. In the Gymnotus the discharge is continuous and in one direction, but it is not so in the Raja. Laboratory experiments show that the electricity may be explained by the alteration in the shape of the protoplasmic cells when excited, as a negative variation accompanies such deformation, the surrounding liquid being positive.—Exchange.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Mrs. Harrison, the wife of the President, was buried in Indianapolis on Oct. 28.

Moody and Sankey are said to have received $1,200,000 in royalties from their Gospel Hymns.

The new postal card, with paid reply, has been placed on sale at all first-class postoffices throughout the country.

The nineteenth Annual Convention of the W. C. T. U. was opened in Denver, Col., on Oct. 28. The convention was called to order by the president, Miss Willard.

The sixteenth Annual Convention of the American Humane Association was held in Philadelphia, last week. The delegates came from all parts of the country. The convention was called to order by the president, L. H. Eaton, of Pittsburgh.

The Grunewald Hall, in this city, was burned on Oct. 31, at half past two A. M. Five persons who occupied the fifth floor of the building were saved by firemen. The opera house was valued at about $200,000, and insured for $170,000.

Liquors will be sold in Jackson Park during the World's Fair. After a long discussion, the National Commission decided that it would not interfere with contracts made by the Chicago directors for the sale of light beverages and stimulants.

The strike of the Draymen's and Warehousemen's Unions in this city continues, and, although the mercantile houses have in many instances secured employees outside of the unions, much inconvenience is experienced and business is retarded.

Milwaukee, Wis., was swept by a disastrous fire on the night of Oct. 28. About $15,000,000 worth of property was destroyed. Hundreds of poor householders carried in their arms whatever they had been able to seize before they were obliged to flee from their burning homes.

The reign of terror which has been inaugurated by some of the strikers at Homestead, Pa., still continues, and it is hard to tell what the final result will be. There is a strong feeling among the law-abiding citizens to petition the governor to have the troops returned and the town put under martial law.

The stage of water in the Ohio river is lower than at any time for five years, and navigation has been practically suspended from Pittsburgh since July 15. At the Pittsburgh wharf there are over two hundred steamboats and tugboats, and at every landing are great fleets unable to move. The loss to river men has already reached into the hundreds of thousands.

At the closing of the Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, at Denver, Lady Somerset will return immediately to New York, to sail Nov. 10 on the Majestic for England, where she will address mass meetings throughout Scotland, Wales and the north of England, in the interest of temperance. Miss Anna Gordon and Miss Willard will accompany her.

The Baku Standard Oil Company has been formed in Berlin. Its aim is to compete with the American Standard Oil Company for the German market.

Excepting the semi-official papers, the whole German press declares the military bill impossible. If the increase of expenditure continues, the country will be bankrupt.

The German steamship companies have agreed not to forward Russians or Hungarians to the United States so long as cholera exists in Russia and Hungary.

The French art jury for the Chicago Exposition, composed of twenty-eight of the leading sculptors and painters of France, have already passed on over 250 pictures destined for the World's Fair.

Emperor William will open the Reichstag in person on Nov. 22. While the Imperial Parliament is wearing over the army bill, the Prussian Landtag, which has been summoned to meet on Nov. 9, will be involved in an eager party fight on the fiscal reforms.

A wealthy Australian has bought the late Lord Alfred Conyngham's birthplace, Somerby, in Lincolnshire, which he intends to convert into a museum for relics, etc., similar to the Shakespeare-Hawley cottage, at Stratford-on-Avon.

The Bureau of American Republics has been officially informed of the inauguration at San Salvador, the capital of the republic of El Salvador, of a mint recently ordered established there. The establishment will be conducted under the name of the Central American Mint, Limited.

Supreme confidence prevails in the innermost ministerial circle regarding the absolute unanimity of the English Cabinet committee on the home rule scheme. With the committee in unison, dissension among the minor members of the Cabinet is impossible. And it is certain that the bill will be presented in Parliament without the remotest chance of any minister breaking loose from his colleagues.

With a view to averting the calamitous effects that would follow the threatened strike among the cotton operatives, the mayors of Liverpool and Manchester are trying to induce the disponents to consent to arbitrating their differences. The impending struggle is anxiously discussed on the Manchester Exchange. It is estimated that the threatened strike will affect 18,000,000 spindles. If 18,000,000 spindles stop, 52,000 persons, a large proportion of whom are women and children, will be idle. The operatives' organization is well prepared for a long struggle. Their funds already amount to 120,000 pounds sterling. The unaffected operatives are binding themselves to pay special levies during the strike.

A Plain Talk.

ON A PLAIN SUBJECT IN PLAIN LANGUAGE.

A Winter is just before us with all of its biting winds, cold, drizzling rains, sloppy, muddy streets, and sudden changes of temperature. This will cause at least one-half of the people to have catarrh, colds, coughs, pneumonia, or consumption. Thousands of people will lose their lives and tens of thousands will acquire some chronic ailment from which they will never recover. Unless you take the necessary precautions, the chances are that you (who read this) will be one of the unfortunate ones. Little or no risk need be run if Pe-ru-na is kept in the house, and at the first appearance of any symptom take it as directed on the label. No one who values his welfare should be without a copy of The Family Physician No. 2, a complete guide to the treatment and prevention of all climatic diseases of Winter. Important Discoveries.

Four hundred years after Christopher Columbus discovered America, we discovered that the Young People of "The Sunny South" were searching for some medium published in their own fair Southern land that would not only tell them all about Columbus' great discovery, but also about all other discoveries of special interest to them. We accordingly proceeded to publish our discovery in the form of a handsome monthly magazine, entitled "SOUTHERN SCENES," and containing from 60 to 100 pages of finely illustrated reading matter, consisting of short stories, also continued stories, new games, puzzles, out-door sports, and in fact everything for the amusement, instruction and interest of young people. During the past year we have further discovered that fully 25,000 of these young people have been minutely interested in SCENES, and send us each $1.00 for their yearly subscription to it. Now we want to discover 25,000 more of the same sort, and as an inducement for you to assist us in our exploration, we propose offering you the following splendid premium:

If you will send us $1.00 we will not only send you SOUTHERN SCENES for one year, but we will also send you Washington Irving's history of The Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus, which is a handsome bound book of 756 pages, containing a complete account of the famous discoverer's life, and all of his voyages. Also illustrations of his fleet which first came to America, and the "Santa Maria," "Pinta" and "Nina." This book alone is worth more than the total amount of the subscription, and besides that you will have all the nice things we shall discover and publish in SCENES for one year. Send 10 cts for a sample copy of SCENES, or, better still, send $1.00 and get the Magazine and Premium.

Quarantining Literature.

A serious epidemic has threatened the country. Though every precaution known to science was taken to bar its entrance into our land, yet for awhile it marched onward in its devastating career. Grim death stalked abroad, and men and women knew not how soon their homes might be invaded. It was well that they should put their houses in order, that they should let the sunlight pour with healing and purifying power into all the dark and noisome places, and that the atmosphere should be rendered sweet and wholesome. They who had precious lives entrusted to their charge felt that those should be jealously guarded so far as human foresight could accomplish it. All were as a unit in this respect, and the country rose as one man to oppose the invader. Down at the gateways to our shores stood sentinels who said, "Thus far shall they come and no farther," while they turned a deaf ear to the walls of the sick and the dying. It came to be a question of the greatest good for the greatest number; for it was known that were the disease permitted to leave its lair, it would roam this land like

An Evening in the House of Commons.

During my recent visit to the Old World, I had the never-to-be-forgotten pleasure and privilege of an evening in the British Parliament—the historic evening, Aug. 11, when the division took place resulting in the overthrow of the Salisbury government and the triumph of Mr. Gladstone. Having been in the United Kingdom since the "appeal to the country"—the dissolution of Parliament and the beginning of the electoral campaign—I had become quite familiar with the issues involved, and the staple arguments of the most popular speakers on either side. On the Conservative side Mr. Balfour and Mr. Chamberlain were most in demand for the platform, and on behalf of the Liberals, Mr. Gladstone, John Morley and Sir Wm. Harcourt were the best campaigners. Their speeches and meetings were fully and fairly reported in all the papers—even those in opposition—so the electors were able to make intelligent decisions. In that respect the English newspaper is worthy of all honor, and of American emulation. The incidents of a political meeting, and the speeches of the occasion, are as fairly and correctly reported by opposition papers as those most ardently partisan. The facts are given, however vigorously the editorial columns may speak in answer to their arguments.

For two weeks—at his magnificent country home, "Oakworth House," near the city of Bradford, in Yorkshire—I was the guest of Hon. Isaac Holden, a member of Parliament, just re-elected without opposition. He is a strong Gladstonian, as are also his son, Hon. Angus Holden, and his son-in-law, Hon. Alfred Illingworth, themselves members of the House of Commons, whom I had the pleasure to know, and from whom I was the recipient of most distinguished courtesies.

On my return from the Continent, I called, by appointment, at their London home, near St. James Park, Westminster, to meet a cordial welcome and to receive valued attentions.

Parliament had been in session several days, the debate on the Queen's speech had about concluded, and the final vote was to take place that night, which would decide the fate of the government. It was, of course, well understood that the decision would be in favor of Mr. Gladstone, and that he would at once be summoned by the Queen to form a new Ministry. But the interest was intense, and excited groups of leading politicians in the parlors and libraries of the clubs were discussing the situation.

I had the pleasure of lunching with my Parliamentary friends at the Reform Club, a magnificent building on Pall Mall street, and of being introduced to some of the notables, if not nobles. Together we also visited the Liberal Club and other places of rare interest, and from them I received much valued information concerning the inner history of some political issues and party divisions, and many instructive incidents in the lives of present and late leaders.

At six o'clock, by appointment, I was at Westminster, elbowing my way through the eager crowd into St. Stephen's Hall, and sent my card to Mr. Illingworth. Since the famous Guy Fawkes affair—whose house, by the way, I saw up in Yorkshire—and the dynamite fright some years ago, the almost precaution is exercised in admitting visitors. Only those can gain entrance—and a very limited number at best—who have the tickets, or personal escort of members; and the gallery accommodation is very meager. Soon my friend appeared, and conducted me safely down the long corridor, by policemen and soldiers—passed two or more doorkeepers wearing medals and badges, up a stairway or two, and, much to my surprise and delight, into the "Peers' Gallery." I had the most eligible seat, in full view of the Speaker and the coveted "front benches" occupied by the government and opposition leaders. The Speaker, in full robes and wearing a long white wig, has an elevated seat beneath a small canopy, and at the desk just below are two or three clerks, also in robes and powdered wigs. Above the Speaker is the "Reporter's Gallery," and above that, and to the rear, is the "Ladies' Gallery," screened by bars, or wire, through which the handsomely dressed, ambitious wives of statesmen were eagerly peering, and giving anxious attention to the debate in progress. To them social prestige was involved, while to their husbands and friends political triumph or defeat. The construction, equipment and general appearance of the Hall somewhat disappointed me—affording accommodation for only about two-thirds of the members elect. When all attend, as that night, some have to find seats in the side galleries, provided for visitors. There are no desks, and most of the members sit with their hats on. When one arose, however, he doffed his heaver and held it in his hand. I heard some speeches, but failed to hear Mr. Chamberlain, who had already made his aggressive attack upon his former Liberal associates. The Solicitor General and several others spoke to a thin house, and to me their speeches were rather commonplace. Of course, I was most anxious to see Mr. Gladstone—confessedly the most conspicuous figure in English statesmanship, and a name most highly honored the world over. Much to my gratification, the venerable leader soon came in and occupied his accustomed seat on the front bench. As he looked up at the galleries I caught the flash of his large brilliant eyes, whose youthful fire contrasted strangely with the furrows of age on brow and cheek. When he arose and moved to the Speaker's chair for a private conference his step seemed quite elastic, and as he walked out into the lobby his erect, martial figure had the expression of one born to rule—an unknights-chief, an uncorrupted king. My reverence for this statesman of peerless genius and lofty, stainless character was heightened by that half-honored personal study, whatever may be his views on the great issue he is now championing with such consummate ability. Just opposite sat the young leader of the government and First Lord of the Treasury, the Rt. Hon. A. J. Balfour. Tall, thin, pale, with the brow of a philosopher and the clear eye of genius, that young man, not yet forty, is, next to Mr. Gladstone, the most conspicuous and potential personality in the politics of Great Britain. He has possibly made more reputation within the past six years than any man in the nation, and is destined to fill a large place in the history of his country. Many others were pointed out to me as the debate progressed; but of them I need not write.

After being conducted through the libraries, lobbies, corridors, dining-rooms, and down the great verandah which overlooks the Thames, with Lambeth Palace, the official residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, just across the historic stream, we returned to St. James Park for dinner at half-past eight o'clock.

Having to leave early next morning for Liverpool—stopping at Stratford-on-Avon en route—I could not return to Westminster, but to my hotel to make final preparations for the journey homeward. For the privilege of that eventful evening I shall ever be grateful. Your readers have so often seen descriptions of the Parliament Buildings, with their paintings, statues, ornaments, etc., I need not consume space with mere repetition.

I return now in love with my native land and better satisfied that Providence has appointed me to the noblest national destiny.

Letter from Oregon.

MR. EDITOR: Do you wish a bit of Oregon experience? I am much hurried with work; but, if you will, allow a little rambling, I will spend a little while.

Last of July I spent most of one night crossing two divides, went through nine tunnels and a thirty-mile canyon to Roseburg, 69½ miles toward Portland. The next day we (for here I overtook others; we have no preacher in this 90 miles, though there are thousands of people) started over the Coast Range to Myrtle Point, the seat of our District Conference. On stage it is one day—nearly 70 miles; fast it is one day, with four-in-hand team, two days; double team, three days. We took the two latter, as it requires too many shekels for an Oregonian preacher to indulge in time-saving by taking stage when he can go other-wise. Much more than half the distance is right down the romantic Coquille river. In many places the road is cut in the solid rock, and is just wide enough for the vehicle, and we look hundreds of feet below to the river and the projecting rock nearly across our path above, with the mountain thousands of feet above us on either side; or, rather, on our left and over our heads. Sometimes the valley widens to one-fourth, or even one-half a mile wide, and, perhaps, longer along the river, and here we would find one to four settlers. Most of them wanted to sell, but their prices ran into the thousands, which must have been several hundred dollars per acre for the valley land, and $5 to $20 for the mountain-side, up which a cow might graze if she had stakes on the lower side to hold her up.

The Conference, which was held at Myrtle Point, was a time of profit or pleasure. The thing of most intense interest to us was the report of the Committee on Missions, in which the great destitution in the bounds of our district was considered. Three out of the six counties composing the district were found to be almost entirely destitute of preaching by any church, and there are nearly 30,000 people in this territory; and in the portion occupied by us there are thousands who are equally destitute. One brother told of an instance where, eleven years ago, he preached a sermon, and there was a lady present who had a child three months old with her, and this was the first sermon the mother had ever heard. A few months ago he was there, and this mother and her eleven-year-old daughter walked several miles to hear the second sermon of their lives. Oh, when will our people awake to the need of this Western work? Had we the money and the men, we could use ten or fifteen men. Who will help?

We were favored with a trip by steamer to the coast, at Bandon, which was an enjoyable occasion to me. As I watched the incoming waves of the Pacific, they seemed almost as if impatient at the obstruction the great wall of rocks made to them, and the roar seemed to me as if they would say, "Let me go and greet my great Atlantic sister-wave."

But I must leave my second and third experiences for another letter.

Parsonage Report.

The building of a parsonage in Ocean Springs is an event so remarkable that some account of the work deserves mention. A few years ago such an undertaking seemed visionary; but the good hand of the Lord has been with us, controlling the favorable circumstances which have combined within the past two years to make it a practical reality.

Since the four-years' pastorate of Rev. R. B. Downer on this circuit, the need of such a home has been painfully real. His residence among us, with a wife and four rapidly growing children, although owning his home, was marked by many privations, hardships and sacrifices, which he bore with humble submission. The main idea in those days was to raise the pastor's salary, which, when collected, seemed meagre, indeed. Had house rent been added to his list of expenses, the dread alternatives of debt or suffering would have stared him in the face. The prayers of this good man often seemed like the outpouring of a heart full of humble acquiescence in the will of God, but ready to bleed from the plinths of poverty and the weariness of toil. After listening to them, one could not repress the exclamation, "Surely a crown is awaiting Mr. Downer—a martyr's crown!"

When Rev. G. F. Thompson, of precious memory, succeeded him, broken in health and without money, then commenced the anxious search for a cheap house, and the burden of rent. Out of a salary of $300 per year, they wanted to pay just $50 annually for house rent, but compromised on $75, to insure room for a school, Mrs. Thompson being a born teacher, and too energetic and independent to lean alone upon her husband's salary. Here was a heroic character. She contrived to purchase a home during their second year on this work, and had just demolished themselves when the unexpected summons came to him. "It is enough; come up higher." She has since been called hence, and her labors and struggles for independence and ease have been exchanged for the rest and peace of heaven. Long will her memory abide with us.

But to come to more recent dates. We are all familiar with the polished and eloquent sermons of Dr. Harmon and the dignified sweetness of his wife. We are also familiar with his experience in house hunting; and with the fact that out of a salary of $25 per month from this place, and the almost insignificant amounts from the other charges, he assumed a rent of $11 monthly for the first year, and $12.50 for the second. Of course, embarrassment ensued; but it is easy to see that if a home, free of rent, had been placed at his service, life would have been smoother and happier. His obligations were all met; but I wish to say just here, that out of Dr. Harmon's financial travail was this parsonage born, for the very desperation of his case impelled me to undertake the work of collecting funds for a preacher's home.

Bishop Keener was the first person to whom I mentioned the subject, who encouraged me by a prompt donation of $100. Subsequently, through the suggestion of our presiding elder, Rev. I. W. Cooper, and the kindly interest of Bishops Keener and Galloway, coupled with the apathy of the Scranton Methodists, we obtained an appropriation of $300 which had been made by the Church Board of Extension for a parsonage at that place.

Upon this foundation the work has progressed until our receipts and disbursements have reached the sum of $1,026.70; $336 of which resulted from a series of entertainments. Donations in response to personal appeal have come from various quarters and in various amounts: from the Bishop, $100; and the gift of the lot, with $50 in cash, from Mr. A. Baldwin, of New Orleans; and $50 cash from an elderly lady of eighty-four years of age, in our church, down to the small sum of ten cents.

Our work is not complete. When the parsonage is fenced, painted and insured, it will be an ornament to the village and a credit to Coast Methodism. This is the work before us; but, as our help has come from the Great Architect above, we falter not, but humbly pray that "the beauty of the Lord our God may be upon us," and that he will "establish the work of our hands."

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

The gifts of God to our people during the past year have been so abundant and so special that the spirit of the devout thanksgiving awaits not a call, but only the appointment of a day when it may have a common expression. He has stayed the pestilence at our door; he has given us more love for the free civil institutions in the creation of which his directing providence was so conspicuous. He has awakened a deeper reverence for law; he has witnessed our philanthropy by a call to succor the distress in other lands; he has blessed our schools, and is bringing forward a patriotic and God-fearing generation to execute his great and benevolent designs for our country; he has given us great increase in material wealth and a wide diffusion of contentment and comfort in the homes of our people; he has given his grace to the sorrowing. Wherefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, do call on all of our people to observe, as we have been wont, Thursday, the 24th day of this month (November), as a day of thanksgiving to God for his meritorious and of supplication for his continued care and grace.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington this 4th day of November, 1892, and of the independence of the United States the 117th.

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

By the President: JOHN W. FOSTER, Secretary of State.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. T. H. McClendon, Nov. 1: "A good meeting at Harrisonburg. Membership quickened; four accessions; interest increased to the last; assisted by Rev. C. T. Munholland. A large proportion of our people have made nothing, being overflooded until too late. Many in actual want. A goodly number of hands leaving the swamp in search for something to do and something to eat. All our collections will be lower than ever before. But little in the country that can be turned into money to lighten the burden. But whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."

Rev. B. F. Whitto, P. O., Monroe, La., Oct. 31: "We have to-day just twice as many on our church roll as we had reported to us by Bro. Upton. He reported 167; last year I reported 288; now we have 334. Congregations large and attentive; Sunday-school good, but would be far better with more consecrated teachers. Finances guaranteed by a strong Board of Stewards. We thank God and take courage."

Rev. H. P. Crowe, Shaw, Miss., Oct. 29: "The town officials and legal voters of the town of Shaw, Miss., have circulated a petition forbidding the granting of any more licenses to retail vinous, spirituous, or malt liquors, or intoxicating drinks of any kind, to any person in said town, for the period of twelve months. Three-fourths of the legal voters signed this petition. Saloons must go. Three have gone this year; two more will go as soon as the license expires. This is God's country; the devil has had his way long enough. Saloonists are signing our petition."

Rev. W. T. Woodward: "We have just closed a wonderful revival at Killian Chapel Church. This church deserves credit, indeed. It was built two years ago by an old sinner who had been serving the devil for sixty-five years. Through the prayers of a godly wife, and other Christian influences, he was awakened and stirred from his worldly nest, and gave his heart to God. He went to work and built a church. The first sermon preached in it, he joined, and was immediately appointed steward. Rev. H. Mellard was then pastor. We commenced the services last Saturday. The brethren were very much disappointed on account of no ministerial aid in sight, save the pastor, who was very unwell. I preached at eleven o'clock A. M. from Luke xi, 13, and showed them it was God we wanted, and not man's help. Before the service closed the power came, and remained through the whole meeting. Souls were convicted of sin and converted to God. Some of the most indifferent and hardest sinners were made to feel the power of God to save. We closed the meeting Thursday, with 16 accessions and 18 praying in public. Many thanks to the lay brethren of Pine Grove for valuable services rendered in the way of singing and praying."

Rev. D. F. Gulce, Burton circuit, Oct. 28: "The Lord has graciously visited us during the year at every point on the charge. We have held four protracted meetings. The first at Carpenter. We had to assist us here Bros. N. J. Roberts and G. A. Gulce. They preached the Word with power, and the Spirit accompanied the Word as preached by them. We had 2 accessions. The second was at Plagah. At this place we protracted the third Quarterly Conference, and had our much-esteemed presiding elder with us three days, preaching with power the words of life. After Monday, Bro. G. A. Gulce did the preaching to the satisfaction and edification of all. Had 4 accessions, several conversions, and the church revived. The third was at Burton, Bros. N. J. Roberts and I. B. Robertson assisting. Bro. I. B. Robertson did the principal preaching, and those who have known him before say he preached with greater power than common. There were 10 accessions, and the members all revived. The fourth was at Sarepta, Bros. Homer Benton and M. J. Marble assisting. Bro. Benton did most of the preaching here, preaching to the satisfaction of all. Had 2 accessions, and many of the old members were revived. We have held our fourth Quarterly Conference, Mr. Editor, and our collections were somewhat behind; but we expect to report on the fourteenth of December, on the Conference floor at Natchez, everything paid up in full."

J. W. Long, Philadelphia, Miss., Nov. 1: "The fourth Quarterly Conference for Natchez circuit was held at Philadelphia, Oct. 29 and 30. Our much-beloved presiding elder was at his post, full of the Spirit of God, and preached three sermons that will long be remembered, and, we think, will result in much good. On Saturday night Rev. John McDonald, a local prosesor of Beech Springs, preached a highly appreciated sermon. The collections for this circuit are not all paid up in full yet; but our pastor is doing all in his power to get them up by Conference. We hope he will be successful in getting them up. This has been one year that the Lord has blessed the work on this circuit by converting many souls, and many backsliders reclaimed. There has been quite a number of accessions to the churches this year up to date, and more to join. This is the fourth year that Bro. Long has been on this circuit, and some of the people hate to give him up; but, according to the rules of the Conference, he will have to move after Conference. Our church at Philadelphia has been greatly revived this year. We attended the protracted meeting there, and heard several say the meeting had done them a great deal of good. Bro. Long was assisted in his meeting there by the following preachers: Rev. Irvin Miller, W. W. Cammack, J. Atwood, C. M. Atwood, J. A. Burton. Bro. Miller did nearly all the preaching, while the rest did the altar work. We pray that God will bless all these brethren in their fields of labor wherever they are sent, for we know that they are going to work earnestly for the Lord. At the Quarterly Conference one Indian was given license to preach. His name is Simpson J. Tubby. He is very well educated, and we think that he will, with the help of God, do his race a wonderful sight of good by inducing them to turn from their evil ways and follow God. Bro. Cammack is still working faithfully among the Indians. We pray that the Spirit of God may always be with him. Pray for us."

Rev. F. B. Ormond, L. P., Why Not Circuit: "I have just wound up my protracted meetings for the season. Since my last article to the Advocate I have held on my work three meetings, and assisted in one. The first meeting was at Coker's Chapel, on the Marion circuit, Rev. Geo. Banoroff, pastor. This meeting began on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in September. It being Quarterly Conference occasion, the first three sermons—viz.: Saturday, Sunday, and Sunday night—were preached by our beloved presiding elder, Rev. T. L. Mellen. His preaching was with power and simplicity, and did great good. The preaching during the week was by Bros. Banoroff (P. C.), Moore, and Culpeper (L. P.), and myself. I preached four sermons. The meeting proved a blessing to the community. We closed on Thursday night, which is long to be remembered by the congregation. The Holy Spirit came in power that night, and it was, indeed, a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Seven applications for church membership, and six of those applied on the last night of meeting. The next meeting was held on my work, near Causeville, at Hughes' School-house, beginning on Friday night before the first Sunday in October. The meeting continued till Tuesday morning, having two sermons a day, I preaching them all except one. No accessions to the church, but great good done. The Holy Spirit was felt in very great power. I do not feel that my labors were in vain. The next meeting was held at Toombsburg, beginning on Saturday night before the second Sunday. The Lord blessed the church on the occasion of this meeting in the town of Toombsburg. We have no church there, but we occupy the Presbyterian Church, though at the time of my meeting the Presbyterian Church was undergoing repairs, and the Baptist brethren freely and willingly offered us the use of their house. The meeting was a good one. Bro. Banoroff came in Tuesday, and did the balance of the preaching. We closed Wednesday night, with 2 accessions to our church and 1 to the Baptist. To God be all the praise. My next and last meeting was at Oak Grove, where I was assisted by Rev. John W. Chambers, of Enterprise. This meeting began on the third Sunday night. While we had no accessions, yet the meeting did great good. This is a community where the people have had hard feelings toward each other for a number of years, and we succeeded in breaking some of this down. We once had a strong church there, but it was burned by some unknown parties. We hope to rebuild in the near future. I closed the Oak Grove meeting on last Wednesday morning, after holding services for ten days. I was also assisted by Bro. John Alexander, L. P. This winds up my meetings for this season. Now, as to Why Not Church. I am gratified to report that the revival fire has kept burning all along since our meeting in August. Our Wednesday night prayer meetings are well attended, and much good is resulting from them. God be praised."

STRONG SON OF GOD, IMMORTAL LOVE.

BY ALFRED TENNISON.

Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
Whom we, that have not seen thy face,
By faith, and faith alone, embrace,
Believing where we cannot prove:

Thine are these orbs of light and shade;
Thou madest Life in man and brute;
Thou madest Death; and, lo! thy foot
Is on the skull which thou hast made.

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
Thou madest man, he knows not why,
He thinks he was not made to die;
And thou hast made him: thou art just.

Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood, thou;
Our wills are ours, we know not how,
Our wills are ours, to make them thine.

Our little systems have their day;
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord, art more than they.

We have but faith, we cannot know;
For knowledge is of things we see;
And yet we trust it comes from thee,
A beam in darkness: let it grow.

Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell;
That mind and soul according well,
May make one music as before.

But vaster, we are fools and slight;
We mock thee when we do not fear;
But help thy foolish ones to bear;
Help thy vain words to bear thy light.

Forgive what seemed thy sin in me;
What seemed my worth since I began;
For merit lives from man to man,
And not from man, O Lord, to thee.

Forgive my grief for one removed,
Thy creature whom I found so fair;
I trust he lives in thee, and there
I find him worthier to be loved.

Forgive these wild and wandering cries,
Confusions of a wasted youth;
Forgive them where they fall in truth,
And in thy wisdom make me wise.

Conference Claimants.

THE MISSISSIPPI PLAN.

The objection to Dr. Jay Benson Hamilton's plan for the support of the Conference claimants lies in its second provision. Our church can not adopt such a plan without General Conference action. (See Discipline, page 186, ¶ 318.) The annuity feature of the Doctor's plan has no endorsement from Scripture and none in our Discipline. The brother who is able to bear his own burdens ought to bear them. The faithful minister, in his old age, has a richer and fuller reward than any annuity could possibly be. The church of God has no right to disburse her bounties to those who do not need them. The extension of the work, at home and abroad, demands all that willing souls can give after all cases of real necessity have been relieved.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE PLAN.

1. Make the allowance for the coming year, said allowance subject to correction at the expiration of each quarter.
2. Pay the claimants quarterly on receipt of their reports.
3. Have the final settlement at Conference.
4. Refuse to give anything, unless something approximating the facts in the case is received as a report from the claimant.

At the last session of the Mississippi Conference allowances were made to be paid quarterly—April 1, July 1, Oct. 1, and final settlement at Conference. The chairman, secretary and treasurer were constituted a committee with full power to act during the interim of Conference. Immediately after the adjournment of Conference the Board met, and these officers were elected and went to work.

The following form of report is required to be filled and forwarded each quarter:

Has ———— is ———— years old. Is in ——— health.
Has ———— dollars income, derived from ————
Has ———— children under 16 years old.
Please state any other circumstances that the Joint Board ought to know.

The treasurer is provided with a blank form of receipt, with stub, so that preachers in charge forwarding money get by return mail a receipt, and the stub helps the treasurer to keep his accounts straight. The claimants are paid by bank check on Jackson, Miss., and our treasurer accompanies each remittance with a kind note and a blank form of receipt, which the claimant signs and returns. So our financial matters are checked up all around, and our books kept in good shape. We are always ready to give an account of our stewardship.

We have paid off the claimants for the third quarter. Our plan is a success. The system of reports keeps us posted as to the actual necessities of the claimants. Our quarterly payments bring them the needed relief. The success of the plan is due to the untiring zeal of our secretary, the wise counsel and earnest work of our treasurer, and the work of those brethren who look their collections on time.

Veteran Day was not designated this year, but the collection for Conference claimants was ordered to be taken separate from all other collections. If the wish of this scribble finds response in the hearts of the brethren, the Mississippi Conference will keep Veteran's Day in 1893, and that will be the fifth provision in the Mississippi plan.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

The World in the Church.

A PLAIN STATEMENT OF FACTS, AND AN APPEAL TO SOUTHERN METHODISTS FOR A RETURN TO THE "OLD PATHS." BY REV. JOHN T. SAWYER, D. D. S. M. Publishing House, Barbee & Smith, Agents.

In a book of seventeen chapters, and of a little over one hundred pages, Dr. Sawyer discusses the question of worldliness with special reference to the condition and needs of Southern Methodism. I know of no one who has a keener apprehension of this subtle phase of sin in all its forms, insidious or blatant, or deeper convolutions as to its perilousness, than the author. The book is an exhibition of his fidelity to these convictions as is his ministerial career. There is no discussion of worldliness in the abstract; the book deals with specific forms of this sin, such as are generally prevailing in the church.

In the first chapter we have these mentioned in detail—such as theatre and opera, dancing and oar parties, the use of alcoholic, coyness and fashion, and church entertainments. The author supports his view of the extent of worldliness among us by citations from the quadrennial addresses of the Bishops, General Conference proceedings, articles from the church press and opinions from eminent men. These he has used abundantly, but not superfluously. He has made out a clear case—that worldliness is in the church to an alarming extent. In the nature of the case it is difficult to ascertain how much of this thing prevails. Nothing but a most careful and exact census could determine what proportion of our people actually practice any of the usual forms of worldliness. Perhaps, if our pastors would ask every member personally whether they were guilty of any of these things, and report the results at the Annual Conference, it would illuminate the question and create a breeze throughout the connection. There would be a small cyclone in some quarters we wot of. However, I am sure that the full extent of the malady is not known. Certain it is that many pastors do not know the true character and habits of some, at least, of their members; and if they know not, it is probable that Bishops and editors are less informed, as they are necessarily more remote from the people. However this may be, the utterances from official sources and opinions from individuals demonstrate an uneasiness, to say the least, on the condition of many of our churches; and by these Dr. Sawyer has clearly sustained his position.

OF THE CAUSES AND THE CURE.

That the relation of the ministry to this subject is vital no one can doubt. Opinion on this subject will be influenced by the pulpit more than by any other source. Dr. Sawyer emphasizes the need of strong and vigorous preaching as one means of correcting the evil. And, doubtless, many will fully concur with him in the opinion that there is not enough of this. But it must be strong preaching, not mere denunciation and hortatory appeal. It must be a demonstration of the sinfulness of worldliness—a concrete exhibition of its nature, tendencies and history, strongly flavored with spiritual insight, scriptural authority and the mighty power of the Spirit of God. One reason for the prevalence of worldliness which is advanced is, that the preaching, in some instances, is scarcely evangelical enough to secure a thorough work of grace among the people, so that there are many among us who are spiritually incapable of resisting the tides of worldly temptation. On this the author gives us two trenchant quotations from Bishop C. B. Galloway and Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

In chapter xii we have a description of the men who forged out a way for the growing Methodism of yore. It is good. It makes one long to hear the soul-stirring, heaven-born periods of those heroic men.

Chapter xiii deals with the preacher in regard to worldly entanglements as to matters of secular enterprise. This I believe to be exceptional among our preachers, but it is well to sound the note of alarm. However, the preachers are largely responsible for whatever condition may exist in regard to this matter. In support of this statement we need only to look at these facts following: History has demonstrated that the character of a church is generally stamped with the spiritual impress of the preacher. The preacher, in Methodism, stands at the door of admission; none may enter whom he thinks unfit. And to him is committed the execution of disciplinary law.

This book elicits the following queries: Has there been any lowering of the standard of the Christian life? any connivance at worldliness in order to gain either in numbers or finances? any fear to execute discipline because of possible detriment to the line of promotion? This is serious business. We dare not estimate.

As to remedies, Dr. Sawyer recommends revival of discipline and a renewal of divine life by a universal Pentecost throughout the church.

The first is beset with difficulty; the second very practicable, and the only true means of relief. Reformation and revival precede discipline. The Holy Spirit antedates organization and government. We know that spirituality drives out worldliness, and that the Holy Spirit is the author of liberality and the source of our working power.

If every Southern Methodist preacher will secure a personal Pentecost, such as fell on Dr. W. R. Lambuth and a few co-workers in Japan, some time ago, power will be upon us, consecration for work will be noted and the Spirit will more largely control the pocketbook of the church, so that our missionary treasury will be replenished and the church meet her responsibilities. It is well that Dr. Sawyer has written on this old theme; well that he has been specific in his charges, and their location.

I trust that many will get this book, and the church be awakened and consequently blessed through this effort so manifestly put forth to glorify God and benefit the Zion he loves so well.

FRANKLIN N. PARKER.

What Shall We Do?

They must have help—these brave men who, as a last resort, lay their cases before the Parsonage and Home Mission Society. As secretaries, they come to me. Their appeals rest upon my heart as a sad weight; and investigation, the assurance of those best acquainted with the facts and of highest authority, prove it no misplaced sentiment. Knowing there must be many others who will feel as I do, I state the facts to the church and leave all to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. My faith in God and his people has been strengthened by experience. I ask and I receive. A short time ago I appealed for help for a parsonage in Montana, and promptly, kindly, received all that was needed. A letter came from northwest Texas, from a presiding elder whose district is of such dimensions it takes the express train thirteen hours to pass through it. It contains fifty-one counties and twenty-three appointments. He must travel from thirty to fifty miles a day and hold from three to five quarterly meetings in a week. After an absence of twenty-seven days he may stay three hours at home and be off on another trip of three weeks. And God is blessing his work with from 1,500 to 2,000 additions a year to the church in the district. In the midst of all this labor he found the parsonage that sheltered his family in danger of being lost for the petty sum of $145.

The last day of grace was but a few weeks off, and his people—"who were left by the drouth without bread or grain enough to seed the ground"—had reached the limit of their ability. He took it to the Lord in prayer and wrote me. When I read the letter, and knew we had already appropriated all we could certainly expect in a regular way during the year, I buried my face in my hands and prayed God to open some way to secure the money to save that home. The next letter I took up was from Miss Pedrick, secretary of our auxiliary at Portsmouth, Va., asking, in the name of her society, some special work. Believing it was of God, I sent at once a copy of the letter just received. Quickly those noble women responded with the $145 needed. This is the kind of men we are trying to relieve, and it is thus God shows he is with us. Oh! people of God, aid us in removing every obstacle that the stream of his mercy may flow unimpeded, full, clear, bright, refreshing the weary ones, inspiring hope. If our organization was more widely extended, regularly and quietly would all the funds needed come in and be ready for these urgent demands. Why can it not be?

Last Spring, after making all the appropriations we dared to, we promised if we could raise special donations for it, to help build a parsonage at Tempe, Ariz. I have hesitated to make a public call, hoping in some private way to secure the funds. But now, when urgent letters come from the homeless man in Arizona unable to rent, not knowing what to do, and from his young wife in Texas—where she and her two children have taken refuge with her mother—wanting to go to her husband, but not knowing what they will do if they can not get a parsonage, I fear I have done wrong in not telling of this case sooner. May God forgive me if in shrinking from it I have given these hearts so devoted to God pain and anxiety! May quick responses soon terminate their suspense! Send all contributions to Mrs. Geo. P. Kendrick, treasurer, 820 Fifth St., Louisville, Ky.

Remember this is between you and God. It is for Christ's sake you are asked to give.

LUCINDA B. HELM,

Gen. Sec. P. and H. M. Society.

P. S.—We beg all treasurers of auxiliaries to make every effort to collect back dues and remit as soon as possible to their Conference treasurers. We are depending on this fund for our regular appropriations. L. B. H.

Easter Sunday for the Scarritt Bible and Training-School.

At the annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions, June 3, 1892, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the managers of the W. B. M. residing in the city of Nashville be appointed to meet a like committee from the General Board of Missions for the purpose of conferring and advising as to the selection of a suitable Sunday on which the work of the Woman's Board of Missions may be brought before the church and collections taken, the collection this year to be given to the Scarritt Bible and Training-school. The preference of this Board is for Easter Sunday as Woman's Day.

The committee thus appointed met the committee of the General Board, composed of Dr. W. G. E. Cunningham, Dr. I. G. John and Mr. J. D. Hamilton, and, after carefully considering the subject, Easter Sunday was selected as Woman's Day. The General Board, therefore, will not send out any programmes for that day, but commends woman's work to the co-operation of pastors and others on that occasion. It was also understood that the members of the Woman's Board will give like aid to the General Board on any day it may select for special missionary services in the interest of its work.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Managers of the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, the undersigned were appointed a committee to arrange for the Easter services, and to secure his general observance. Looking to God for his blessing, and having strong faith in the church's deep interest in the school, the committee undertakes the work entrusted to it with the courage of hope, and now announces to the Woman's Missionary Society and the church at large this appointment of Easter Sunday as a day for special services and collections in the interest of the training-school, asking that prayer and earnest effort be made throughout the church to secure a grand result for that noble enterprise.

The building is completed, the school is opened, the endowment fund is partly collected. Now let all work with heart and hand to increase that fund this year to such proportions as will secure for the school a proper maintenance. Conference and district secretaries, together with every member of the society, should unite their efforts to insure a general observance of the day and a good financial report. Pastors and Sunday-school superintendents are urgently requested to "help these women" by appointing, after consulting with them, the hour that will bring the best results, and by co-operating with them in carrying out the programmes.

If in any Conference, Easter Sunday has been set apart for any other purpose (and no change can be made in each arrangement), let the officers of that Conference Woman's Missionary Society appoint another day for a special service and collection for the training-school, to be observed within the bounds of that Conference. If any circuit church can not hold the service on Easter, let the first Sunday thereafter, that is practicable, be observed.

Programmes and collecting cards will be distributed in February. The intervening months should be a time of prayerful preparation and "gathering in store," that when the set time shall come all things may be ready.

Mrs. MARY HELM, Chair'n,
Miss BELLE H. BENNETT,
Mrs. S. C. TRUEHEART,

Columbus Day.

Our little town of Shubuta celebrated this national and continental holiday to some extent. At the school there was beautiful and appropriate decoration—flags, flowers, Autumn leaves, mottoes, pictures, etc. The young people all had suitable recitations and dialogues, well rendered. The special orators of the day were Austin Ledyard, Annie Patton, and Perry Drake. Many others did equally well. The pastor brought up the rear with some patriotic and religious niterances.

At night a good congregation gathered in our Methodist Church for prayer, praise, and preaching. Of course, the sermon drew lessons of encouragement to perseverance, and tried to do honor to that famous "crank" who well-nigh turned this world upside down. Are we not now near the top, whereas we were once "to fortune and to fame unknown?" Also the occasion was "improved" in favor of Sabbath observance. It may not be generally known that the great discoverer was himself a rigid observer of the Sabbath, and withal a very pious man for his times. He would never leave a port on Sunday.

This matter of Sabbath observance is becoming as much our national sin as that of drunkenness, and equally needs agitation and exhortation. It was a burning disgrace for our great Exposition to show the world such a God-defying example as open gates on the Sabbath to this, our World's Fair. On Sunday, Oct. 23, our Sabbath-school raised $2.25 toward helping to build a Sunday-school Temple just outside the Exposition gates. We got the idea and information from what you published a few weeks since from the pen of Mr. B. F. Jacobs. I wish every school would join in the good work. This building will help largely to solve the problem of how the crowds are to be entertained on Sunday with the gates closed. Let everybody help, and that right early. It is essentially the cause of God and religion.

J. P. DRAKE.

The Lambuth Fund.

Much of it is yet due. A brother asks if I am the proper party to pay the Dr. Lambuth fund to that was taken by Dr. Morrison at the last Conference. I answer, I am; and further, perhaps the only person that it is proper to send it to, to avoid confusion, as I hold the subscription list, and am to report upon it at the next Conference. If sent direct to the general treasurer, or to Mrs. L., the receipts might not show just what special fund it was; and then the receipts might be presented to us at the Conference as we are taking the regular collections. We have had some trouble on this line. A presiding elder gives a receipt for missionary money to a preacher often in pencil on a leaf of his blank book. The presiding elder forwards this, with other funds, to the general treasurer; gets his receipt. This, together with the lead pencil slip, is presented at Conference. We call out the presiding elder for explanation. He is called back to the Conference-room by the Bishop before he has made the matter clear. A half-dozen preachers, with money in hand, are standing around. "Me next; me next."

Brothers, send your usual foreign missionary money direct to T. B. Holt, at Nashville. Present his receipt to us at Conference; it saves expense. Send the Lambuth fund to me; it saves confusion.

T. S. WEST, Treas.

A Lost Bequest.

Mrs. W. T. Carroll, a great-niece of Lord Nelson, who lived for many years in and near Natchez, Miss., and who was a devout member of the Methodist Church, recently died, leaving her estate by will to the Methodist Church, South, for the establishment of an orphan asylum for "white Methodist children," appointing me executor of the will. The Constitution of Mississippi makes a bequest by will to a church null and void. Had she deeded the property during her life to the person she wished to control it after her death, her purpose would have been accomplished. But her failure thus to deed the property defeats entirely her benevolent design and deprives the orphans forever of all benefit of her generous intention. She need not have given up the property, nor the use and income of it. These might have been hers till her death. But she should have executed during her life a conveyance of the property to the person she wished to control it after her death. The law, I suppose, intends to prevent churches, which never die, from persuading dying people to give their property to the church. A church might thus, in time, become the owner of almost or quite all the property in the nation.

Then let all benevolent people take warning, and execute, as far as practical, their humane purposes while they live.

Fasting and Prayer.

Dear Sisters: In addition to the general plea for our church throughout the land to observe the Friday before Thanksgiving as a day of fasting and prayer, in behalf of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, I would urge all the auxiliaries throughout Louisiana to earnestly evoke God's blessing upon our organization, that he would arouse us to greater earnestness in his moral vineyard and would open our eyes that we may see how to make a greater success of this work, to the enlisting of new life into those societies organized, reorganizing new ones and bring to life those whose spark of life soon flickered into death.

May God help us.

M. WERLEIN,

Bibles, Bibles.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to inform all the preachers in the Brookhaven district, through your columns, that I have ordered one hundred Bibles to supply Sunday-schools in this district. These Bibles I will sell at ten and fifteen cents each; but if any child or grown person has not the money to pay even that, and are without this precious volume, send on your name, and I will forward you the book at once. The Conference year is fast drawing to a close, and I want every child in the Brookhaven district supplied with God's Word.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Nov. 13, 1892.

By REV. WM. H. LAPRADE, D.D.

The First Christian Missionaries, Acts xiii, 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in all name among all nations." (Luke xxiv, 47.)

We come now, in the history of the Christian Church, to the period of propagandism—of definite missionary work. Well established at Jerusalem, the center of Jewish thought and influence; and at the Syrian Antioch, the strategic point of control of Asia Minor and of Southern Europe; the new faith was ready to be borne onward. St. Luke devotes the greater part of his history, from now on, to the details of the onward movement with St. Paul as the central figure. (A good map showing the route of the missionary journeys should be secured by the teacher, and enlarged on a blackboard for the use of the class.)

Ver. 1. These five men were the exponents of the Word—the preachers and teachers of the congregation at Antioch. Of three of them we know nothing more than is stated in this verse. Barnabas and Saul we know, and with them principally our lesson will deal for some time.

Vers. 2, 3. The two men chosen by the Holy Spirit were the leaders. God selected the best. Those who "can not be spared," as we think, are the ones most needed for work elsewhere. These men were not self-appointed; they were chosen by the Holy Spirit, through the leaders in the church.

The fasting and prayer was with special reference to the simple ordination by which they were "separated for the work."

Vers. 4, 5. Seleucia lay a little to the north of the mouth of the Orontes and was the seaport of Antioch, which was distant about sixteen miles by land, forty-one by the river. Cyprus lay to the west, nearly eighty miles away. Salamis was its principal seaport, being on the eastern, or Syrian, side. Cyprus was the home of Barnabas. John Mark was a nephew of Barnabas (see Col. iv, 10), and afterwards wrote the Gospel of Mark. He now attended Saul and Barnabas in some subordinate capacity.

Vers. 6, 7. We can not tell how long they remained at Salamis. Paphos was west of Salamis about one hundred miles, and was the residence of the Roman governor, or proconsul, as the word "deputy" should be. Sergius Paulus was proconsul at the time—a man of candor, prudence and spirit of inquiry.

At that period there was much superstitious regard for so-called "fortune-tellers," of whom Bar-Jesus was a shrewd specimen.

Sergius Paulus honestly wished to know the truth, and sent for Barnabas and Saul.

Ver. 8. Elymas is an Arabic term, meaning "the wise one," applied to fortune-tellers and such folk. Some have suggested that Bar-Jesus assumed this name to increase his power over the ignorant. Having gained a little influence over Sergius Paulus, he, of course, resented the coming of Saul and Barnabas.

Vers. 9, 10, 11. Perhaps Saul had always borne a double name—Saul Paulus—and that he dropped the Jewish name and retained the Gentile portion now that his life-work as "Apostle to the Gentiles" had begun. Perhaps the name "Paul" was taken as commemorative of the conversion of Sergius Paulus. We can not tell positively. Henceforth he is called "Paul."

Paul was moved by the Holy Ghost to do this miracle. First he pictured in a few strong expressions, the true character of this impostor; then he announces his punishment, as from God. The effect was seen at once. Elymas was blinded, not by Paul, but by the "hand of God."

Ver. 12. The proconsul, already profoundly impressed with the doctrine of salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ, accepted this miracle as proof of the truth of the teachings of Paul and Barnabas, and became a convert.

Ver. 13. How long the apostle remained at Paphos after the conversion of Sergius is not known. Continuing their missionary journey, Paul and Barnabas now went to the mainland, sailing west of north. Entering the mouth of the Cestrus river, they sailed up to Perga, about seven miles. Perga was the capital of the province of Pamphylia, which lay immediately west of Cilicia. Paul's native province, and with the manners and customs of which he was, no doubt, familiar. John Mark went with them to Perga, but did not farther attend them. This early weakness he afterward overcame, and was a valuable aid later in life.

The missionary spirit is not incidental to Christianity; it is a part of it.

The very best men, intellectually and spiritually, are necessary to good missionary work; "home" or "foreign" alike.

Strong churches, like Antioch, should not think too much of local matters; they should be centers of influence, sending into "the regions beyond."

The Annual Statement.

The annual meeting of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate was held in the office of the editor, Oct. 26, 1892. All the members of the committee were present. The business and editorial management of the paper were carefully looked into. With the business management we found no cause for complaint, the terms of the contract having been faithfully complied with. I wish I could say that the business manager had no cause for complaint against the patrons of the paper. This, perhaps, is more than I ought to say. There has been a decrease in the number of subscribers within the past year, owing mainly, perhaps, to the fact that delinquents of three or four years' standing are being dropped from the roll. Another fact brought out was, that the delinquent fund had greatly increased during the year. This may be attributed to two facts: first, that the business manager has confined his labors mainly to the local management of the business; and, second, that the preachers have depended too much on the assistant editor to look after the claims abroad. The large amount of outstanding claims should be promptly sent in. Let delinquent subscribers hand what they are due the paper to their pastor at once, and let all the pastors look promptly after delinquents and send in the amounts at once. This would be a small thing for them to do; but what a relief to the business manager! Brethren, you do not know, maybe, what an easy matter it would be for you to make him feel very comfortable by putting the paper on a solid financial basis. Try it and, if we all live, listen for the report a year hence. It had been feared by some that the editorial management would suffer by reason of the double work undertaken by the editor, but he assured the committee that his work as presiding elder did not interfere one particle with his work as editor. That being the case, it was not a matter of our concern if the district did have to listen to his old sermons; the Conference is responsible for that. But the editorial management is before the patrons and needs no commendation from the committee. The modest, conscientious assistant editor thought it his duty, under all the circumstances, to tender his resignation. This was accepted by the committee, and while our official relation to him ceases our hearts are more strongly bound to him as a devout Christian, a consecrated minister of the gospel and a faithful worker in the Master's vineyard. Our warmest and tenderest Christian and ministerial regards will follow him back into the pastorate.

We are satisfied that if the three patronizing Conferences will stand by and rally to the support of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, it will supply in full the demand as a Conference organ.

J. D. CAMERON,
For Committee.

Our Stewards.

Years ago, when Bishop Keener was editor of this paper, he had a leader on "Stewards," in which he said that the conversion of the world was in the hands of the men who provide for the supply of the temporal wants of the preachers. It is as true now. The expenses of the religious wars are not small, and they are indispensable. The Church army can no more move forward in its march without means than can the army of the State. The fact is, nothing of any value in this world can get along without money.

In our church the duty of supplying the means is devolved upon the stewards. This is their specific obligation and paramount in the list of their church duties. It is by no means a pleasant office in all its aspects. The faithful steward has some rather rough passages along his line of work, and he meets with some queer specimens of Christian men and women. But, for all that, his duty is explicit and easy to be understood. He can not get away from the obligation to do his best to meet and fulfill the duties of his office. Any attempt to lessen the obligation resting upon him as a steward is disloyalty and a sin.

We know that in many parts of our church the stewards have had a trying time during the year now drawing to a close. Times have been hard and pressing, money has been scarce and difficult to obtain, and the promise of short crops makes things "look a little blue." But none of these things, nor all of them together, can lessen the steward's obligation to use every legitimate effort to "bring up the salaries" of the preachers. In many cases the allowances were very meager, scarcely enough to enable the man of God to live without stinting himself and his family. If the meager allowance is not fully paid, the preacher and family must suffer. This is a plain case. We trust, then, that every steward will realize that special effort is necessary at this time to enable the church to discharge its obligations to its ministers, and that every steward will earnestly and courageously make that effort in the fear of God and love for the church.

Mississippi College.

Mr. Editor: It will be gratifying to the friends of our college to know that the patronage increases and that everything betokens large prosperity. We have up to date, I believe, one hundred and thirty-one students, with the promise of others very soon. The local support is larger than was anticipated, and the patrons are delighted with the organization and administration.

The two literary societies are now well under way, and soon will have their halls nicely furnished. I had the pleasure of attending the exercises of one of them this morning, and at the close to give the young men a talk on "Oxford (England) and Its Great University."

The library is being arranged as fast as possible. It is a long and laborious job to arrange and list the vast collection of Dr. C. K. Marshall's, so generously donated by his family. What a great reader he was, and how careful to preserve everything of value! He was one of the few men who knew the importance of preserving current history. In this collection we have piles of church and secular papers running back into the early decades of this century. We have many volumes, if not complete sets, of such valuable periodicals as The Southern Literary Messenger, and DeBow's Review. The Christian Herald, published at Natchez in 1837-38, and edited by John Newland Maftitt, is here, and dozens of others, including the periodicals of Methodism, North and South. He had preserved a genuine Hebrew parchment, and the best books on every subject. Among other things sacredly kept and turned over to us are the Registers of the Mississippi Hospitals established by Dr. Marshall during the war, with the name of each soldier patient and the date of his admission and dismissal. What a pathetic interest gathers about those pages! But time would fail to tell of all the precious things we have for our boys, and everyone else who desires to study history from original sources.

Thanks to the generosity of Rev. A. F. Watkins, we have a complete set of the Methodist Quarterly Review from the first issue in 1819 to 1892. Already we have on hand about two thousand volumes, besides these, pamphlets, periodicals, etc., which are of greatest value.

We need help in furnishing other rooms in the college. Can not our friends send forward small contributions, and thus enable us speedily to thoroughly and comfortably furnish the whole building. A few dollars now will greatly aid us.

We desire also to have portraits of distinguished persons and Methodists. A fine steel portrait of Bishop Soule we have in Dr. Marshall's collection; also of Dr. B. M. Drake and Rev. John Lane. We wish many more. Anyone desiring to send us a framed picture ready for the walls of any distinguished educator, patriot or preacher will contribute to the attractiveness of our college. We want the classic and historic associations of the place to mold for good the character of each student.

And now I claim the privilege of exhorting all who have given us endowment notes to heed the call of the agent and pay up promptly. We very much wish to have this matter all completed before the session of the Conferences. The importance of an early response can not be overestimated.

Fraternally,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Some Editorial Utterances.

The Sunday-School Times closes a beautiful editorial on "Autumn as a Symbol," with this instructive paragraph:

Many people find the thought of personal immortality incredible, impossible, or, at any rate, hard to harbor. A mystery it is, no doubt; but here is the twin mystery of the rejuvenation of the year after it has died the death to all outward seeming. Is there so much difference between the two, save that the one is known a posteriori, the other is hoped for and timidly avowed a priori? And is not one of the deepest symbolic meanings and uses of the Autumn—as, indeed, of each and all of the seasons in their several ways—just this, that they certify and illustrate how life comes out of death, and resurrection is the order of the visible universe through all the infinite gradations and potencies of the mystic thing called life? It will be well for us to have this symbol of the Autumn in our minds, along with the more obvious and conventional sense of its decay and change, as we watch nature nowadays, and see her punctually fulfilling her great alternate functions of work and rest.

The Bampton Lectures, for 1891, by Rev. Charles Gore, is one of the best books of that series we have ever read. The subject is the Incarnation. Of the opening sentences of those lectures the Southern Churchman has this pertinent paragraph:

Mr. Gore begins his Bampton Lectures with, "What is the distinguishing characteristic of the Christian religion?" He makes answer: "Christianity is faith in a certain person, Jesus Christ, and by faith in him is meant such unreserved self-committal as is only possible, because faith in Jesus is understood to be faith in God, and union with Jesus, union with God." He then proceeds to show how this faith in a person loses its character by a false ecclesiasticism, so as to make Christianity no longer devotion to a living person, but is the acceptance on authority of a system of theological propositions and ecclesiastical duties. When churchmanship assumes this degenerate form, Christianity is not indeed destroyed, but its fruit is not the spirit and temper of Sonship. One might comment on this; but it is not necessary; the church and the duties of Christianity will never compensate for loving trust in the person of Jesus Christ our Lord. And the feeling of "Sonship" seems to be growing less, while duties to the church as an ecclesiastical society seem to be looming up into undue importance.

In an elaborate article on "City Evangelization," Zion's Herald has these paragraphs which we specially commend to New Orleans Methodists:

Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong, in "Our Country," proves very conclusively that "It is chiefly to the English and American peoples that we must look for the evangelization of the world," and he adds: "I believe it is fully in the hands of the Christians of the United States during the next ten or fifteen years to hasten or retard the coming of Christ's kingdom in the world by hundreds and, perhaps, thousands of years." That there are numerous obstacles to contend with before this happy consummation can be reached, is perfectly apparent. To consider them separately is not at all necessary; they may be practically summed up in a single word—immigration. And this because the immigrants poured upon our shores, many of them from the slums of Europe, represent the combined evils we have to contend with—socialism, criminalism, Romanism in its most bigoted form, ignorance, and the drink habit. It is this vast army disgorged here weekly which we are to make into self-respecting men and women, not alone as a Christian duty, but also as a matter of self-defense.

The work is imperative; we must Christianize these people, or we must in time be paganized by them. They are, perhaps, one day to be our rulers, and in the hands of designing men it is possible for them to become a terrible engine for evil. Abandoned to themselves, they become a threatening force and a plague-spot whose capacity for mischief there is no means of estimating.

No power for ameliorating these unfortunate conditions, for communicating the light of intelligence to the eye, for allaying the fierce passions of the heart, for bringing a strong and true manhood and womanhood into their lives, can be conceived equal to a tender and palpitating gospel carried by brave, sympathetic and earnest Christian missionaries. A work similar to that which we cross sea and land to accomplish, for which we pour out our money in a continuous and fertilizing stream, is at our very doors. Men who can not visit the various countries here represented will carry the gospel with willing hands to this wreckage cast upon our shores. They will sacrifice comfort, give of their time and strength, and labor unremittently for the uplift and conversion of these people. They only ask that the means shall be provided to carry on the work.

Ought such a providential opening to be neglected! In addition to the immigrants, there is the vast company of unfortunate who, possibly through no fault of their own, are stranded on the shoals of poverty, and who by a friendly hand and a helpful word at an opportune moment are set upon their feet and made self-supporting and self-respecting members of society. As Prof. Ely says: "It is the mission of Christianity to bring to pass here a kingdom of righteousness and to rescue from the evil one and redeem all our social relations." If, as is generally conceded, the missionary spirit reacts most helpfully upon the spiritual life of a church, there never was a better opportunity for the cultivation of such a spirit with its attendant benefits than city missions afford.

A Personal Exhortation.

Brother, you have been reading the Advocate now for nearly a year, and up to this time it has not cost you a cent. You begged your pastor to have your subscription renewed, telling him that you really could not get along without "the visits of the dear old church paper," and you promised to pay him the subscription price in the Fall. Or, perhaps, you are a new subscriber, and was persuaded by your pastor to take the paper—a thing you ought to have done long ago. You had no money then, but promised faithfully to pay for your subscription before Conference. Well, Conference is nearly here, and you have not yet redeemed your promise. Are you going to put this obligation on your pastor? Your subscription is already charged to him, and whether you pay or not he must. The publisher doesn't know you at all in this transaction, but he holds your preacher personally responsible for your subscription. Will you compel him to pay your subscription out of his own pocket? Are you that mean? Oh, no, he will not sue you for the two dollars, nor will you likely be turned out of the church for your dishonesty (though you ought to be); nor will it be blazoned abroad nor heralded in the newspapers. But, brother, where is your honesty, your self-respect, your sense of right and justice, not to speak of gratitude? And you did the same thing last year—yes, you did, for your former pastor told me how you had beat him out of that two dollars. Yes, perhaps, a hundred of you did this mean, dirty, contemptible trick last year—beat pastors out of a year's subscription to the Advocate. And here you are fixing to do the same thing again! Aren't you ashamed of yourself? What do you call such action as that? Isn't it lying and stealing both? And stealing from your preacher, and the paltry sum of two dollars! Haven't got the money? Haven't got the money, indeed! Go sell your coat; hire yourself out to work by the day; dig if you can, beg if you must—but don't steal! Your preacher starts for Conference week after next. You haven't any time to lose. Don't wait for "next preaching day." Get right up now—this moment—saddle that horse or take the road afoot, but get up now and take that two dollars to the preacher. Do more than this—take four dollars along—two dollars to pay for the present year and two to advance your subscription a year further. And then come home and get down on your knees in your closet and thank God that you were saved from as low and contemptible a thing as attempting to beat your pastor out of a year's subscription to the Advocate.—Southern Christian Advocate.

Church Extension in the State of Mississippi.

I have been obliged to avail myself of the help of Rev. Jno. T. Sawyer, D. D., to attend the North Mississippi Conference at Corinth, and Rev. W. M. Hayes, D. D., the Mississippi Conference at Natchez, as other engagements at the same time preclude the possibility of my being at either. These good brethren will look after our interest at both these Conferences, and the unpaid notes and subscriptions made to the Paine Loan Fund, several years ago, amounting still to nearly $1,500, will be placed in their hands. I hope every subscriber who can possibly do so will either carry or send what he promised to that loan fund to the Conference, and will pay it over to one or the other of these brethren. The money is much needed by us in our work.

We trust that the good cause which these brethren will represent will receive the same kindly consideration which has been accorded to it at all previous sessions of these influential Methodist bodies.

NOTES.

A good sign of the times is in the fact that the leaders of the labor movement in England have begun a crusade against gambling in all its forms.

The preacher who supposes that "extemporaneous preaching" means extemporaneous thinking is making a mistake which will bring disaster, if he is not careful.

You will never have a clear idea of how much reading the Advocate gives you for two dollars until you save every number and have them bound! Then you will be surprised at the cheapness as well as the quality and variety of reading you get for so little money! You get 1,300 columns of 870 words each just for the pittance of two dollars.

He is the best preacher who knows how to reach those elements in human nature which are common to young and old, rich and poor, to no-educated and educated alike. For the things which separate men from one another are trifling in comparison; the things in which they share alike are great.—James Stalk, D. D.

Mr. Gladstone recently said: "The older I grow the more confirmed I am in my faith and religion. I have been in public life fifty-eight years, and forty-seven in the Cabinet of the British government, and during those forty-seven years I have been associated with sixty of the master minds of the country, and all but five of the sixty were Christians."

It occurs to us that the critics who are denying the infallibility of the Bible, and proving it so clearly to their own satisfaction, have also proved a thing they did not start out to prove. In proving that the Bible is not infallible, they proved the infallibility of their "scientific method." This destroys their whole work; for no two of them agree, and things that are opposed to each other can not be infallible. So we will still stick to the old Book.

It seems to us that the infidel philosophers and scientists take a roundabout way to accomplish the destruction of the Christian religion. If they had any wisdom at all, they ought to see that only one thing is necessary for them to do. They are really doing a great deal of laborious and unnecessary work. Let them account for the life and work of Jesus on their own principles, and Christianity will immediately topple to ruins. That's all they have to do.

We are making some progress in the direction of limiting foreigners in the right of citizenship. A judge in New Jersey has decided that a native of Burmah can not become a citizen because he is neither white nor black, and a judge in New York has refused to naturalize a foreigner because he can't read the Constitution. We are not capable of passing upon the first case, but the New York judge we think to be a very sensible man, and a worthy example to all whose business it is to issue naturalization papers.

If the newspapers are to be credited, Michigan has a law which every State in the Union ought to have. It is this:

No man but a total abstainer is allowed, under the laws of Michigan, to be employed as engineer, train-dispatcher, fireman, brakeman or other railroad servant. Any railroad violating the law is liable to a fine of $500 for each offense.

Rev. James Stalker, the celebrated Scotch divine, when lecturing to the Yale divinity students, narrated an incident that has a teaching much wider than for preachers alone. At a winter man was leaving home last year, he received this parting exhortation from his mother: "Others may tell you more in knowledge, but let me impress one thing upon you. Every time you lay your hand upon a child's head, you lay it upon his mother's heart." This truth should equally impress every Sunday-school worker and every man who occupies the teacher's position and often discouraging place.—Zion's Herald.

The child which kneels by its mother's knee and offers to the Lord a prayer, is bringing in the millennium. The disciple who gives a cup of cold water to the thirsty, is bringing in the millennium. The Christian who gives a word of comfort to the sorrowing, is bringing in the millennium. Every earnest prayer, every word of mercy, every word of Christian counsel, every word of every Sabbath school, every word of true Sabbath worship is bringing in the millennium. Agencies supplied by the millennium will be mighty under God. That which is sown in weakness will be raised in power. Therefore, the church of God is to be constantly hopeful in its life and service.—Exchange.

It has come to pass, in this day, that a new gospel is proclaimed. In the multiplication of ways and means whereby a woman may be self-supporting, in the wide diffusion of educational advantages, and in the growing independence of young women, love and marriage are, in some quarters, looked upon as incidental. One even hears the phrase, glibly uttered, "the bachelor girl," a phrase fitted to send a shiver to the heart of old-fashioned people, like myself, who yet hold fast to the traditions of their youth.

That girls may, and often must, take care of themselves; that every girl should be past mistress of some bread-winning art or trade worth its full value in the great world market, I fully and unswervingly believe. With all the strength of my nature, I honor the girl who works, and works for money, giving money's worth in the work she does. Especially do I respect the young woman who refuses to be a drag on a father growing infirm, or on a brother who has his own place in this world to maintain. Also, I have a full and cordial appreciation of the position taken by girls who do not absolutely need to toil for bread and butter, but who possess some marked talent, in itself an endowment, and who wish, as their brothers do, to make this of use. A girl who has received the benefits of thorough training in any line, and who is hot to fill her life with the work which lies within her own home gates, now that domestic life is somewhat less complex than of old, is quite in the right if she give music lessons, sell pictures, make designs for wall paper or for carpets, study medicine or law, or, thrice blessed, become a foreign missionary.

Only, I plead that our dear girls may not allow themselves to minify that which is, after all, woman's essential profession, wifehood, and whatever holy and beautiful follows in its train. It is well to love and to be loved, and to marry and "settle down" while people are young, and brave, and fearless of risks.

It is well for two faithful hearts to plight each other in loyal troth, to stand before God's altar together, and then to begin a united life, if needful, on very narrow means. Years ago a young artist, who has since then arrived at a competence and secured a world-wide fame, married a young girl who was to be, through many years, his other self—the complement of every quality he possessed. They lived in a conservative land across the sea, where the chances for growth and for remuneration were less than in this republic. The artist decided that here in America he would find the best field for his powers, and the little concubine of two disowned the advisability of taking flight from the old home.

"We are very poor, liechen," said the husband. "It may be well for me to go first, and send for you when I've secured a foothold. You can be so much more comfortable with your parents than in the privations which may be before us in the New World."

But the young wife's eyes glowed with fire; her rounded cheeks and red lips were full of resolve.

"I will go with you, Fritz," she said firmly. "Where there is bread for one, will be bread for two."

No consideration in marriage should be permitted to set itself before the primal reason for marriage, viz., love. And yet so elusive is love, so deceitful are human hearts, that a girl should think carefully and prayerfully before accepting even in herself as love what may be only gratified vanity or the complacency of being discovered charming and attractive.

A girl does well to listen with respect to her parents and friends in their mature experience leads them to doubt the fitness of the suitor who aspires to her hand. The father and mother who have loved their daughter all her life have a claim to be regarded when she is to go from their care to that of another. A girl is unwise and unfaithful who sets her own will at once in opposition to the wishes of her parents in a matter so important as the decision of whom she shall marry.

Waiting and patience will usually overcome the opposition of parental love; if finally consent be withheld without good and sufficient reason, the young people are justified in going forward on their proposed route in a union blessed of God.

Never, dear girls, let anybody persuade you that better, truer God-service can be done in the public walks of life than in the comparative seclusion of the family. In that Eden the Lord God still walks in the cool of the day,

HOME LIFE.

THE DAY OF REST.

When all the labor of the week is done,
The weary heart
Rejoices that once more the morrow's sun
Brings rest in part.
That the tired limbs may pause a little while
From painful strife,
And God's refreshment may have room to smile
On busy life.

So when the day of life is near its close,
And shades of gray,
The weary pilgrim waits with calm repose
For God's own day;
Though shadows deepen, yet no coward fear
Disturbs his breast,
The night of gloom but serves to bring him near.

The day of rest. —The Quiver.

An Old-Fashioned Talk about Love.

BY MRS. MARGARET E. SANBOSTER.

When I was a girl, it was, in a general way, taken for granted that a girl's natural destiny was to grow up cared for and sheltered by her parents and guardians, fulfilling the duties of a daughter at home until she went from the fostering shadow of the household to take charge of her own house. It was rather expected that a girl would marry in due course, and most girls, in those primitive days, expected it themselves, and, furthermore, expected to marry, not from motives of convenience, not from anything low or mercenary, but for simple, pure, sweet, lasting love. Their mothers had done this, why should not they? That many young women did not marry, drifting into spinsterhood, taking up the responsibilities and excepting the loneliness of single life, militated nothing against this view. The "old maid" of those days found, as the unmarried woman of to-day does, plenty to do in helping her married sisters, in teaching, in tailoring, in dress-making, sometimes in shop-keeping. She was a valued and valuable factor in the community. Society and the church were greatly indebted to her. But, it is to be doubted, whether she usually plumed herself upon her solitary state. In most instances, she was faithful either to a visionary ideal or to a lost love, and in the solitude of her increasing years the spinster not seldom looked wistfully and regretfully at the women of her own age who had children and grandchildren clustering around her, filling her life with ever-fresh interests and gliding her with ever-renewed strength.

It has come to pass, in this day, that a new gospel is proclaimed. In the multiplication of ways and means whereby a woman may be self-supporting, in the wide diffusion of educational advantages, and in the growing independence of young women, love and marriage are, in some quarters, looked upon as incidental. One even hears the phrase, glibly uttered, "the bachelor girl," a phrase fitted to send a shiver to the heart of old-fashioned people, like myself, who yet hold fast to the traditions of their youth.

That girls may, and often must, take care of themselves; that every girl should be past mistress of some bread-winning art or trade worth its full value in the great world market, I fully and unswervingly believe. It is well to love and to be loved, and to marry and "settle down" while people are young, and brave, and fearless of risks.

It is well for two faithful hearts to plight each other in loyal troth, to stand before God's altar together, and then to begin a united life, if needful, on very narrow means. Years ago a young artist, who has since then arrived at a competence and secured a world-wide fame, married a young girl who was to be, through many years, his other self—the complement of every quality he possessed. They lived in a conservative land across the sea, where the chances for growth and for remuneration were less than in this republic. The artist decided that here in America he would find the best field for his powers, and the little concubine of two disowned the advisability of taking flight from the old home.

"We are very poor, liechen," said the husband. "It may be well for me to go first, and send for you when I've secured a foothold. You can be so much more comfortable with your parents than in the privations which may be before us in the New World."

But the young wife's eyes glowed with fire; her rounded cheeks and red lips were full of resolve.

"I will go with you, Fritz," she said firmly. "Where there is bread for one, will be bread for two."

No consideration in marriage should be permitted to set itself before the primal reason for marriage, viz., love. And yet so elusive is love, so deceitful are human hearts, that a girl should think carefully and prayerfully before accepting even in herself as love what may be only gratified vanity or the complacency of being discovered charming and attractive.

A girl does well to listen with respect to her parents and friends in their mature experience leads them to doubt the fitness of the suitor who aspires to her hand. The father and mother who have loved their daughter all her life have a claim to be regarded when she is to go from their care to that of another. A girl is unwise and unfaithful who sets her own will at once in opposition to the wishes of her parents in a matter so important as the decision of whom she shall marry.

Waiting and patience will usually overcome the opposition of parental love; if finally consent be withheld without good and sufficient reason, the young people are justified in going forward on their proposed route in a union blessed of God.

Never, dear girls, let anybody persuade you that better, truer God-service can be done in the public walks of life than in the comparative seclusion of the family. In that Eden the Lord God still walks in the cool of the day, and ever there he dispenses the sweetness of his favor.

Never let anybody persuade you further that the sum of disappointment and misery in wedded life surpasses the sum of joy and abundant recompense. Or that there is any better rule than the good old rule of "bear and forbear." Or that because there is here and there a wreck on the lee shore, there are not fleets and argosies sailing blithely on the broad ocean waves of life.

Our social fabric, our church stability, the welfare of those who are to come after us, depend largely on the prevalence of true and honorable love, and on the dignity of faithful marriage. He who has given the earth to the children of men has ordained from the beginning the setting of the children of men in well-ordered families. Early love has received a divine sanction through all the years of time.

Happy are the sweet girls, not too easily won, who are courted by good men, and who return in full measure the love of such. Of good men! A girl must not marry a dissolute man that she may reform him! She will not succeed. Let his reform precede his effort to gain the crowning distinction of manhood, a devoted wife. And, if possible, let both parties to wedlock love in the Lord, thus founding at the altar a Christian home.—Epworth Herald.

Laughter and Tears.

Laughter and Tears met one day, in a shady lane. The sunshine and shade mingled pleasantly there, and the breath of the woods was strong in the air, as was also the fragrance of the clover field near by. But the lane was all too narrow to allow both to pass, for Laughter was bolshierous, and rumbled about so much that he took up a deal of room; while Tears seemed to be half-blind and could scarcely see her way.

She said in a voice like the song of a night bird:

"Why don't you let me pass? This is my path."

"No," replied Laughter, "this lane is mine, and I am in a hurry, so you'd better climb the fence into the dark woods and walk through the dead leaves."

"Why don't you climb the other fence," said Tears, softly, "and run along through the clover, in the sunshine? I'm sure you'd like it better."

"Well," rejoined Laughter, pleasantly, "I'm sure I don't want to quarrel with so gentle a maiden, and so, as you don't seem able to agree about the path, suppose I turn about and go with you?"

"That would be very pleasant, indeed," said Tears, "for I am lonely."

So they went on together, through the twinkling albine and shadow, and each felt better for the company of the other.

And that is why it is that when you meet Laughter you are almost sure to find Tears not far away.—Detroit Free Press.

How to Bear Burdens.

Years ago I heard a little incident that I never forgot. In the East there is a hospital for the lepers, and Moravian missionaries have gone there to live and die among them. A high fence encloses the grounds, and one day a man was curious enough to climb up the fence that he might see the lepers in the garden, and he saw this strange sight: a man who had feet carrying a man who had hands, but no feet. The man who had feet scratched up the ground with his foot, and the man on his back dropped the seed he carried into the ground. I have often thought of the circumstance. We have to supplement the defects of others, and they ours. "I hear you one another's burdens." I wish we could get down to real simplicity in the burden-bearing business. In the long ago, when I lived in a dear little personage and had little children, there came to see me a plain-looking little woman, a member of our church, who said: "You spoke last night of bearing one another's burdens, and I thought maybe you would let me help you bear yours, so I have come around to darn your stockings for you. You must have a basket full." And so I had. That basket full of stockings I can see them now. And the dear little woman! she sat quietly mending the stockings. She did bear my burdens, for there were no sewing machines and I had so much sewing to do.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Languishing Faith.

To-day religion is not so much of a battlefield as it is a hospital for sick and disabled folk; it is very often only a round of poultices and plaster and nursing and diet, where the talk is of troubles and trials and what we have to go through. I have met religion looking very unlike the warrior of the maiden martyr. A poor thing, coughing a feeble apology for its existence, and timidly promising not to get into anybody's way if we will only let it alone; that shuns its eyes for fear of seeing what is wrong, and holds its tongue for fear of giving offense; a poor, sick, sighing thing that can do nothing in the world but sit by the fire nursing itself, creeping very occasionally into the sunshine when the wind is not in the east. There is much need that we add to our faith virtues that we keep alive this spirit of daring—fearless, outspoken, determined. We need a religion that is a thorough nuisance to those who go through it with an eye like an eagle's for anything that is not straight, and making a hideous grumbling indignantly. A courage that can not die, but can not be put down; that can be laughed at and starved if need be, but can not do other than the right and speak other than the truth. There is much faith to day, but we want this courage to go right out to live, and dare, and endure—in one word, we want a great enthusiasm for Jesus Christ.—Mark Guy Pearce.

Card-Playing.

That accomplished writer, the late Dr. Holland, of Springfield, Mass., said: "I have all my days had a card-playing community open to my observation, and I am yet to be made to believe that that which is the universal resort of the starved in soul and intellect, which has never in any way linked to itself tender, elevating or beautiful associations—the tendency of which is to unduly absorb the attention from more weighty matters—can recommend itself to the favor of Christ's disciples. The presence of outdone and genius may embellish; but it can never dignify it. I have at this moment," said Dr. Holland, "ringing in my ears the dying injunction of my father's early friend, 'Keep your son from cards. Over them I have murdered time and lost heaven.'"

Fathers and mothers, keep your sons from cards in the home circle. What must a good angel think of a mother at a prayer meeting asking prayers for the conversion of her son whom she allowed to remain at home playing cards for "pastime"?—M. P. Gaddis.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

AN AWFUL STORY.

There is a little maiden,
Who has an awful time;
She has to hurry awfully,
To get to school at nine.

She has an awful leecher,
Her tasks are awful hard,
Her playmates all are awful rough
When playing in the yard.

She has an awful kitty,
Who often shows her claws;
A dog who jumps upon her dress,
With awful muddy paws.

She has a baby sister,
With an awful little nose,
With awful cunning dimples,
And such awful little toes.

She has two little brothers,
And they are awful boys;
With their awful drums and trumpets,
They make an awful noise.

De come, good fairy, Common Sense,
Come and this maid defend,
Or else I fear her awful life
Will have an awful end.

—Educational Journal.

[This "awfulness" is not confined to little maidens, nor small boys. The editor celled, not long since, upon a lady who has passed middle age, and was greeted in this way: "I'm awful glad you came."—Eurota.]

To Japan.

IF YOU LOOK OUT MOUNTAINS.

The necessity of a few hours of waiting at Chattanooga was at first regretted, but after I was on the top of Lookout Mountain, I was glad. The ascent is by means of a wonderful cable railway, claimed to be the steepest in the world. It takes you up above city and plain and valley into the clouds, from whence the Tennessee river, seen winding for forty miles, appears as a brook, and the great trains in the fields below as Christmas toys. A guide, or an old soldier—if you should be so fortunate as to get with one—can, from the top, point out to you the battlefields of Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, and other places of historical interest. A dummy line runs to many fascinating localities upon the mountain; a very fine hotel, a war-relic museum, much natural scenery of water and rock. I especially remember a rock named "The Judgment Seat." It looked, indeed, as if the King of kings might sit upon it and assemble below him, upon the vast fields and opposite mountain-sides, the men of all ages, and judge them there.

Dr. S. A. Steel, of Nashville, in writing of his trip to Lookout during the past summer, said: "A man can not be a pessimist upon a mountain." And yet I met up there a man who, because he was not selling relics as fast as he wished, was fuming with all the world besides, even with the Bible, and Christians, and God. Nor mountain air nor any other circumstance can purify the heart.

But I think that school authorities and parents, even as far away as Mississippi and Louisiana, would be wise to club together, get a very cheap rate, and make an excursion with the school-children to Lookout a substitute for the annual picnic. The inspiration given would amply repay the expense. I expect to go on such a trip with 200 students next month. We are to walk over the mountains to a city fifty miles away, and return at the end of a week by steamboat.

Some Clever Catches.

A young lady was once talking with a very young and very smart man, who was inclined to air his knowledge of the languages a little beyond what she felt that modesty required. She, therefore, said to him, with an air of deference to his superior attainments:

"You are a Latin scholar. I wish you would tell me how to pronounce the word 'to-met-lies'."

"The youth, with an air of kindly patronage, replied, 'I have not met the word in my Latin reading, but I should have no hesitation in saying that it should be pronounced 'so-met-lies' (giving it in four syllables, the accent on the second).

"Thank you for telling me," replied the girl, demurely. "I have always heard it pronounced 'sometimes'; but if you say the other way, that must be right."

This is similar to the perhaps familiar catch on the pronunciation of "bac-kac-be," which will often surprise the uninitiated by proving to be only backache. It almost reminds one of a question printed some years since, as to the way of spelling "need"—to need bread. The average person will reply, "k-n-e-e-d, of course"; but the answer will be, "That is the way to spell knead dough, but not to need bread."

A young lady recently misted a family in a most heartless way. She remarked, "I had a letter to-day, and how do you imagine the little preposition 'to' was spelled?"

"Too," suggested mama.

"Two," suggested papa.

"Tew," "Teu," "Tu," ventured various voices.

Lily, who was much engaged with her French lessons just then, suggested "tout," and Tom, in derision, improved upon that with "tueue," declaring that must be right in order to rhyme with "queue."

"All wrong!" exclaimed the young lady, when the alphabet and their ingenuity were well exhausted.

Just then Teddy, who had been soberly absorbed in his bread and honey, and who was in his first term at school, and wrestling with the problem of words in two letters, raised his head, and with an air of decision and importance, gravely spelled, "T-o, to."

"Yes," cried the young lady, with a peal of laughter.

"Why," exclaimed the others, in dismayed chorus, "that is the right way to spell it!"

"Exactly," she replied; "and that is the way my correspondent spelled it. You do not suppose I correspond with persons who can not even spell correctly, do you?"—Horner's Young People.

Miss Flossie, so the papers say, is only six years old, but thoughtfully we take it, as she said one day:

"Mama, if I get married, will I have a husband like pet?" "Yes," replied the mother, with an amused smile. "And if I don't get married, will I have to be an old maid like Aunt Kate?" "Yes," "Mama," after a pause, "it's a tough world for us women, ain't it?"

In many cases it is very hard to fix the bounds of good and evil, because these part, as day and night, which are separated by twilight.—Whitcomb.

SCIENTIFIC.

The Types of Monomania.

There are different types or classes of monomanias. They are all the same disease, but different types. First, there is the monomania with broad delusions of grandeur. These are the pettiest who believe that they are some exalted personage; they believe that they have done some great thing which entitles them to large reward from the government; they believe they are inventors. Here is a man who has a delusion of exalted personality; he believes that he is Jesus Christ. That is not an uncommon form; but a more interesting class of a higher type of mind are those who believe that they have been great benefactors. We have such a woman in the hospital, fifty years of age, who has applied for and received from the Patent Office at Washington regularly issued patents. They have recognized her in Washington as an eccentric woman, whose patents are of little if any value; but she has paid her money for the patents and has received them. This woman has invented several useless articles of wearing apparel, from which inventions she thinks she ought to receive a large sum of money. She is perfectly coherent, and so reasonable in some things, that some sane people think she is improperly incarcerated here. She writes a great many letters to the authorities, but in other respects is perfectly sane, and is not a little inclined to conceal her delusion. We are told by Clouston of an insane man in Edinburgh, who invented a penance for the sins of mankind; when out on parole he sold this stuff for a shilling a bottle to the same citizens of Edinburgh, showing that he had more sense than they.

Monomanias with ambitious schemes are another type. They force themselves into public notice, and seek interviews with prominent persons; if not treated with consideration, they become resentful, and perhaps dangerous. Guitauze was of this class.

Next we have delusions of persecution and insane suspicion. There lies now in Moyamensing prison a man under sentence of death for killing a jeweler in this city. He is a well-marked case of delusional insanity or monomania. I have examined him several times. He believed people were after him to poison him. He made murderous assaults upon his wife and children, and ended by casting her into the street. He had impracticable ambitious schemes, which led him into pursuits which he could not carry out. He one day took a $250 watch to a jeweler, and found him not like a first-class instrument. Being ejected from the shop, he whipped out a pistol and shot the jeweler dead. This is an instance of monomaniacal revengeful interference and avenging wrong. One of the most interesting cases of this kind was James H. Hafford, who shot at King George III, in Drury Lane Theatre, and who illustrated the fact that monomania may be ingrained upon a traumatic, as well as an hereditary basis. He had received many wounds in battle, one of which had penetrated the brain, and left it exposed. Immediately after his recovery he began to exhibit delusions. These eventually led him to shoot at the king in the theatre. His case was the nucleus of one of the most brilliant pieces of forensic eloquence in the history of medical jurisprudence. In that speech Erskine brought out that systematized delusion was the basis of the insanity, and on this point alone acquitted his client. These cases then are of great importance, because they constitute the vast majority of the criminal insane.—Dr. J. H. Lloyd.

How to Live a Century.

First. Live as much as possible out-of-doors, never letting a day pass without spending at least three or four hours in the open air.

Second. Keep all the powers of mind and body occupied in congenial work. The muscles should be developed and the mind kept active.

Third. Avoid excesses of all kinds, whether of food, drink, or of whatever nature they may be. Be moderate in all things.

Fourth. Never despair. Be cheerful at all times. Never give way to anger. Never let the trials of one day pass over to the next.

The period from fifty to seventy-five years should not be passed in idleness or abandonment of all work. Here is where a great many men fail—they resign all care of interest in worldly affairs, and rest of body and mind beguile. They throw up their business and retire to private life, which in too many cases proves to be a special policy.

During the next period—the period from seventy-five to one hundred years—while the powers of life are at their lowest ebb, one can not be too careful about "catching cold." Bronchitis is a most prolific cause of death in the aged. During this last period rest should be in abundance.

Anybody who can follow all these directions ought to live to be two hundred years old at least. There is always this disclaimer, however: We can not live up to our ideals always, we can at least try our best to do so, and the steady effort will be bringing us constantly nearer them.—Medical Age.

THE CAVE-DWELLERS OF MEXICO.—Mr. Carl Lumholtz, who has been exploring the old cave-dwellings of New Mexico, has now published an account of his researches, from which we gather that the most remarkable caves he visited are situated at the headwaters of the Piedras Verdes river, 6,500 feet above the sea-level. They open in the walls of a canyon from 100 to 200 feet above the river, and some of them are 50 feet from floor to ceiling. They contain villages or groups of deserted houses built of rounded porphyry, some of which are three stories in height and provided with small windows, cruciform doors, and stone stairways. Large ovens, or jars, curiously decorated, and a great quantity of pottery were found. On the shady side of the canyon the caves were reserved for sepulchre, and the bodies in them had become mummified by the saltpetre of the rock. Photographs were taken of these, and in some instances, the hair, eyebrows and features were nearly perfect. The hair is softer and wavier than that of the Red Indian, and the features resemble those of the extinct Mogul and Aztec tribes, who have a tradition to the effect that they formerly came from the South. The Mogul Indians are so unlike the ordinary Indians of the North that the American travelers used to call them Welsh Indians, and believed them to be the descendants of the followers of Prince Madoc. It is certainly singular that the Moguls were a striped blanket which is similar in the wool to the old Welsh blanket. They are not the only Indians, however, who have been taken for the descendants of the Mogul Indians. The same world was claimed for the Mandans, among others, because they appeared to be of a different skin than the generally of the Indians. The occurrence of albinos among the Moguls might help to account for the supposition.—Conrad's Family Magazine.

We may truly conceive of God, though we can not fully conceive of him. We may have exact apprehensions of him, though not an exact comprehension of him.

"Continual dropping wears away the stone."

The continual breaking of lamp-chimneys costs a good deal in the course of a year.

You can stop it. Get Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass." You will have no more trouble with breaking from heat. You will have clear glass instead of misty; fine instead of rough; right shape instead of wrong; and uniform, one the same as another.

You will pay a nickel a chimney more; and your dealer will gain in good-will what he loses in trade; he will widen his trade by better service.

SHIVERS—JOHN M. SHIVERS, M. D., son of John M. and Sarah Catherine Shivers, was born on Feb. 12, 1864, in Davidson county, Tenn. Dr. Shivers' life showed that he had been raised in a Christian home by Christian parents. He joined the M. E. Church, South, in the fourteenth year of his life, of which he remained a member about fourteen years. He was a man of high Christian integrity, and honored the cause of Christ by walking worthy of the vocation wherewith he was called. He believed in Christ, and acted upon the principles of his faith in every relation of life. Such men as he were truly the light of the world and salt of the earth, and those who live as he lived do truly become pillars in the temple of our God while they are on earth, and saints in the church above.

He attended the school of the Webb brothers, at Cooke's, Tenn., and graduated from there in 1881. Soon after he graduated he went to Texas, and taught school for seven months at Hillsboro, of that State.

The first of September, in the Fall of 1886, he came to Mississippi and took charge of the Winona District School, at Black Hawk, in Carroll county, and taught this school for seven months. During this time met and soon afterwards married Miss Elizabeth Kittrell, daughter of Dr. B. F. Kittrell, of Black Hawk.

Soon after he married he decided to make a physician of himself, and in the Fall of 1887 he went to Nashville, Tenn., and entered the Medical Department of Vanderbilt University, and in 1888 he graduated from that school, and came home well prepared for the profession of his life. He practiced one year as a partner with Dr. B. F. Kittrell at home, and in the Winter of 1889 he moved to Sledge, Leflore county, Miss., where he was rapidly building up a good substantial practice and also establishing himself in his profession as a doctor. He did not only establish himself in his profession, but as a neighbor and as a Christian gentleman and worker in the church and Sunday-school.

Never were two young hearts and lives more devotedly united than his and his wife's; and the time they were allowed to live together not one cloud or shadow crossed their pathway to mar their happiness, but all was sunshine and peace. The Lord blessed their home with three children—all girls—and never were children dowered with the love of two united hearts more than these three little girls.

Dr. Shivers was taken with slow fever at home in Sledge about the first of July, and, as soon as it was decided that he had slow fever, he was removed to the home of his father-in-law, at Black Hawk, where he was treated by that competent and skillful gentleman, Dr. B. F. Kittrell. He also had the best of nursing by his wife and her mother, and his sister, Mrs. Sykes, of Tennessee. But all that skill and nursing and prayers could do failed, for the Lord was ready to take him home, and at 3 P. M., on Oct. 10, 1892, he died.

He had a consciousness from the first that he never would get well, and said to the writer of this sketch that it would take more than human power to cure him, for he thought too had nearly come, and, "I need your prayers, if I ever did." He expressed himself as being ready to go, and not afraid to die, several times during his sickness, and said he did not have one doubt or fear but that he would go to heaven. In losing Dr. Shivers, the church has lost an active, strong man; the community, a good physician and neighbor; the wife, a true, devoted husband; the children, a loving and careful father; the pastor, a friend and brother; indeed, but heaven has gained a jewel. May the Lord guide the feet of the wife and children in that straight and unswerving path, and some day may they meet, an unbroken family, in the city of the great King!

COLBERT—Mr. W. H. COLBERT was born in Natchez county, Miss., Jan. 15, 1815, and died May 7, 1892. He was left without a father when nine years old. His mother died just before he reached manhood. Hereof mother and child, he was left to fight the battles of life alone. He was happily married in 1870. Mr. Colbert was not a member of the church. He was a very conscientious man. Feeling that he was not worthy of church privileges, he made the mistake of remaining out of the church. Four years ago he heard Sam Jones preach in Jackson, Miss. He then made a profession of Christ, after which he erected the family altar and for some months prayed with his family. At the time of his death the writer was conducting a home of vital meeting in Ulice, the home of the deceased. During the meeting Mr. Colbert manifested a great deal of interest about his salvation. On one occasion he came forward, and said, "I am determined, by God's grace, to make my life an eternal success." On the night before his death he and his wife talked about his joining the church, and he assured her that he intended to join in the near future. While he was dying he said he was trusting in the Savior. He prayed very earnestly for divine mercy.

Mr. Colbert was one of our best citizens. By industry and economy he accumulated a good property. With his means he helped others. He did not oppress the poor to increase his own wealth. With his means he helped poor men to buy homes. The poor people revere his memory. While and black said he was the best poor man's friend in the world. With deep emotions many of the poor people said to me: "He is the best friend I ever had. I do not know what we are to do without him."

Mr. Colbert was an affectionate husband and an indulgent father. He ever carried sunshine and joy into his home. In his death the community has sustained a great loss. A valuable citizen, an affectionate husband and a loving father has gone to his final reward. We shall see his cheerful face or hear his joyful voice no more till we meet on the other shore. He leaves to mourn his death a wife, six children, many loved ones and a host of friends. May the God of all grace comfort his widow and fatherless children!

SPENCER—GEORGE HENRY SPENCER, son of Lambert Wicks Spencer and Mrs. Anna Spencer, was born in Talbot county, Md., Aug. 5, 1823. His father died in 1836. His mother moved to Columbus, Ga., where he was raised and educated. In 1854 he was employed in the Treasury Department, Washington City. He served in the same capacity in the Confederate Government, Richmond, Va. He was in the local Confederate service. His infirmity, defective hearing, prevented his joining the regular army. He came to New Orleans in 1865, and in 1868 he settled in Bogie, Chitto, Miss. He was happily married by Rev. Wm. Hoover at Myrtle Place, Miss., to Miss E. J. Hoover, daughter of the late Judge Christian Hoover, of Pike county, Miss., Dec. 10, 1868. He returned to Columbus, Ga., in 1870; remained until 1875, when he settled in Pike county, Miss., where he lived continuously until December, 1891, he removed to Lincoln county, Miss., where he died, after months of suffering, Sept. 2, 1892. He was confirmed in the Episcopal Church in Marshall, Texas, in 1864. In November, 1891, under the ministry of Rev. W. T. Griffin and Dr. Holbea, he requested his name to be enrolled on the church record—St. Mary's Chapel—his wife and four children being members of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Spencer was a cultured Christian gentleman, than which there is no higher type of manhood, and he is widely connected to some of the best families, being a kinsman of Bishop Keener's wife and Samuel Spencer, New York. He could not hear well, but "was glad to go to the house of the Lord," and supported the preacher by his presence and with his means. The writer gave him a copy of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." It proved of much spiritual benefit to him. He was enabled to lay hold of all the promises of God, and his heart rejoiced in hope of eternal life. In his late home this book is "a dear and sacred thing." Its pages are marked and blotted with tears of penitence, as he struggled into spiritual life, kneeling at Mary's footstool. While we mourn him as dead, he glorifies God above.

Mrs. M. L. J. HOOPER.

Myrtle Place, Miss.

BROWN—Mrs. CHARLOTTE BROWN, daughter of the late Wyatt Felder and Mrs. Cynthia Hope, was born in Pike county, Miss., Feb. 6, 1840. Her father was a holy-minded man of God, a leader in the church, and many remember his fervent prayers in the public congregation—such earnest wrestling with the Lord, as though he was alone with God.

Sister Brown first married H. E. Thornhill, July 11, 1858. Two children were born to them; both died young. Mr. Thornhill died June 25, 1862. In 1861 she was married to Mr. THOS. ROLLINS. He was a worthy, good man, and an esteemed citizen and a "Master Mason." Three daughters and a son were born to them. Mr. Rollins died in 1877.

Sister Brown joined the Methodist Church, at Topshaw, when a child. After her marriage to Mr. Rollins she united with the Baptist Church. On Jan. 31, 1878, she was again married to Wm. Brown. To them one son was born.

Sister Brown died Dec. 16, 1891, at the home of her husband, Lincoln county, Miss. She was a devoted mother, and her children have profited by her training. She was sick several months. Her faithful, devoted husband employed the best physicians and everything was done to restore her to health that love could suggest. Christian men and devout women attended her sick-bed, and many prayers were offered in her behalf. She asked the Lord to spare her to raise her young son; but when she knew she would not recover, she blessed her faithful husband and her sorrowing children, sweetly resigning herself to the Savior, who heard her sighs, regarded her tears with pity, and said to her waiting soul, "I am thy salvation."

FORD—Mrs. EMMA FORD (nee Henderson) was born March 8, 1848, and died Sept. 6, 1892.

Sister Emma joined the Methodist Church, South, when about twenty years of age, and remained in it until the day of her death—a devoted, zealous Christian. She was always at her post of duty, unless prevented by illness, and thought no cross too hard to be borne for Jesus.

Sister Emma has been a sufferer all her life, but for the last two years her suffering has been intense. At times it seemed hardly possible for a human being to endure such agony and live; but she lived and endured it all with patience, until the sixth day of September past, when, with words of victory upon her lips, she passed away to be at rest. Her last words were, "Blessed Jesus!" She has "fought a good fight," finished her course, "kept the faith," and now awaits the "crown of righteousness." Glorious victory! Triumphant death!

The entire family were present at her death, and though they sorrow, they "sorrow not as others which have no hope." They expect to meet again, in part no more, through him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life."

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

We use Alcohol

pure alcohol to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING. Alcohol is good for leather; it is good for the skin. Alcohol is the chief ingredient of Cologne, Florida Water, and Bay Rum the well known face washes. We think there is nothing too costly to use in a good leather preservative.

Acme Blacking retails at 20c. and at that price sells readily. Many people are so accustomed to buying a dressing or blacking at 5c. and 10c. a bottle that they cannot understand that a blacking can be cheap at 20c. We want to meet them with cheapness if we can, and to accomplish this we offer a reward of

Louisiana Conference

Short History.

BY REV. J. T. SAWYER, D. D.

The Louisiana Conference has made history; yet, creditable and thrilling as is that history and rich enough to yield a stout volume, it is only possible in the space allotted us in the Advocate to here and there make bare mention of the men and things belonging to the forty-five years of our Conference life. In the town of Opelousas, La., on Jan. 6, 1847, the Louisiana Conference was organized. The records tell us: "The Bishop not being present, the Rev. John Powell, the only presiding elder that had arrived, took the chair and opened the session by reading the twelfth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, singing Hymn 305, beginning, 'Forever here my rest shall be,' and prayer. On motion of David O. Shattuck, Wm. H. Crenshaw was elected secretary. The names of the members were then called by the secretary, and the following responded, to wit: Byron Benton, Wm. H. Crenshaw, Richard M. Crowson, Charles P. Clark, Philip H. DeKewerth, Moses Davis, Stephen J. Davies, John B. Eddins, Philo M. Goodwyn, Jesse A. Gulce, Cyrran Gridley, Wilson W. Jenkins, David Hinman, Thomas C. Lewis, Frederick P. Nixon, John Powell, John Piper, Robt. H. Reed, David O. Shattuck, John J. Weems, William H. Turner." These came in later: "Squire W. D. Chace, Wm. H. Watkins, John W. Harmon, William Hines, Richmond Rindie, Thompson C. Tindler." Thor. O. Summers, of the Southern Christian Advocate, and J. T. Mitchell, of the Western Book Concern, were present. Bishop Soule arrived in the afternoon and "took the chair." The following were admitted on trial: Christopher C. Preston, from Magazine Street station; Alex E. Goodwyn, from New Basin station; Wm. O. Chamberlin, from Texas circuit; and Zachariah Thompson, from Opelousas station. Henry B. Page, R-y-olds B. Trippett, Thor. J. Lacy, Uriah Whaley and Daniel G. Watkins were "probationers of one year." These were admitted into full connection: Lewis A. Reed, Chas. J. Halberg, E. W. F. Thwing and Wm. R. Guber. Richard Dering, from Kentucky, and Robt. J. Harp, from the Memphis Conference, came with others as transfers. Thor. Price, Lyndar Wiley, Daniel Delery, Malachi Dubose were "located at their own request." The secretary stated: "Bishop Soule, after delivering an address of much power, of deep and thrilling interest, which moved our hearts and enlightened our minds, read out the appointments." Presiding elders for the first year of our Conference existence were: New Orleans district, Squire W. D. Chace; Monroe district, Richmond Rindie; Vidalia district, Wm. H. Turnley; Opelousas district, John Powell; and Alexandria district, Wm. F. Brown. The New Orleans appointments were as follows: Payday Street, Joseph Cross; Andrew Chapel, John Piper; Lafayette and Cold charge, Lewis A. Reed; Steele Chapel, Richard Dering; Triton Walk, Wm. Hines; Soule Chapel, Stephen J. Davies; Beib-1, R. S. Trippett; Moreau Street and French Mission, Charles P. Clark; Deverberge and Gretna, Cyrran Gridley; German Mission, in third ward, Chas. Bruner. D. O. Shattuck was appointed president of Centenary College, and W. G. Gould, W. H. Watkins and R. W. Kennon were transferred to other Conferences. The figures with which the Louisiana Conference started out were as follows: White members, 4,715; colored, 3,329; total, 8,044. There were 31 local preachers, 22 Sunday-schools and 895 Sunday-school scholars.

The history went along, as is usual with Annual Conferences. The preachers went in and out and gathered the people and preached the gospel and formed societies and established missions among the negroes. These missions were very successful, and many of the negroes were converted and admitted into the church, some of our most earnest and devoted preachers being assigned from time to time to this work. Some interesting history is made during "war times."

The sixteenth session went to Alexandria, D. O. 11, 1861. No Bishop came, and J. C. Keener was elected President, presiding throughout and made the appointments. L. Parker was the secretary. In the minutes of this session stars (*) against the names of a number of the preachers direct to a note at the bottom of page, running thus: "In the army." We can not help feeling that the training received and the hardships encountered all along by our Louisiana preachers, in the cultivation of their difficult territory and in their ceaseless battles for God and the church, have developed in them soldierly qualities fitting them for creditable carriage upon any field of honorable conflict. The seveneenth session held at Bastrop, Dec. 10, 1862, was presided over by James A. Ivy, Goodwyn being secretary. Only twenty-one members appeared at the opening hour. The Rev. Dr. Keener presided over the eighteenth session, which convened at Homer, La., Dec. 2, 1863. P. M. Goodwyn was secretary. In the beautiful town of Minden was held, on Dec. 7, 1864 the nineteenth session, with J. C. Keener presiding, and L. Parker secretary. The statistics reported were exceedingly meagre; yet, notwithstanding the stringency of those war times, there was $2,038 brought up by the preachers for Conference claimants. Louisiana's war governor was thanked thus:

Resolved, That the Louisiana Annual Conference do hereby tender to his excellency, H. W. Allen, Governor of State of Louisiana, our hearty thanks for his gift of sufficient paper to publish the Minutes of said Conference for 1864.

No appointments were made in the New Orleans district, and a number of charges outside the city were left un-supplied. An interesting memorandum is made at the end of the Minutes, showing that twenty-one works were then "in the enemy's lines." The following brethren were noted as, "In Army Service: C. C. Gillespie, C. W. Hodge, J. F. DeWitt and Wade H. Frost;" and these as, "Missionaries and Chaplains to the Army: B. F. Alexander, J. L. Wright, T. B. Baldwin, J. C. Keener, W. C. Young and T. B. White." There were twelve of the preachers laboring in the bonds of other Conferences, among whom we note the names of J. B. Walker, C. J. Halberg, J. F. Scurlock, Fred White, H. N. McTyeire and R. J. Harp.

From the twentieth session the work of the Conference went forward slowly, but surely. Preachers did their work, and died, and others came in to take their places. Some transferred to other fields of labor, still the work progressed. The numbers in membership increased with the years; the agencies for doing the church work multiplied with the needs of the times, and the means for supporting the work were increased correspondingly. There is much in all that past of Methodist history that invites us to linger, but the space allotted us cuts us off from detail. We come to the present position.

The last session, the forty-sixth, was held at that thriving city on Red river, Alexandria, on Dec. 16, 1891. Bishop John C. Keener presided, and John T. Sawyer was the secretary, assisted by Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker. The statistics showed 95 clerical members of the Conference and 13 on trial. Of the 95, 9 are supernumeraries.

There were reported to Conference, at Alexandria, these creditable figures: Local preachers, 81; members, 20,483; number of churches, 234; value of churches, $431,340; number of parsonages, 61; value of parsonages, $24,915; value of other church property, $198,546.35; number of Sunday-schools, 218; number of Sunday-school scholars, 10,179; paid the preachers, $64,289.12; paid Bishops, $848.05; raised for Conference claimants, $4,116.70; raised for foreign missions by churches and Sunday-schools, $5,863.44; raised for domestic missions, $1,261.15; raised by Woman's Missionary Society, $1,043; raised for church extension by churches and Woman's Department, $2,368.85. There have been organized a few Epworth Leagues in the bounds of the Conference, and encouraging mention is made of them in the report of the Sunday-school Board.

At first blush it seems that a little over 20,000 members, after forty-five years of labor, is nothing much; yet, when it is remembered that in all the bounds of our Southern Methodistism there can scarcely be found a more difficult field, than the lowlands and swamps of our largely Catholic Louisiana, with its chief city populated to a great extent by people from Continental Europe and their children, all of them permeated with the loose, religious notions prevalent in that part of the world, we may well wonder that our fathers and the workers of to day have gathered so many to our exalted standard of character and life. Our little host, well handled and filled with the Spirit, may, under God, easily double their numbers by the beginning of the twentieth century. The Louisiana Conference has indeed made history, and we of this day can do no better than to emulate the example and work of those who, preceding us, have wrought in their day the will of God in this State, have fallen at their posts, and are now in the possession of their eternal reward.

Domestic Missions.

BY REV. FRANKLIN N. PARKER.

The problem of domestic missions, or evangelistic enterprise at home, is a question of need and supply. An estimate of the need is made from data derived from a discriminating study of the religious, educational and social status of the people, and as affected by existing evangelistic enterprise. The question of supply calls for the consideration of qualified workers and the means for their support.

From these points of view I have endeavored to study the problem in this State. However, as yet I have not succeeded in securing all the necessary data, but hope to do so at some future time. The advance sheets of the census of 1890 enable us to give some estimate as regards our immediate necessities. This, coupled with the statistics given in the Minutes of our last Annual Conference, will indicate the status of our church. The boundaries of the Louisiana Conference embrace fifty-one of the fifty-nine parishes in the State, having a population of approximately—500,000 white people, chiefly native born. In the entire State there are 184,394 educable white children, having an attendance in the public schools of 74,988; private schools, 13,573; parochial schools, 5,856. According to the census, these parochial schools are divided as follows: Roman Catholic, 33; Lutheran, 11; German Evangelical, 3; German Presbyterian, 1. Six hundred and twenty-two colored pupils are included in these schools. If the above figures are correct, there are about 89,977 white children of educable age who are not attending school in the State. Possibly a large number attend college in other States, but it is scarcely probable that there are many. It is important to note that these estimates of educable children are made upon the basis of from five to seventeen years as the educable age. According to this, the extent of illiteracy among us is very great. We now proceed to a serial review of the various presiding elders' districts.

Delhi District—Embraces the following parishes: East Carroll, West Carroll, Morehouse, Ouachita, Richland, Madison, Texas, Franklin, a part of Catahoula, having an approximate population of 19,239 whites. The census gives to these parishes 810 Roman Catholics. Our own strength there is represented by 13 charges, 1,998 members, 27 churches, 26 Sunday-schools, having 1,057 scholars. The section included in this district is supplied, except in a few communities, with the gospel by our church. The southern part of East Carroll is destitute of the gospel from Protestants. There is but one church in Madison, the southern part being wholly destitute. However, in these two places there are very few communities where a congregation of ten white persons could be collected. There is also a small strip of country in Morehouse without regular preaching from an itinerant minister. This district is not as fully supplied with Sunday schools as it ought to be. The presiding elder of this district, from whom I have received the above information, thinks that there are two or three places where judicious appropriations could be made. The population in this district is sparse, and the country subject to disastrous overflows. The work done here has been heroic, but concentration is necessary.

Arcadia District—This district embraces the following parishes: Udon, Claiborne, Lincoln, Jackson, Bienville, Webster, one ward of Red River, one ward of Natchitoches, two wards of Winn, having a population of about 45,731 whites. The estimate of Romanists here is about 150. Our own strength is represented by 17 charges, 6,234 members, 64 churches, 48 Sunday-schools, 2,215 scholars. A number of circuits in this district require missionary appropriations.

Shreveport District—Embraces the parishes of Sabine, Natchitoches, De Soto, Caddo, Bossier, having a population of 39,795 whites. Romanist membership, 13,700. Our strength is as follows: 18 charges, 3,875 members, 55 churches, 45 Sunday-schools, scholars, 1,816.

Alexandria District—Embracing the parishes of Rapides, Avoyelles, Catahoula, Caldwell, Winn, Grant, Concordia, Vernon, parts of Calcasieu and St. Landry, having a population of 52,076 whites. Large portions of this district are destitute, and other portions poorly supplied as to quantity and quality. We have here 15 charges, 2,969 members, 44 churches, 33 Sunday-schools, 1,566 scholars. Romanist membership, 15,060.

Opelousas District—Embracing the parishes of St. Mary, Iberia, Acadia, Vermillion, Lafayette, St. Landry, Calcasieu, Cameron. St. Martin lies on the boundary, but, although having a white population of 6,888, there is not a Protestant congregation in the parish, so far as we have been able to learn. The entire white population is 94,063; Romanist membership is estimated at 60,732. Our position is shown by 14 charges, 3,966 members, 23 churches, 33 Sunday-schools, 1,566 scholars. The presiding elder of this district informs me that there is a large portion of destitute territory in several of the parishes of his district. The whole of the large French and Creole element is untouched by our preachers, as we have not a single French speaking preacher in the field. Bro. Miller says, "Nearly all of this field is now ripe, ready for the harvest, if we had the man and the means."

New Orleans District—Embraces the parishes of Orleans, Point Coupee, Iberville, Assumption, Lafourche, Terre Bonne, Plaquemine, Jefferson, Ascension, West Baton Rouge, St. Bernard, St. Charles, St. John Baptist, St. James, and the city of Baton Rouge in East Baton Rouge parish. The total white population of these parishes is 259,834; estimated Roman Catholic membership, 110,860. All these figures of Romanist membership make no discrimination of color, but the great majority are white, in my opinion. A great deal of destitution is in this district. In Point Coupee and West Baton Rouge, having a gross population of near 7,000, we have one circuit—the Gros Teite and False River—having 96 members. In Iberville and Ascension we are represented by the Plaquemine and Donaldsonville work, with a membership of 59 in a population of 14,678 whites. In Assumption we have no representation. None in St. Charles, having 1,579 whites; none in St. John Baptist, 4,674 white population; none in St. James, having 5,652 white people. In Jefferson we have one church, but no preacher. In a white population of 6,687. In Lafourche we have a church, but no preacher. Possibly a house in Terre Bonne, but no preacher. Plaquemine and St. Bernard, with a population of 7,710, is supplied by the Lower Coast Mission; membership of 50.

The territory of the New Orleans district, outside of the city proper, is, with three exceptions, without any ministerial supply from our church, or any other Protestant denomination; and in order to reach this section and a large part of the Opelousas district, we must have French-speaking missionaries, and the field is as much a missionary one as Mexico. It does seem that the times and the condition call for men and women who will learn the language and dedicate themselves to this important work. In the upper and middle portions of the State our greatest need is concentration. The circuits are too large to admit of proper working. For instance: There are only three appointments in the Alexandria district that have preaching more than once a month. At this rate we can do very little toward permanent development. As Presiding Elder Hoffpauert says, "We can not build our people, nor build up our churches, unless they are better supplied with preaching and the means of grace." We must concentrate and put our strongest men in these fields, or remain where we have been for forty years. A concentrative, constructive and fortifying policy is needed in Methodism, particularly in its mission fields. This is secured by careful organization and assiduous teaching. Another necessary factor in this work is the employment of trained lay workers, who shall give their whole time to the work.

If Bible women are needed in the foreign field, they are equally needed in the home work. This is especially true in city work, where women can go and reach a class almost wholly inaccessible to the preachers. The Methodists, North, have met this need by the organization of the deaconess movement, which has been a great success thereto. We must do something to open up the field for the consecrated womanhood of our church. I know personally of a number of devoted Christian women who are anxious to enter upon a course of Christian activity, but lack the training and the opportunity. To meet this emergency is the immediate duty of the church. The Kansas City Training-school will probably help us here. But can we not do something here in New Orleans? This is at once the most important and difficult field in the Conference, and yet it offers the best vantage ground for operations in the interior. The strongholds of the church have ever been in the great centers of population. Of old, Christianity was first planted in the cities. The Apostolic Church began in Jerusalem, then proceeded to Antioch, and thence outward. The great Apostle to the Gentiles labored mainly in the cities, such as Philippi, Ephesus, Thessalonica, Corinth and Rome, and the history of the church still further illustrates this idea; therefore, I maintain that the strength of New Orleans Methodism is essential to the growth of the church in the State at large.

Right here in the heart of the city, where it is most needed, we have a work started, the value of which is difficult to estimate, known as the Toboupolis Mission. It has fallen, literally fallen into our hands by a most singular providential process, and affords a field for soul-winners and liberal lovers of our Lord to expend their energies and their means, such as is rarely found. As a center for extended operations throughout the city, it is unexcelled; as a field for the training of workers, it offers what the medical men would call unusually good clinical facilities, and on this account it might become the nucleus of a valuable training-school. Much could be said about this great field, of its needs, its promising and inviting territory; but time and space will not permit. As to the money problem, I have this to say: Wherever there is a genuine work of faith and labor of love successfully prosecuted, there is never a lack of the means for its perpetuation.

In conclusion, suffer a word of exhortation. The words of the Master, and the need of immortal souls voice a command and an inspiration to the Methodists of Louisiana. The holy privilege of proclaiming and sending the blessed evangel to the lost, the poor and needy, will sweeten your acts of self-denial, and enrich the fragrance of your sacrifice of praise to the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ.

Are there not young men and women who will respond to the call of duty, and say, "Here am I; send me"? No human language appeals to my own heart more than the hymn:

Hark, the voice of Jesus calling,
"Who will go and work to-day?
Fields are white, and harvests waiting,
Who will bear the sheaves away?"
Long and loud the Master calleth,
Rich reward he offers free;
Who will answer, gladly saying,
"Here am I; send me, send me?"

If there be any vitality in our creed and genuineness in our religious experience, we can not hesitate, but must lay ourselves and our possessions upon that altar of consecration dedicated in the blood of the New Testament, even him who loved us and gave himself for us—Jesus, the mighty to save.

Methodist Schools.

BY REV. J. A. PARKER.

The history of the educational affairs of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Louisiana, is, in large measure, that of similar interests in other States—varied success, with a large measure of failure. It may be questioned whether or not too much destruction for success has contributed somewhat to the failures which have marred our history.

Prior to 1858, or, perhaps 1856, there was, so far as I can ascertain, only one school claiming the support of our church in Louisiana. About this time, Homer Male College; Pierce and Paine College, located at Pleasant Hill, now on the T. and P. railroad, and Mansfield Female College were projected. After a season of limited success Homer Male College passed out of our hands several years ago, and is now the property of a joint stock company. The buildings of Pierce and Paine College lie in ruins; but the church still owns about 800 acres of valuable land where the college originally stood. Mansfield Female College has continued to bless our church with her consecrated work, and is still sending out Christian women yearly to bless the church and the world. The prospects of the college are reported as encouraging under the presidency of Dr. A. D. McVoy.

Centenary College, our largest school, best equipped and adapted to its use, is not in the bounds of the Louisiana Conference, though it is in Louisiana, and is the joint property of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences. The organization of Centenary College antedates that of the other colleges of the Conference by nearly thirty years. As the name indicates, its organization was effected on the Centenary of Methodism—1830. It was the plan of Rev. B. M. Drake, D. D., from whom Centenary College sprang. Dr. Drake's idea of a Centenary College was approved by the Conference. Mississippi Conference at that time included the whole of Louisiana. A charter was obtained, and Revs. C. K. Marshall and E. R. Porter were appointed agents, whose duty it was made to secure an endowment. The success of the agents being sufficiently encouraging, the trustees took steps in the organization of a faculty. Among many other offers made to the Board, as an inducement to the location of the college, was Mississippi College, at Clinton, Miss. Rev. David Patton, principal of Williamson Academy, whom the Board had previously elected to the presidency of the college, not answering promptly, on the acceptance of Mississippi College the Board elected Rev. T. C. Thornton, D. D., president. He, with his brother, J. B. Thornton, M. D., professor of natural science; J. B. Dodd, professor of mathematics, constituted the first faculty. Before the time for opening the first session of Centenary College came, property at Brandon Springs was offered for sale, which the Board purchased, and abandoned the Clinton property. The school prospered, and in 1842 the faculty was increased by the election of two or three additional professors. At the end of the third session the faculty was reorganized, and Judge Shattuck made president. During the year 1845 the College of Louisiana (at Jackson, La.) was offered for sale. Judge McGhee, Capt. Thomas and Mr. John McKown assuming the responsibility of the debt, the Jackson property was bought.

In 1845 Centenary College opened up in its present quarters at Jackson, La. Judge Shattuck remained at the head of the college until 1848, when he was succeeded by Judge A. B. Longstreet. Judge Longstreet removing to California soon after his election, Rev. R. H. Rivera, D. D., was elected president, and served till 1854. Dr. Drake succeeded Dr. Rivera for a few months, when Rev. John C. Miller was elected, and served from 1855 to 1860. From '60 to '65 the operations of the college were suspended. Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D., was elected president in 1866; Dr. Andrews in 1869; Rev. D. M. Roach in 1882; Dr. T. A. S. Adams in 1885. In 1887 Prof. Wiley was president pro tem., and the present incumbent, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, D. D., was elected in 1888.

The alumni is composed of about 300 members. At present the college has an endowment of about $90,000, and building well worth $75,000. Last year there were nine professors and teachers employed in the college, and the present session has opened hopefully, and the prospects are encouraging to the friends of Centenary. Centenary College is a good place—and safe—for boys.

The value of our college property is about $118,000, exclusive of endowments.

Methodism in New Orleans.

The first Methodist who visited and preached in New Orleans was Rev. Eliza Bowman, a Kentuckian. He was sent by Bishop Asbury in 1805. New Orleans and Louisiana had been under Spanish, French and American rule in one short lifetime. When Bowman came, New Orleans contained some 15,000 inhabitants. He found no Methodists, no church-building, no home, and was locked out of the State House two consecutive Sabbaths, but preached on the pavement to a few listeners. In 1812 Rev. Miles Harper was the first pastor. After him was Rev. Lewis Hobbs. These pastors do not appear to have accomplished anything tangible. In 1813 and 1814 Rev. William Winans was appointed, and the Conference voted $30 to enable him to fill the station. He was boarded by a Bro. Knobb and wife. He rented a part of the house, and taught a small English school to take out a living. This house was on Bienville street. There was another godly name in New Orleans at this date—Theresa Canu. She was French; a refugee from St. Domingo to Wilmington, N. C. She was converted while in North Carolina at a camp meeting. She came to New Orleans, and was a succor of many. She lived to worship in Carondelet Street Church, and died in 1854. There being no domestic missionary money to sustain a pastor, no one was sent to New Orleans until 1819, when Rev. Mark Moore was appointed. After him came Rev. John Menlie, who died of yellow fever. His report shows 23 members. No further notice is taken of New Orleans until 1823, when Rev. Benjamin Drake, of the Mississippi Conference, was appointed. Much faithful work was done, but the progress was slow. In those days, somewhere on Tchoupitoulas street, our people worshipped in a loft (as in New York). After this a frame church was built on Gravier street, where the writer preached once in 1844. In 1827 Peyton S. Graves was stationed in New Orleans. He was succeeded by W. M. Curtis, who remained in charge three years. William V. Douglas was in New Orleans in 1831. In 1832, O. L. Nash; in 1833, B. M. Drake; in 1835, J. C. Burruss; in 1836, J. Travis; in 1837, S. W. Spear (in 1837 Dr. Winans and John Newland Masfit were appointed agents to raise money to build the Poydras Street Church); in 1838, Jefferson Hamilton; in 1839, W. L. Campbell and W. Watkins; in 1840, W. Watkins and Campbell; to Gravier Street and Lafayette Mission; in 1841, E. Siele, Poydras Street; W. Watkins, Spain Street; in 1842, Poydras, W. V. Nicholson; W. Watkins, Moreau Street; Lafayette, Rev. Langard. From 1842 to 1845 W. V. Nicholson and W. Watkins retained their appointments. H. A. Avery was in New Orleans in 1843 and 1844; Richard Deering in 1840. In 1847 Joseph Cross was at Poydras; in 1848, J. O. Keener; in 1850, H. N. McTyeire; in 1852, J. B. Walker. In 1851 the Poydras Street Church was burned, and rebuilt on Carondelet street in 1851 and 1852. Linus Parker succeeded H. N. McTyeire at Felicite Road in 1854, that church being built during H. N. McTyeire's pastorate. In 1852 Dr. Thwaitt was stationed at Moreau; succeeded by J. A. Ivy. Since 1852 some ten churches have been built or rebuilt. In all these churches are Sunday-schools, besides several mission schools.

The growth of Methodism in New Orleans has never, under any of its various and variously gifted ministers, been on a boom. It has always been a gradual progress. These ministers have come from England, New England; and the Southern and Western States. New Orleans Methodism, considering its conditions, has been fruitful in the production of ministers. The Methodists in New Orleans have had small and large churches, street preaching, and for years past joint parties in the ownership of a camp ground—"the Seashore"—where many successful sessions have been held. All the various machinery of Methodism has been employed, but the works of the enemy have been taken by slow and persistent approaches, and not by storm. The great want from the beginning has been a Sabbath. Business has engrossed the masses on secular days, and on Sundays many sorts of sensuous and sensational amusements have kept them from the house of God. It has been difficult to get together large congregations, especially of males. Then, in former years, more than now, the Summer exodus hindered, disorganized, and each Autumn we had, as it were, to begin again. But we grew.

J. B. WALKER.

Shreveport, La.

From the papers on file in the office of the recorder of Caddo parish, we find that the first Methodist Church was contracted for in 1845 by the following-named Building Committee: Rowland T. Bryarly, Henry Van Bibber, Thos. B. Jones and Dr. W.

W. George, the latter a leading and influential member of the Baptist Church. It was to be completed by the first of June, 1846. The contract price was one thousand dollars; else of building, thirty-five feet by forty feet, with sixteen feet between floor and ceiling. The church was erected in what is now known as the crossing of Market and Fannin streets, then a forest. Soon after it was ordered moved by the City Council, and was placed on the corner lot south of the street crossing. As no title appears on record in parish archives, the conclusion is reached that this lot was never deeded to the church, but by peaceable possession for over thirty years legal title was acquired under the law of our State. The first station preacher was our present presiding elder, Rev. R. J. Harp, who is still active in pushing forward the cause of Christ. The extensive work which he now serves bears evidence of his unabated zeal. Rev. Linus Parker followed Bro. Harp, and honestly and faithfully was his work done. His sermons were instructive and impressive. To a question asked him how he managed to get so much out of his subject, he replied, "I only expound the Scriptures."

Rev. Robert H. Reed, a charming, gentleman and eloquent divine, was the next to follow. Succeeding him was the Rev. R. R. Alexander. During these early days the church was well attended by residents of the country, and it was not an uncommon sight to see the street and forest near by crowded with horses and carriages, especially on quarterly meeting occasions.

Rev. Walker, from Kentucky, who won the hearts of his congregation by his devotion to duty, did not remain with his charge long on account of feeble health. He was succeeded by Dr. R. A. New. In 1850 Dr. James L. Chapman was in charge of the church; his preaching was good and his lectures instructive. The Rev. S. B. Surratt was pastor of the church at the breaking out of the Civil War, and during those exciting times he enlisted and was a member of the memorable Sixteenth Louisiana Regiment as chaplain. He died a member of the Memphis Conference after filling some of the important stations in that Conference. The writer remembers him affectionately.

From 1862 to 1866 the pulpit of the church was filled acceptably by a number of ministers, among them the Rev. S. J. Hawkins, as preacher in charge a portion of the time; Bishop J. C. Keener, Revs. L. Parker, E. H. Marvin, Col. Carter, and Gen. Lewis, the latter a preacher in charge in 1865.

The old church-building, after being in use over a score of years, was renovated and about twenty feet added to its length under the supervision of Rev. R. S. Trippett, who with energy and self-sacrifice ministered to our people from 1866 to 1870. During this trying period of our church history Dr. Trippett won the highest esteem from the whole people. He was ever ready to go on missions of mercy whenever called, and is remembered with affection, not only by his church members, but all with whom he came in contact. The Annual Conference was held in Shreveport, presided over by Bishop McTyeire, in January, 1870. Dr. Trippett's term having expired, he was succeeded by that much beloved, lamented and now sainted Rev. John Wilkinson. To say that he served his church well and acceptably seems but a calm expression. His godly walk and Christian bearing made an impression on all; his devotion and active service rendered in the trying ordeal of 1873 won for him the reverence of our whole people. The three years following our church was in charge of Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, a faithful shepherd, a logical expounder of the Word of God. He was highly esteemed for his many good qualities of mind and heart. Next Rev. Joel T. Daves had charge of the church for four years ending in 1880. His efforts to do his Master's service were not without good results. This year (1880) the Annual Conference was held in our little church presided over by Bishop J. C. Keener. The impression prevailed that our congregation needed a larger and better house of worship. It was reported that the Bishop told the Rev. J. T. Sawyer, who had been assigned to this charge, that he must build a new church. This faithful and resolute pastor went energetically to work to put in execution this laudable enterprise. Many obstacles were overcome, and work began on a subscription list in amounts ranging from $25 to $5,000, aggregating about $18,000—a portion of this on long time. Collections, of which a respectable amount is past due and unpaid, came in slowly, which retarded progress. Bro. Sawyer was zealous in all good works, and before leaving this station had the pleasure of seeing the work on the new church sufficiently advanced to witness the laying of the corner-stone on Jan. 8, 1882, which was impressively performed by Bishop A. W. Wilson. This year (1882) Rev. O. F. Evans was sent to this charge, and during the four years of his pastorate did much toward the completion of the church. To keep finances in such a shape as not to cause embarrassment was not an easy task. The lamented Rev. B. F. Alexander, a faithful servant of Christ, then the presiding elder of the Shreveport district, took an active interest in pushing the work on the church, and when away on his district wrote urging us on to renewed efforts. To one of these letters the reply was made, "With all the men and money at the command of Solomon, he would have seven years building his temple," and we had "few men and no money," but were doing the best we could. At the close of Dr. Evans' term the church was nearly completed and service was held in the basement. In 1887 Bishop Duncan, by divine guidance, transferred from the North Mississippi Conference Rev. J. H. Scruggs, and placed him at this station, who on reaching his work proceeded at once to hunt up his flock, and before many weeks, by persistent search and inquiry, found all of his accessible members. A more faithful pastor it has not been the pleasure of the writer to know; the sick were his especial care. His wife, the daughter of the late Bishop Paine, was indeed a helpmeet to him, and is remembered with a great deal of pleasure and held in high esteem by this community for her many excellent graces. During Bro. Scruggs' stay with us the membership of our church was increased about one hundred members, our new church was completed and furnished, and, through the energy of our good women, a handsome pipe organ adorns the chancel. In 1888 the church was dedicated and set apart for the worship of God by Bishop W. W. Duncan. During the pastorate of Bro. Scruggs the idea of a mission or second Methodist Church was conceived and partly put in execution, a house was rented, a Sunday-school started and services were held once a week in addition to cottage prayer meetings. Last year Rev. J. M. Henry had charge of this work and made some progress. A lot 80x15 feet was secured on which to build a house of worship. This year Rev. L. F. Jackson has succeeded by energetic work in building a house and is doing valiant service. Our present pastor, Rev. J. L. Pierce, was sent to us by Bishop Haygood in December, 1890. He preaches well and is acceptable to the entire congregation.

We must not fail to make mention of the noble and self-sacrificing women who were the mainstay and support of the church in its early history. A portion of the time there were few male members, and to fill up the Board of Stewards some of the husbands of these zealous women were elected and served on the Board. These Christian women were not backward in any department of church work and were often of great assistance to the stewards in collecting quarterly. Many of these have passed over the river and received the welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." A few remain ready for the Master's call.

Methodism in Northwest Louisiana.

As early as 1805 Southwest Louisiana became the scene of the labors of the Methodist itinerant preacher. There were small settlements of Americans scattered through this region, which formed the nucleus of the future Methodist Church in the State. Within a year or two missionaries were sent from the Mississippi Conference to the Ouachita Mission, comprising the vast region north and east of the Red river to the Arkansas line, and dotted here and there with a few small settlements. It was several years later before the wilderness west of this, embracing a large scope of hill country and the Red River Valley, was settled by the whites.

In all this region, embracing now about a dozen parishes and a population of about one hundred and fifty thousand souls, dwell only a few scattered tribes of Indians. The first white man, Isaac Alden, settled near the present site of Minden in 1811.

In 1818 ten families left Tennessee for this region. Embarking at Nashville in a barge, they floated down the Cumberland river into the Mississippi, and down that river to the mouth of the Red river, and up the Red to their destination, finally settling in what is now Claiborne parish. A member of one of these families, years after, writes some interesting personal recollections of their early days. On account of general forest fires prevailing about that time, the country became open, only the larger trees remaining, and covered with grasses, wild peas and switch cane. It was a hunter's paradise. This writer says: "A turkey for dinner required only a few minutes' hunt; venison steak was to be had at any hour; and bear, at the proper season, was readily converted into the best bacon." The only roads were trails. Twenty to forty days would be consumed in going to Monroe or Natchitoches to market, but game enough would be killed en route to furnish quite a supply of skins, which constituted their medium of exchange.

In these reminiscences we get some twinklings of the first Methodist light that dawned in this dark region. The writer above referred to speaks of one of these early settlers, Thomas Gray by name, as "a most zealous Methodist." In 1822, near the present site of Minden, "settled Mr. Loyd, a devout Methodist preacher; and John Geren, a very quiet man, but a true-born Methodist, and beliked by everybody." In 1825 he says, "We had our first camp meeting." It was conducted by Revs. Wm. Stevenson, McMahon and Rose.

"Uncle Billy Stevenson," as he was familiarly called, is still recollected by a few of our oldest citizens. He was born in South Carolina, and though forty-seven years of age when he became a traveling preacher, he gave thirty-nine years of valuable service to the church. He itinerated from Missouri, through Arkansas and Louisiana, to Texas, where he died about 1853. He was presiding elder of the Louisiana district from 1839 to 1833.

The first church organized within this territory was in 1827, in what is known as the Hood Settlement, in Claiborne parish. In 1830 a church was organized at Ashbrook's School-house, near the present site of Athens, in Claiborne parish. Thence on, at intervals, as immigrants came from the older States and founded neighborhoods, societies were formed and churches built—rude log-houses at first, but in time superseded by better structures, till now in many places throughout this country we have creditable and even elegant buildings for worship.

Minden, the oldest surviving town in this region, was first to have its village church. Its first house of worship was built by the Methodists in 1839. That house, afterwards enlarged, outlived its semi-centennial. It was not till this year superseded by the present eighty edifice, which is a credit alike to the taste and liberality of our people.

In the town of Homer, on an eminence overlooking the town, stands to-day a large brick building, a monument to the educational enterprise of our people. A male college was founded there in 1835, and had a flourishing history up to the time of the war. Some of the preachers of our Conference, and many of our laymen, now in useful callings, came out from their classic walls. The college never prospered after the war, and was finally sold for debt. Many of our daughters have been educated at Mansfield Female College, another Methodist institution, properly included within this territory. Denominational schools have not been in demand of late years, owing to the excellent facilities furnished by non-denominational schools. These latter abound throughout the country, and are generally under good Christian discipline.

In addition to the names of pioneers of Methodism in this country already referred to, a few others deserve honorable mention. The names of Richmond Randle and Joel Saunders were household words from as far back as 1833. Randle died a chaplain in the army, but left two sons as his successors in the ministry. Saunders, who died in 1883, also has a son on whom his mantle has fallen. John Pipes, of precious memory, was converted here at a camp meeting in 1838, and afterwards spent a part of his itinerant life in this part of the Conference. Here also labored the Alexanders, the Goodwins, and many others, into whose labors the later generations of preachers have entered.

The labors of these early itinerants were seconded by faithful local preachers. Among them might be mentioned the Waters, Blackman, Pennington, Hamilton, Barnett and Joe Ginn. Among prominent laymen of these early times, many names deserve mention.

About Minden the names associated with the earliest development of the church were those of Abner Drake, the principal contributor to the building of the first church; Kendall, Shields, Laakey, Hardy and Kennon. About Homer and in Claiborne parish we have the names of Joshua Willis, Jonathan Taylor, Young D. Allen, Hightower, Kinshaw, John Wilson, E. O. Christian, John Holcomb, J. C. Calhoun, and a host of others, whose names can not be written here, but are written in the Book of Life.

J. W. MEDLOCK.

Mansfield Church.

Mansfield M. E. Church, South, was organized in the year 1846 in a log school-house, which stood upon the lot just opposite the residence of the Hon. J. M. Scales. The charter members were: Willis McElroy and wife, Lewis Phillips and wife, Silas Pinter and wife, William Terrell and wife, Cephas Adams and wife. By what preacher this church was organized can not be definitely ascertained. The honor lays between two preachers, Rev. Daniel Hawkins and Rev. J. N. Matthews, known in his day as Wolf-pen Matthews, from the following circumstance: Upon a certain occasion he ventured to enter a wolf-pen to inspect the ear-marks of a cow's head that had been placed therein as bait, when the trap fell, and the brother was caught and held a prisoner until the owner came to inspect his trap, when, to his surprise, to find a man in place of the hungry wolf, that had so long preyed upon his tender abjects and frisking lambs. Thus we see that the first preacher of the Mansfield Church was subjected to a trial that even the Apostle Paul was a stranger to, for in all of his trials of which he gives a detailed account, Paul never viewed the rays of the setting and rising sun through the cracks of a wolf trap.

In the year 1848 Rev. B. F. Brown was the preacher in charge—a young Englishman, who was much beloved by his people. He, too, like the brother who had preceded him, had trials which we do not find recorded, for it was from the pine straw of DeSoto that he gleaned his first tick, which, when permitted to perfect its work, well-nigh equals that "thorn in the flesh" of which Paul tells, and that only the grace of God could enable him to bear without complaint. This brother afterwards died in New Orleans of yellow fever, no doubt purified by the trials endured by him upon the DeSoto circuit.

The first Methodist Church was built in Mansfield during the year 1847, which was used as a house of worship until the present building was erected in 1866, under the pastorate of Rev. John Pipes.

The year 1850 is a memorable one in the history of the Mansfield Church, for it was in the Fall of that year the church was blessed with a most glorious revival, and by the older members regarded as the Pentecost of this church, when many souls were gathered into the fold, some of whom live to this day to praise the Lord for what he did for them in that meeting.

In 1853 the old church was celled and put in repair for the meeting of the Annual Conference, presided over by the gifted Bishop George F. Pierce. Two Annual Conferences have been held since in the Mansfield Church—one in 1855, Bishop Andrews presiding, and again in 1883, Bishop A. W. Wilson in the chair. This was a Conference that will long be remembered by the Louisiana preachers. The compass "was boxed," or mixed—"twas hard to tell which—for North went South, and South journeyed North, East and West traded places, and the geographical center was lost, for when the appointments were read out, only twelve men were left standing. The Conference adjourned on Saturday night. Sunday morning service was the most solemn that was ever witnessed, even more so than when the pastor takes up his missionary collection. The evening hour was occupied by one of our most eloquent D. D.'s. The Doctor's text was an inspiring one: "Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us." (1. John iii. 1.) But still the solemnity was oppressive. At the close a good brother was called on to pray, in which prayer he made the statement, "We all have good appointments;" but no amens were heard, and the thirty-seventh annual session of the Louisiana Conference was ended in solemnity and silence.

The Mansfield Church has for many years been famed for its Sunday-school, which has ever been first classed. In 1857 Bro. J. M. Scales was elected superintendent, and held the office until the time of his death, May 10, 1890, except during the war, when Bro. Laney was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the absence of Bro. Scales in the war. The marked success with which Bro. Scales managed this school will be an enduring monument to his name, and proves that Sunday-school superintendents are born, not elected.

Two of the original members of this church are now living near the town of Mansfield: Bro. Willis McElroy, aged eighty years, who was elected on the Board of Stewards in 1846, which office he held up to within a few years, when failing health caused him to resign. Sister McElroy, the wife of this old brother, was also one of the charter members. She is now seventy-eight years old, and is a woman of wonderful activity. She is up every morning at four o'clock, and breakfast is usually eaten by candle light, and each succeeding hour of the day has its employment. This sister always has a fine garden, that is largely worked by her own hands. When indoors, it is knit, knitted. Her fingers run like a piece of machinery, and the sock, glove or gallow grows apace; but let a hen cacare, and down goes that knitting, and accretive, indeed, must that hen be whose nest is so hid as to escape the eye of Sister McElroy, nor does "grass grow under her feet," until the warm egg is found and carefully placed in the basket lined with cotton seed.

Sister Bell, the wife of a local preacher, is still living; also Sister Moss. These are now the two oldest members of this church—not of the old log school-house church, but of the present organization. Sister Greening, an old member, died last Spring, and when these two sisters shall have been called to their reward and rest, the last links will have been severed that bind the two Methodisms of 1846 and 1892.

The preachers that have served this church can not be given in the exact terms of succession. From 1846 to 1850, Matthews, Hawkins, Brown and Henry W. Avery were in charge. From 1850 to 1860, Alex. Goodwin, Henry W. Avery, Ben Hamell, John Pipes and S. B. Surratt were in charge to almost the order in which they are named. From 1860 to 1870, Alex. Goodwin, Chapman, Landrum, John Pipes, From 1870 to 1892, M. C. Manly, C. W. Carter, J. E. Bradley, James Brown, J. L. Borden, J. J. Billingsley, S. S. Keener, R. J. Harp, J. M. Beard, Christian Keener, T. B. Willie, J. B. Cassity, T. K. Faust LeRoy.

T. K. FAUNT LE ROY.

Alexandria, La.

The first settlement in Alexandria was made in 1785. But the place did not grow very rapidly until just before the Civil War. Cotton and sugar were both produced in great quantities in the surrounding country, which gave the city its upward tendency. But it has never been a good source for religions of any kind, but especially that quality that calls for self-reliance and self-sacrifice. It has always been of that type of humanity which is the natural product of a mixture of nationalities in a new country under Roman domination.

The Methodists came into this country in 1807, and the first Methodist preaching in this place was to 1808 or 1809 by Jas. Axley, who was on the Opelousas circuit, or by Anthony Houston, who was on the Washita circuit, and it is probable that the work has been kept up most of the time since. The church must have been organized here about 1812, as the Rapides charge was filled by Thomas Nelson in 1811. Owing to the frequent changes in the circuit, it is very difficult to get a correct idea of the improvements and declines of the church. At the organization of the circuit, or rather at the end of the first year, there were twenty members reported in the whole charge; the next year only twelve. In 1828, just twenty years from the time that the work was opened, the number had run up to one hundred and eighty-two whites with an addition of one hundred and fifteen blacks, making an aggregate of two hundred and ninety-seven. But this was the Rapides charge, and I think from all the light thrown on the subject that there were only about twenty-five or thirty whites in Alexandria. About forty has been the average until the last few years. This is a "one of the hard fields." I think that Bro. J. G. Jones introduced the name of Alexandria with the expression, "The town of Alexandria is a hard place." The Romish, Jewish and other influences produce an indifference that is difficult to fight out.

The first Methodist Church was built about 1840. It was a large unfurnished building near where Jackson crosses Second street. This house was occupied about ten or fifteen years, when a neat church was built on the corner of Washington and Third street. This was destroyed by the enemy during the Civil War, as was most of the city, especially that which belonged to Southern planters.

The financial strength of the church must have greatly improved just before the war, as the building of the above church indicates. But this did not last long, as the war came on, and at its close the town was almost a complete wreck. This was one of the military centers and subjected to the greatest injuries as well as insults.

When the war closed the church was in a deplorable condition. Demoralized, without house and without means, yet, after a struggle of seven or eight years, she, under the administration of Rev. O. Keener, built a good, commodious house and commenced work at home again. This was occupied about fifteen years, when, under the administration of Rev. B. F. White, another neat house was built on the site of the one destroyed by the enemy during the war. The church is out of debt, or about so, and doing well.

This church has grown in moral worth and has a good influence on the community. Her spiritual worth is being developed during each year. She has among her members some of the best citizens of the city. Her numbers are not as great as two or three years ago, but she is doing well. The depression in finances is felt by her, as by all other portions of the overflooded country. As the city grows, there is no doubt that the Methodist Church will advance with it, and I trust more rapidly, for I hope that she will see her duty and opportunity and so exceed the growth of the city as to capture it for Christ.

CHURCHES.

Monroe, La.

The great importance of well-kept church records is never so much realized as when you attempt its history. I learn from one or two of the older citizens of Monroe that Methodist preaching began here about fifty years ago. I, however, find no records of any kind till the year 1872, and this record is only the proceedings of a "newly organized" meeting, composed of three members, and recognizing the pastorate of Rev. C. F. Evans. In 1873 Rev. James E. Cobb seems to be (as indicated by another little scrap) both preaching and pastor in charge. Nothing to inform us as to whether it was a station or circuit, or indicating the number of members, or the financial status. During the years 1875 and 1876 Rev. R. S. Trippett was in charge. It was then a circuit, with 212 members; number of appointments not stated. He was followed by Rev. P. H. Moss, who, assisted by Rev. J. L. Borden, was in charge for the year 1877 and part of 1878. During the latter year "he fell, as the hero falls," at his post of duty, under the scourge of yellow fever. Bro. Borden finished as pastor in the year 1878. In 1879 Rev. J. M. Brown was pastor, and reported a membership of 198 on the circuit. The pastor for 1880 was our beloved editor, Rev. C. W. Carter; but no statistics. Including the years 1881, 1882, 1883 and 1884, this writer was pastor. During 1881 the charge was called Trenton and Monroe; thence to the present time it has been a station. Statistics show that there were 108 members at the close of the year 1884; at the close of the year 1885, membership 106. During this year the present house of worship was built, at a cost of $2,700—the first finished house of worship ever owned in Monroe and paid for. During Rev. C. F. Evans' pastorate a church was partly built and used for worship, though unfinished. On the morning of the first of January, 1877, it fell, crushed by snow. I have learned (not by statistics) that this church and lot cost $12,500. A debt was on this property, for which the lot and parsonage were given to satisfy. Rev. A. C. Couey had charge of Monroe for the years 1885 and 1886. He reports 100 members. Rev. Wm. Hart was in charge in 1887 and 1888. Under his pastorate the present comfortable parsonage was built, at a cost of about $1,300. We are just finishing the payment of the last installment on this property. Rev. T. J. Upton was in charge during the years 1889 and 1890. He left 167 members on the roll. I followed Bro. Upton, and reported 288 members to our last conference, and will report about 334 at our conference this winter. To-day we have just twice the members we found on taking charge for 1891.

Monroe is one of the oldest towns in the State. It was settled by Roman Catholics, and this church was first to occupy this field. We organized about second, and have had quite a struggle down to the present. We now have intelligence and wealth enough to demand a great forward move all along the line. If all our members were in attendance at once, over seventy would be compelled to stand during service for want of seating-room. God says in this, "Please build me a house large enough for my increasing family. Love for God, love for our fellows, for our children—yes, love for ourselves—demands a better, as well as a larger, house for Methodists to worship God in, in Monroe. Wickedness abounds here; but there are some true and trusted soldiers of the cross in our midst, and we trust that very soon we will experience the grace that will sanctify our intelligence and wealth for the pressing needed work of church enlargement. May He who has guided in the former years continue to direct until the conquest is complete.

B. F. WHITE.

WOMAN'S MISSION WORK.

Woman's Missionary Society, Louisiana Conference.

It is a fact worthy of notice that missionary enterprise has frequently emanated from the homes of Christian widows. Such holy sanctuaries are safe harbors for the precious seed.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Louisiana was organized at Baton Rouge, December, 1879, by a few ladies in the parlor of Mrs. M. W. Read. The Louisiana Conference was in session at the time, and the ladies were aided by Rev. J. T. Davis, Rev. John Hannon and Wm. H. Foster, E. C. These brethren, with prophetic vision of the possibilities resulting from the systematic work of Christian women, extended their encouragement and assistance to the vanguard of this State organization. The church holds the commission "to disciple all nations," but hitherto woman had been so swallowed up in the great whole that she failed to realize her individual responsibility. This special work empha-elized her duty and opened a door directly in her pathway.

The society was equipped with capable officers: Mrs. M. W. Read, president; Mrs. W. H. Foster, corresponding secretary; Mrs. R. M. Walmesley, treasurer; Miss Carrie Robertson, recording secretary.

For a time the hearts of the devoted leaders were cheered with a prospect of State-wide success; then, in common with the workers of every good cause, they were saddened by lukewarmness and open opposition. Many members became "weary in well doing." A note in the corresponding secretary's book, after four years of labor, tells the sad tale: "Many of the societies have failed to report for two years." This lukewarmness discouraged the officers, and was attributed, in a great measure, to their peculiar environment and the general want of sympathy with woman's work; consequently they resigned, and advised the reorganization of the society in North Louisiana.

The sixth annual meeting was announced to be held in Mansfield. Mrs. John Pipes, vice-president for Shreveport district, conducted this meeting, assisted by six delegates and a few friends. By reference to the minutes, we find that Rev. John Pipes, Rev. B. F. Alexander and Rev. J. W. Hearn assisted greatly. Nine auxiliaries reported. Seventeen failed to report. The corresponding secretary reported: "26 societies enrolled—the greater number inactive. Amount collected to date, $2,126 90." The State officers elected at this meeting have served during the intervening years to the present time.

The annual meetings have been held at the following places, consecutively: Minden, Mansfield, Ruston, Alexandria, Delhi, Baton Rouge, Shreveport, Keachie.

The amount collected since reorganization, $8,398 42; before reorganization, $2,126 90; grand total, $10,525 32. There are at present only 31 active auxiliaries. Several enrolled have faded by the wayside, and still others have drifted into the "valley of dry bones."

The spiritual status of the faithful workers is progressive and upward. Personal obligation has developed systematic service.

There are even yet some good disciples who say "woman's work" is unorthodox, and, with John the Beloved, in excess of zeal, would forbid our following. We hear the gentle voice of the Christ ringing down the ages, "Forbid them not: he that is not against us is for us," and our prayer is, more love, more faith, more giving, until every creature shall have heard the glad tidings of a Savior.

MRS. T. P. FULLILOVE.

Work of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Carondelet Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

On Jan. 28, 1878, in obedience to a call from Mrs. J. C. Keener, twenty-five Methodist ladies met in the classroom of Carondelet Church for the purpose of organizing themselves into a Woman's Missionary Society. After singing, and prayer by the pastor, Rev. J. C. Matthews, an election of officers was held, when Mrs. B. H. Moss was unanimously elected president; but she declined to serve on account of poor health. Mrs. Matthews was then nominated by Mrs. Walmesley, seconded by Mrs. Keener, and unanimously elected to fill that office. Mrs. Perry Nugent, Mrs. Moss, Mrs. Dunnison and Mrs. Merrick were elected vice-presidents; Mrs. Justus Valrin, recording secretary; Mrs. R. M. Walmesley, treasurer, and Miss Phyllis Matthews, corresponding secretary. A resolution was passed constituting the president, vice-presidents and secretary a committee to prepare a constitution and by-laws for the control and guidance of the society. After an interesting address by Bishop Keener, the meeting adjourned to meet the following month.

Such was the organization of the Woman's Missionary Society of Carondelet Church. Mrs. Matthews leaving the city in 1879, Mrs. R. M. Walmesley was unanimously elected president, which office she filled with the greatest ability until 1888, when she resigned on account of ill-health. Thereupon Mrs. W. W. Carro was unanimously elected, and the society still continues under her administration. Mrs. Valrin, the first recording secretary, having resigned, Mrs. J. J. Lyons was elected and served for one year most efficiently; since which time Mrs. A. A. Barrels has been the faithful secretary of the society.

In March, at the third meeting, a circular was received from Dr. Kelley, asking the Christian women of the church to send contributions for the purpose of aiding in the outfit of an assistant for Mrs. Lambuth in China; whereupon it was decided to send the first collection, amounting to $61 40, immediately to Dr. Kelley for that purpose. Miss Rankin was soon sent, and she proved a most zealous and devoted worker, ending her life in the cause. At the fifth meeting, in May, Mrs. Walmesley offered a resolution that the society should obligate itself to contribute twenty-five dollars a month to the support of a female school in Mexico, which was unanimously passed. Although this continued to be the main object of the society for seven years, until 1885—when Mrs. Keener reported that the Parent Board, at Nashville, had assumed the payment of the teacher's salary—yet during these years the society had made various other contributions: among them $50 to Mr. Ransom for Brazil; $25 to Mr. Lambuth for Olinia; half the cost of an organ for a new congregation in Mexico; $125 toward equipment and salary of Miss Hallahan. Among other things boxes of little presents were sent to gladden the hearts of the little Mexicans at Christmas. The choice of Miss Hallahan from our midst was a most happy one, inasmuch as she proved herself a most able and efficient assistant to Mrs. Patterson, teacher of the little school in Mexico, which may be said to have been the special care of the three societies organized by Mrs. Keener at Carondelet Street, Rayne Memorial and Louisiana Avenue Churches.

For several years Mrs. S. G. Weems did faithful work in our school, and, through her advice, we continued to send a trunk for Christmas, with necessary articles of clothing, thus winning the hearts of the parents for our care of their little ones. One year our trunk contained over one hundred and forty suits. Much to our regret, Mrs. Weems was compelled to leave our work in Mexico on account of her husband's ill-health; but after returning home she still felt such an interest in Mexico that she prevailed upon us to employ a "Bible woman," who could visit and talk with the Mexican women. This we have done since last November, expending in this way $132 65. Besides this amount we have contributed to our Mexican school since its organization $3,049 95. At latest accounts it was most prosperous and abundant in good results. Mrs. Keener was from the beginning the most zealous and devoted worker, having been most regular in her attendance at the monthly meetings of all three societies, and unceasing in her efforts to increase the interest in the school. Whatever good may have been accomplished by the awakening priest-ridden consciences, or by the enlightenment of dark minds, we may justly claim as due, in a great measure, to her faithful and consecrated effort.

We, of Carondelet Church, ought to feel more interest in the Central Mexican Mission than in any other, as it was in our church, and by one of our members—Mr. R. M. Walmesley—that the generous donation of $1,000 was made which enabled Bishop Keener to proceed to the City of Mexico, and there establish the first Southern Methodist mission. It may be of interest to state that, from statistics published by our Conference, we find in 1877, just before Mr. Patterson arrived in Mexico, that the number of members was seventy, with only thirty children in Sunday-schools. In 1887 the number of members was 1,774, with 1,009 scholars. Surely these figures ought to encourage and incite us to far greater liberality and exertion in this good work.

Important Discoveries.

Four hundred years after Christopher Columbus discovered America, we discovered that the Young People of "The Sunny South" were searching for some medium published in their own Fair Southland that would not only tell them all about Columbus' great discovery, but also about all other discoveries of special interest to them. We accordingly proceeded to publish our discovery in the form of a handsome monthly magazine, entitled "SOUTHERN SUNBEAMS," and containing from 60 to 100 pages of finely illustrated reading matter, consisting of short stories, also continued stories, new games, puzzles, out-door sports, and, in fact, everything for the amusement, instruction and interest of young people. During the past year we have further discovered that fully 25,000 of these young people have been sufficiently interested in SUNBEAMS to send us each $1.00 for their yearly subscription to it. Now we want to discover 25,000 more of the same sort, and as an inducement for you to assist us in our exploration, we propose offering you the following splendid premium:

If you will send us $1.00 we will not only send you SOUTHERN SUNBEAMS for one year, but we will also send you Washington Irving's history of "The Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus," which is a handsomely bound book of 735 pages, containing a complete account of the famous discoverer's life, and all of his voyages. Also illustrations of his fleet which first came to America, viz: the "Santa Maria," "Pinta" and "Nina." This book alone is worth more than the total amount of the subscription, and besides that you will have all the nice things we shall discover and publish in SUNBEAMS for one year. Send 10 cts for a sample copy of SUNBEAMS, or, better still, send $1.00 and get the Magazine and Premium.

This Number.

We present our readers this week with quite a number of articles on the Louisiana Conference—its workers and its work. There will be found some interesting history, some bits of biography and some readable papers on our work and its growth. We may say, in passing, that several papers which were promised did not reach us in time, and among these were some histories of prominent churches. We think the average reader will be interested in this number, and our brethren outside of Louisiana will learn somewhat more of Methodism in our State than they knew before. For the first attempt at anything of this kind, we think we have done well. The next special edition will be "something new." Methodism in North Mississippi Conference, and will be issued Dec. 1, in time for the session of the North Mississippi Conference, which convenes at Corinth, Nov. 30.

The Strike.

We do not suppose that any city of modern times ever passed through the experiences that our city had last week. The strike came nearer being universal here than anywhere else that we have read of. The strike of one or two organizations seems a big affair; but when forty or fifty organizations deliberately quit work, it has an effect that will surprise anybody. When the majority of workers in almost every branch of business "go out," it makes even the most stupid open their eyes. Such was the case here last week. A difference between employers and employees sprang in one branch of business, and the matter grew in proportions daily, and one after another different branches "sympathized" until nearly every organization of laborers in town had joined the strikers.

As far as we can make out the matter, the difference between the parties centered solely at one point. The union men insisted that employers should employ only union men. The employers insisted that it was absurd for them to hand over their business entirely to others to say who should conduct it. Neither party would yield, and though thousands of workers had no grievance, and said plainly that they were satisfied with their wages and hours of work, yet they went out in obedience to orders from their chiefs. The consequence was an entire suspension of many branches of business. For several nights the city was left in utter darkness. The mayor seemed to be helpless to remedy matters, it being a good many people think he did not try. The gas being cut off prevented the publisher from bringing out the Advocate on time, as our motive power is supplied from the gas works. We had no trouble with our printers, they not belonging to the union.

During those days the tension on the public mind was tremendous, and the wonder is that patience and forbearance were exercised so long. After many trials at settlement an agreement was reached Thursday night, and Friday morning things began to move again.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Biographical Notes.

The Methodist preachers of Louisiana do not make as much noise as some other preachers; but their stubborn adherence to the hardest work in the Southern field have won for them the title of "heroes." It is a fact in regard to Louisiana that it is a hard place for preachers. The work is so difficult, and the success so correspondingly small, that the wonder is that so many of them stick to it as long as they do.

Connectional men tell us that the same work done in older fields would accomplish five times as much as in Louisiana. It requires grit as well as grace, then, to stay in the ministerial work in Louisiana. The special grace for a Louisiana preacher is fortitude. Not that the preachers are less paid, for the average salary in Louisiana is as large as anywhere; but the character of the people and their surroundings make difficulties unknown in Georgia or Tennessee, or anywhere else. Here are sketches of some of the preachers who for years have toiled in this hard field:

Rev. J. B. WALKER, D. D., was born in Washington City, Jan. 2, 1817, and hence will be seventy six years of age next January. He joined the church at Asbury Camp Ground, in Tennessee, in August, 1835; was licensed to preach, Oct. 4, 1836, by Dr. A. L. P. Green, and was admitted on trial in the Tennessee Conference, at Columbia, in the same month. For ten years he remained in that conference. In 1846 he was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. Here he remained five years, when he was transferred in 1852 to the Louisiana Conference, to which, with the exception of one pastoral term in Galveston, Texas, he has belonged ever since. As a preacher Dr. Walker is the best known to the general church of any of us. His preaching has always been acceptable and edifying, and as a platform speaker he has had but few equals. He is greatly beloved as a pastor, to which work he is specially faithful. Dr. Walker has had very close relations with this Advocate from its start, and has been a special helper to every editor it has had. His articles have always been on practical religious subjects and have commanded the attention of all our readers. He still goes out and comes in with the brethren. His quick step and erect carriage betoken no diminution of religious zeal. The love of souls and the Master's honor claims all the powers of his spirit.

Rev. THOMAS J. UPRON was born at Columbus, Ga., May 18, 1830. He joined the church in September, 1848, and was converted the following November. He was licensed to preach in Marion county, Ga., June 7, 1856; was admitted on trial in the Louisiana Conference in February, 1857. Bro. Upton has acceptably filled works all over Louisiana, and was four years agent and financial secretary of Homer College. He is a strong preacher of the simple gospel, and has gained quite a reputation among the brethren "as a church lawyer." In the social circle he is a genial companion and has always at command a large fund of anecdotes, which he tells with great effect. He was a delegate to the Richmond General Conference, when he served on the Committee on Episcopacy.

Rev. JAMES L. WRIGHT was born in Russellville, Ky., Sept. 21, 1822. He was converted in Poydras Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in New Orleans, in February, 1842; joined the church on probation under the Rev. Elijah Steele, and was baptized and received into full connection by the Rev. Wm. A. Curtis. He was admitted on trial into the Mississippi Conference in December, 1845; was discontinued, at his own request, at the first session of the Louisiana Conference, held in Opelousas in January, 1847. In 1848 he was admitted on trial in the Louisiana Conference. He has sung and preached and prayed all over North Louisiana, and not a few times in South Louisiana. He has been zealous for the cause of our Lord, and the number of people—white and black—who have been led to Christ through his instrumentality can not be known until the Lord counteth up his people. Bro. Wright has always been a "mighty man in prayer." We have heard him when it seemed the very heavens were coming through the parted skies. During all of our own ministry we have considered ourselves especially favored in having so close a relation in the first years with such a man as J. L. Wright. He now sustains a superannuated relation.

Rev. THOMAS H. McCLENDON was born in Heard county, Ga., Aug. 20, 1833, and moved, with his parents, to Alabama in 1837, where he lived till the Fall of 1848, when he came to Claiborne parish, La. He was licensed to preach in 1855 on Homer circuit; admitted on trial in the Louisiana Conference in December, 1855. For a steady, straightforward worker command us to Tom McCleendon. He is one of those men who never pass for what they are worth. We heard Bishop McTyeire say that he regarded him as one of the best theologians he knew. He is one of the men whom we think possessed of a good degree of "sanctified common sense," and he uses it modestly, too.

Rev. JOHN A. MILLER was born in Anderson district, S. C., Jan. 25, 1832. In 1845 his parents moved to Jackson county, Ala., where, in 1847, he professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South. During that winter he moved, with his parents, to Lafayette county, Miss. On Oct. 2, 1852, he was licensed to preach and was admitted on trial in the Memphis Conference. In 1855 he transferred to Louisiana, and has been one of our regular "field hands" ever since. He has served the church in almost every capacity, and always served well. He was a delegate to the Atlanta General Conference, where he did excellent work on the Committee on Revision. He has been presiding elder on the Opelousas district for several years.

Rev. P. H. DIEFFENWIERTH was born in Alsace, France, March 12, 1811. His parents were both Germans. He came to New Orleans in 1818; joined the church in 1835, under the ministry of Rev. C. K. Marshall; was licensed to preach in Baton Rouge in 1836, and admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference, at Vicksburg, in 1837. At the organization of the Louisiana Conference, in 1847, he became a member and has held his membership here ever since. In his early days Bro. Dieffenwerth was a very strong preacher and filled quite a number of important appointments. He has been on the superannuated list for a number of years and resides near Largo, Fla., where in faith and hope he waits the final summons. He is the oldest man on our roll.

Rev. REYNOLDS S. TRIPPETT was born at Doncaster, England. He came to New Orleans in 1843, joining the Methodist Church by letter from the Primitive Methodist Connection. He was licensed to preach the same year. He was received on trial in the Mississippi Conference in 1845. At the organization of the Louisiana Conference he adhered to it, and has, with the exception of one year, been a faithful member ever since. Bro. Trippett comes nearer having preached all over Louisiana than any of our preachers. He was in many respects a remarkable preacher, and held out well until a few years ago, when he asked to be superannuated. Since that time he has lived in Doncaster, England, where he awaits the coming of the Master's messenger.

Rev. R. J. HARR is intimately connected with nearly the whole history of the Louisiana Conference. He came to us in our infancy, and has helped us in many ways to reach our maturity. He has filled stations, rode circuits and districts, sold books and published Christian newspapers, and in all these important places his work has contributed to the general forward movement. His preaching has generally been acceptable, and his management of the affairs of circuits and stations has been successful. In his latter days he is enjoying the work of one of our largest districts, and doing that work with the zeal and earnestness which has always been one of his chief characteristics.

Time and space would fail us to tell of all the preachers who have wrought for the Lord in "hard, unyielding Louisiana." Many of them have spent their lives in this glorious work and are still holding to the gospel plow, not looking back. They have left their tracks on the hills and in the swamps, and, gathering their sheaves as they go, they expect to present themselves before the Master, and say, "Behold us, and the children thou hast given us." Besides these veterans "in the wars of the Lord," we have some young men who are adjusting the ministerial harness and have already begun careers of honor and usefulness which will bless the church in the ages to come. It is a great comfort to us older preachers to know that we can commit these great interests of our Lord to such young men as are coming to the front in Louisiana. May God give them a double portion of the spirit of the fathers!

Sunday-School Work.

In the last two decades the church has been awakened, as never before in all its history, to the importance of Sunday-school work. The old notion, so long fossilized in the public mind, that Robt. Raikes was the originator of Sunday-school work—and, therefore, it was a mere appendage to our ecclesiastical machinery, and might be neglected or not—has been exploded. The powerful conviction that the Sunday-school idea inheres in the very structure of the church has taken hold of the conscience of the religious world, and, therefore, this great institution, whose operations underlie the highest ideals of success, mounts to its proper position and begins to wield an influence commensurate with its importance. The different denominations of Christians have been co-operating in the prosecution of the work, and the beautiful harmony manifested has deprived irreligion of one of its most powerful adjuncts, as instead of wrangles and disputes, as the world looks on, all can say, "See how these Christians love!" As all branches of the church militant have been thus working together, each has caught the glow and warmth of the spirit common to all, and the results have been so far-reaching that almost every hamlet and village has felt the touch of the influence at work.

Methodism has not been behind in this great movement, so vital to the mental and moral interests of the world. Why should Methodism be behind? Her great founder was fully imbued with the spirit of this work, because it was inaugurated and carried on in the Wesley family long before Robt. Raikes conceived his ragged school idea.

The injunction to teach the principles of God's law diligently unto the children, though it had been largely ignored by the Established Church, took full possession of the great soul of the godly woman who gave to the world one of the most heroic and useful lives of modern times. Methodism would be untrue to Wesley, as well as to its high mission, if it were to neglect Sunday-school work.

In Louisiana we have had to fight against great odds, but the success gradually achieved has been permanent. Confronted, as we are, with the ignorance and intolerance of Romanism on the one hand, and an appalling indifference among many Protestants on the other, we have had to push the battle amid difficulties unknown to people of other States. There has been, in the last few years, marked improvement. Many schools that have heretofore been accustomed to going into "winter-quarters" are now carried on through the entire year, and many others that were operated as union schools are now recognized as thoroughly Methodist, and are reported upon our Minutes.

Presiding elders and pastors are moving with one accord toward the dislodgement of the trashy song books in common use, and the introduction of our own hymn book, from which the children and youth of the country may learn the grand old chorals of Methodism—the old hymns that have been an inspiration to the people of God through generations past.

As far as information can be obtained, there is advance on all lines, and the outlook for Sunday-school work was never so promising before. Let us all, with a zeal that knows no abatement, consecrate ourselves to the work, for it is the work of the Master. J. M. Brown.

Young Men's Christian Associations.

The following figures show the growth of the work of the Young Men's Christian Associations:

In 1866, there were less than 100 Associations, with a membership of not more than 15,000; now there are 424 Associations, with a total membership of 227,000.

Then, there was one Association building, valued at $11,000; now there are 268, worth $11,902,520.

Then, the total net property amounted to $30,000; now, it amounts to $12,878,595.

Then, there were less than a dozen young men giving their entire time to the work; now, there are 1,192 secretaries and assistants.

Then, there was less than $50,000 contributed annually for local, and only $522 for general (International and State) work; now, there is $2,000,000 given yearly for the former purpose, and $194,000 for the latter purpose.

Then, there was nothing done for special classes of young men, such as college students, railroad employees, etc.; now, there are 400 College Associations, 97 Railroad Associations, 12 German Associations, 35 Colored Associations, and 23 Indian Associations.

The following additional statistics show the present condition of Association work along other lines, "being in every instance a very large increase since 1866:

There are 1,100 Bible and Bible training classes for young men only, 1,496 weekly prayer, gospel and praise meetings for young men only, 5,425 lectures and entertainments and 4,076 societies given annually; 19,478 different students in the educational classes; 734 libraries, 472,549 volumes; 879 reading rooms; over 50,000 visits to the rooms daily; 462 gymnasiums; 192 literary societies; 11,194 situations secured annually; 228 boys' departments.

NOTES.

Orthodoxy is a good thing; but brother, don't let your orthodoxy cheat you out of salvation!

How shall the paragon be left—a home or as a tenant house? Your character and that of your family are reflected in the paragon left. It is criminal carelessness to leave the house uncleaned and the premises unkempt. How will you leave your paragon, brother?—T. W. Christian Advocate.

In the preface to one of his recent works Archbishop Farrar says that quotations are almost always from the Revised Version, and adds, "In many cases the Revised Version surpasses the Authorized in beauty; in all cases it is superior to it in accuracy; in not a few it throws a flood of light on passages obscured, and sometimes even misinterpreted, by the longer and less correct renderings of the translation of 1611."—Christian Intelligencer.

For a short pastorate, this account from the Northern Christian Advocate beats all:

Some of our living stars have short pastorates. Perhaps the briefest on record is that of R. V. J. Armstrong, D. D., at First Church, Auburn. He was appointed on Monday, welcomed by his people on Saturday, preached to them on Sunday, and on Monday started for a new field of labor in Kansas City.

The fact that New Zealand should be the first of the British colonies to confer full citizenship upon women, is another reminder of the way in which the people at the antipodes are leading progressive movements through the English speaking world. The eight hours movement comes from Australia; the Australian ballot, long established in Great Britain, is now making the tour of the United States; and now New Zealand, in conferring the suffrage upon women, has taken a step which, sooner or later, England and America will follow.—Review.

We have been reading all the time that Mahomet taught and practiced total abstinence from intoxicating drinks; but we did not know that he carried his teaching and practice to an extent that would shame the most pronounced teetotaler this generation has produced. One of his followers writes in the Compendium as follows: "Mahomet gave to his people the following example, that they should abstain from liquor. He said, 'if a single drop of liquor should be dropped in a well or cistern that is one hundred yards deep; if afterward the cistern should be filled up with earth, and the grass should grow on the top and be eaten by a lamb or sheep, then the lower must not touch that water.' The great, absolute, total abstinence prohibition in the world was the prophet of Persia.

This is evidently a reading man. There is certainly nothing more important. An occasional sermon on reading would be of great service to most congregations. How long since you preached on this vital subject, brother? We give you a text: "Give attendance to reading." Be sure to say something about the value of the church paper. Some wise man says this:

All successful preachers will tell you that the circulation of a religious paper within the bounds of their field of labor greatly assists them in their work. Reading Christian literature is the very backbone of the church. By keeping themselves posted on the movements of the church, our lay membership may do rightly and prelate the needs of Christ's kingdom. Every preacher should preach an occasional sermon on religious literature, and should pray for the success of the religious press.

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

Millaps College has enrolled one hundred and thirty pupils.

Bishop Galloway left the latter part of last week for Oklahoma Territory where he was to have dedicated a church last Sunday. From there he goes to Ardmore, Indian Territory, to hold the Indian Mission Conference for Bishop Granbery.

Our special editions will be out of time. One of the valuable and interesting features of the Mississippi Conference issue will be a sketch of Dr. W. Lambuth by Rev. C. K. Marshall, our native China preacher, who visited our country and Conference in 1891. Be sure to get the paper and read it.

The Thanksgiving proclamation of President Harrison is more than mere jargon of words. It has the ring of deep sincerity. We remember no proclamation like it. "God" or its equivalent occurs five times. It opens with this sentence: "The gifts of our God to our people during the past year have been abundant and so special that the people of devout thanksgiving await an omen, but only the appointment of day when it may have a common expression."

We call the following from the Jackson Daily Clarion, of the slight instant, every word of which we affirm, for we were present and cast our vote in both elections:

There was a time when the memory of the youngest voter when it was considered unsafe for ladies and children to be on the streets of Jackson on election day. But times have changed. Yesterday, during the election of both presidential and congressional electors, the streets were as safe for ladies as if it had been Sunday, last day of election day.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Baton Rouge.

The Quarterly Conference records and church register of the Baton Rouge station furnish, like most other charges, very inadequate information of the struggles and triumphs of the church. A whole year passes without more than a few statistics, and sometimes the figures are as small as the items are few. One wonders: What of the labor spent, the prayers offered, the revivals held, the children taught?—can it be possible that the statistics as recorded cover them all? Surely our lives, corporate as well as individual, are hidden with Christ in God. The circuit life of this church has preserved no literary memorials.

The records show that in 1815 and 1836 this church was served by Rev. C. K. Marshall, and that in the former year the appointment was made a station, and in the latter the church-building was constructed. In 1837, E. R. Porter was pastor; in 1839, Enoch Tally; in 1838 and 1840, Sam'l L. Scott; in 1841, Sam'l W. Speer; in 1842, T. B. Craighead; in 1843, S. G. Simpson; in 1844, P. H. Dieffenweirb; in 1845 and 1846, W. H. Crenshaw; in 1847, W. H. Crenshaw as a supply (?); in 1848 and 1849, Jno. W. Harmon; in 1850 and 1851, R. J. Harp; in 1852, E. R. Porter; in 1853, A. E. Goodwyn; in 1854, Henry Avery. In 1855, Thos. H. Foster, a transfer from Alabama Conference, was stationed here, and in the midst of the year died of yellow fever. In 1856 and 1857, S. B. Sorritt was pastor, and in 1858 and 1859, Henry Avery was again preacher in charge.

In 1860 W. E. M. Linfield, one of the boldest thinkers and most gifted orators of the Southern Church, was transferred from the Alabama Conference, and stationed at Baton Rouge. On a subscription list of $14,500 he proceeded to build the elegant structure now in use, and on Dec. 15, of that year, the completed house was dedicated by Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall. The fourteenth session of the Louisiana Conference was held in the new building, and ended in a revival of religion and sixty accessions to the church. During this year a parsonage was also bought and furnished. In 1861, W. E. M. Linfield was returned; but this was the year the war opened. The public mind was distracted; all cares and interests were merged in the one of political security—all values and peaceful industries collapsed, and we are not surprised at meager reports and feeble results of ministerial labor. The subscription list showed an unpaid balance of $7,000 due on the building. In 1862 N. A. Cravens was preacher in charge; he was taken prisoner by the Federals and carried to New Orleans for confinement. No appointment was made to this station in 1863, 1864 and 1865, because it was within the Federal lines. In 1866, W. E. M. Linfield was returned to the station. In 1867, 1868 and part of 1869, the church was served by Chas. W. Carter. P. M. Goodwyn took charge of the work June 18; he and J. L. Chapman fled out the year. In 1870 and 1871, R. S. Trippett was in charge, and raised money to clear the church of debt and make needed repairs. In 1872 and 1873, A. E. Goodwyn was in charge, and again in 1877. In 1874 and 1875, Jno. Wilkinson was in charge, but dying in April of the latter year, was succeeded by his brother-in-law, Christian Kener, who was reappointed for 1876. From 1878 to 1880, John T. Sawyer served the church, and is remembered admiringly and gratefully for his toil and courage during an epidemic of yellow fever. In 1881 and 1882, Joel T. Daves was pastor; in 1883 and 1884, Henry O. White; from 1885 to 1889, T. K. Faunt LeRoy; and from 1889 to 1891, James A. Parker, who was succeeded by Chas. F. Evans in 1891.

CHAS. F. EVANS.

Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

The General Conference in May, 1888, authorized the Board of Church Extension to organize a department for woman's work, which was called the "Woman's Department of Church Extension," when, four years later, that same body gave it the title of our heading, its field of labor being so enlarged as to include all work coming under the head of home missions. Our first Conference secretary was Mrs. Lina Parker. Mrs. S. S. King, my worthy predecessor, having the time as well as ability, did her utmost in organizing auxiliaries throughout the State, enlisting them with her earnestness and zeal while in their midst; but in one or more instances there was not sufficient life-power to hold but the one meeting. Thus we have reported five societies which have become extinct, some of which struggled on for awhile, and then died a lingering death. These were outside the New Orleans district, and am sorry to say that some of our auxiliaries in this city have done no better; but we still hope for them; that the fire to be kindled at our next annual meeting will start them into new life.

At our last General Conference the work was so reconstructed as to provide for a central committee for the management of our parsonage work. This may be but repetition to many but some there, doubtless, are whose memories will not suffer by thus being refreshed; so in July, 1890, the General Board of Church Extension elected Mrs. E. E. Wiley, of Emory, Va., as president; Miss Lucinda B. H. Im, of Louisville, Ky., secretary; Mrs. George P. Kendrick, of Louisville, Ky., treasurer, with nine managers. We were not fully organized in Louisiana under a corps of officers until the general meeting held in Carondelet Street Church, on Dec. 3, 1891. The following were the officers elected: President, Mrs. J. J. Lyons; corresponding secretary, Miss Mary Werlein; recording secretary, Mrs. C. W. Carier; treasurer, Mrs. A. R. Widney—all of New Orleans.

During the two past years we have helped three parsonages. There have been other calls to which we have not been able to respond. It must be remembered that we retain in the treasury half of our income for home work throughout Louisiana. The other half is sent on by our Conference treasurer to the general treasurer for our needs at large; so we can see the fruits of our labors in our own State.

MARY WERLEIN, Conf. Sec.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Some of the church papers are on a boom, seemingly. Why can't our agents, the preachers, boom their paper? We believe they can.

We suppose that more than ever, since the election has gone as it has, Zion's Herald will stick to its slogan that "the solid South is a bloody highwayman!"

After an absence of four months, Bishop Wilson has returned from his episcopal tour in South America in good health, and reports our mission work prosperous.

Bishop Keener left last week for his work in Alabama. He was in excellent health. We presume he opened the North Alabama Conference, yesterday, at Lafayette.

We have received from the A. J. Showalter Company, Dalton, Ga., "Echoes from Bethlehem." It is a new Christmas service, and can be had for 5 cents by mail; $4 per hundred.

It is stated that 110,000 copies of Prof. Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," and more than 300,000 copies of "The Greatest Thing in the World" have been sold in Great Britain.

The Methodists of this city will hold a general thanksgiving service in Carondelet Street Church at 11 A. M., Thursday, Nov. 24. Rev. F. N. Parker, of Parker Chapel, will preach the sermon. Let everybody come.

A brother in the Mississippi Conference writes: "The Advocate gets better and better all the time, for which you are to be complimented." Let us all thank the Lord for grace given to make the paper better and better.

It is not a new thing in Methodism for a member of an Annual Conference to receive a "nominal appointment." Perhaps it is a "new departure" toward something better. At any rate, are there not some preachers who should receive such appointments all the time?

Rev. J. F. Austin has retired from the editorship of the Western North Carolina Methodist. He is succeeded by Rev. L. P. Groome, who has also bought out the Statesville Christian Advocate, and will consolidate the two papers. We wish the new venture abundant success.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Missionary Secretary, called on us last week, en route from West Texas to Nashville. He represents "the debt" as "growing beautifully less" at every Conference, and is confident, if "all pull, and pull together," the wheels will roll out of the mud upon the solid rock, March 31, 1893.

A brother in North Mississippi Conference encourages us with these words: "I want to tell you how much I appreciate your editorials of late. Double work seems to press the best things out of you. I get sermons out of some things you say." So we are helping some, for which we thank the Divine Spirit.

Have You Ashma?

Dr. R. Schifmann, St. Paul, Minn., will mail a trial package of Schifmann's Asthma Cure to any sufferer who sends his address and names this paper. Never fails to give instant relief in worst cases, insures comfortable sleep and cures where others fail.

To the Pastors: Brethren: You are urged to have your statistical reports ready the first day of the Conference at Corinth. Take pains in preparing them, and be sure to give them to the statistical secretary on Wednesday, the first day of Conference. T. W. Lewis.

A Pleasant Reflection

—the fact that easy washing has been made safe. Until Pearline came, it was dangerous. Pearline takes away the danger as it takes away the work. There is no scouring and scrubbing, to wear things out; there is no trouble in keeping things clean. Pearline is better than soap. With soap—hard work; for easy work—Pearline.

Beware

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 200 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

NOTICE TO THOSE OWING THIS ADVOCATE FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Publisher of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will be much obliged to subscribers to hand amount due to the preacher in charge, so that the preacher can settle at Conference with the representative or the agent of this paper.

North Mississippi Conference Notice.

The class of the first year of the North Mississippi Conference will meet promptly at 7 o'clock, Monday evening, Nov. 28, at the Methodist Church in Corinth, Miss.

JNO. W. BELL, Ch'n.

The class of the fourth year, North Mississippi Conference, will meet in the Methodist Church, Corinth, Miss., Monday, Nov. 28, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

T. J. NEWELL, J. W. DORMAN, K. M. HARRISON.

Ministers, delegates and visitors attending the North Mississippi Conference, at Corinth, will pay full fare going, taking certificate from agent to that effect, and return at one cent a mile on certificate of the secretary of the Conference.

Brethren coming from points at which through tickets to Corinth can not be obtained will purchase tickets to Grand Junction, Memphis or West Point (as may be most convenient), and repurchase to Corinth, taking a certificate for each ticket purchased. Tickets good until Dec. 9.

HOME LIFE.

CONTENTMENT.

BY MRS. BROWNING.

"O dreary life!" we cry, "O dreary life!"
And still the generations of the birds
Sing through our sighing, and the flocks and herds

Serenely live while we are keeping strife
With heaven's true purpose in us, as a knife Against which we may struggle. Ocean glides
Unslackened the dry land; savannah swards
Unweary sweep; hills watch, unworn; and ripe,
Meek leaves drop yearly from the forest trees.
To show, above, the unwearied stars that pass
In their old glory. O thou God of old!
Grant me some smaller grace than comes to these;

But so much patience, as a blade of grass
Grows by, contented through the heat and cold.

The Second Marriage.

"How cozy you do look!" I could not help saying as I sank into an easy chair opposite my two old friends whom I had not met in five years.

"We are enjoying our second marriage," answered my friend, with a merry laugh.
"Your second marriage?" I looked at her in amazement. I knew she had never married any man except the one beside her, and she had been his wife over thirty years.

"You see," she continued, tucking a silvery hair 'neath the dainty lace cap, "when Will and I first married, we had only each other to think of and care for. To this day I love to think of those first two years. Then a little one came to share our affection. What with making dainty little dresses and keeping busy hands and feet out of mischief, I could not always think to have my husband's slippers by the fire or his hat and gloves in just the right place. As the years passed and our children grew, our interest was centered in their welfare, we had leisure to think of each other; now they are married and settled in homes of their own, and we have gone back just where we started, with only each other to care for."

"And do you enjoy it all the same?" I asked.
"More," she answered quickly; "then we had to learn each other's likes and dislikes; now we know them and can gratify the other's wishes almost before they are spoken."

I watched them during the day, and noted how careful he was to do all little errands to save her steps, and how quietly she arranged everything for his comfort. When he praised the lunch her eyes brightened, just as I imagined they did in those first years. We lingered long at the table, chatting of old times and old friends. His voice was as strong, and his laugh as hearty and fresh as years ago, while she had lost none of her peculiar powers of entertaining.

I wondered then, and many times since, why there could not be many more such second marriages. Why, as the years pass, instead of drifting apart, can not husbands and wives be drawn more closely together, helping and cheering each other in their declining years, until they pass over the river and sit down to the marriage supper of the Lamb?—May Wallace, in Christian Intelligencer.

A Child's Sense of Justice.

Nothing seems to burn into the memory and heart of a child as an undeserved punishment, however trifling the matter may seem to the adult inflictor. In some children of the sunny, hopeful type the wave of indignation and helpless, unspoken protest against unjust correction passes away, and leaves apparently no trace. To other children, with more sensitive natures or more rebellious disposition, unjust words of reproach kindle fires of rage, which smoulder with sullen persistence under the ashes of seeming forgetfulness, ready to burst out violently and unexpectedly. It is this sense of overdrawn picture, one has only to think back to one's own childish days, and to recall the time when careless treatment by an elder first taught us to be bitter, unforgiving, resentful. A child's sense of justice is as keen as his heart is tender, and this is one of the qualities most necessary to a noble character, a quality that must be blended with truth and honor and self-sacrifice to give the right balance to dispositions which would otherwise work harm. A child's justice is always tempered with mercy to those he loves, and when in the home he is justly and tenderly dealt with, he learns little by little that higher sense of justice toward all with whom he comes in contact. When his own small rights are carelessly and continually thrust aside, he too learns to play the brigand, to invent devices to achieve the might which he has learned makes right.—Harper's Bazar.

Say Well and Do Well.

A short time before Dean Stanley's death he closed an eloquent sermon with a quiet verse, which greatly impressed his congregation. On being asked about it afterward he said it was doubtful whether the lines were written by one of the earliest deans of Westminster or by one of the early Scotch reformers.

The Dean had come upon it by accident, and feeling that it expressed with singular felicity the true Christian proportion between doctrine and character, between good words and good works, he used it to point and adorn his sermon. Readers may be glad to add it to their collection of good words:

Say well is good, but do well is better;
Do well seems spirit, say well the letter.
Say well is godly and helpeth to please,
But do well lives godly, and gives the world ease.

Say well to allness some time is bound,
But do well is free on every ground.
Say well has friends, some here, some there,
But do well is welcome everywhere.

By say well to many God's word cleaves,
But for lack of do well it often leaves.
If say well and do well were bound in one frame,
Then all were done, all were won, and gotten were gain.

—Selected.

We are, perhaps, too much in the habit of thinking of death as the culmination of disease, which regarded only in itself is an evil, and a terrible evil. But I think rather of death as the first pulse of the new strength, shaking itself free from the old mouldy remnants of earth-garments, that it may begin in freedom the new life which growth of the old. The caterpillar dies into the butterfly. Who knows but disease may be the coming of the keener life breaking into this, and beginning to destroy, like fire, the inferior modes or garments of the present? And thus disease would be but the sign of the salvation of fire; of the agony of the greater life to lift us to itself, out of that wherein we are falling and sinking. And so we praise the consuming fire of life.—George Macdonald.

SCIENTIFIC.

An American Newspaper Office.

Col. Cookerill, writing in Lippincott's Magazine, for August, on the "Newspaper of the Future," incidentally describes the office of the Chicago Herald:

"What better illustration could there be of the vast improvements recently made in the mechanical and editorial departments of a great American newspaper than the present condition of the Chicago Herald in the World's Fair city? No building in the world is probably so thoroughly adapted for the purpose for which it was erected. Certainly no home of industry is so effectively and at the same time so magnificently equipped. What would an ante-bellum journalist say to a business office with three thousand six hundred square feet of floor space, flanked by sixteen columns of genuine Siennese marble, with entrance doors, lockless and keyless, which can never be closed, Summer and Winter, morning and night, day in and day out, through the year? What would the old time type think of a composing-room with its walls of white enamel, its quadruple cast-iron type-stands with cases for one hundred and eighty men, its electric calls connecting each case with the copy box, its aerial railway conveying advertising matter up to the business office, its separate clothes-closets for one hundred and sixty men, its extensive reference library for the use of the proof room, its marble closets, filtered ice-water coolers, with solid silver, gold-lined drinking cups, its three hundred and forty-eight incandescent electric lights and marble-topped luncheon counters and tables? What would he have thought of marble bath-tubs for the stereotypers, of a great central library for the editors and reporters, around which are arranged a score of handsome editorial rooms, each connected by copy and speaking tubes with all the others? What would the old-time journalist, with his long hair lingering affectionately on his forehead, say to a publisher's apartment in which all the metal fixtures are oxidized silver and all the wood-work of solid mahogany? What would the old-time hand press foreman think of ten Scott-Potters in a straight line, operated by a single line shaft one hundred and twenty-four feet in length, of marble closets and bath-rooms for all employees and a constant flow of cold, clean water, day and night, in every room from an unending artesian well?

"And yet is there not good reason to believe that in some respects, at least, the newspaper of the future may as far surpass its forerunner to-day as the Chicago Herald building of to-day has surpassed the cheap and dingy newspaper building of twenty years ago?"—Review of Reviews.

Early Mental Development.

Both common observation and the closest scientific study have made it plain that youth is the period of sense ascendancy. From this, most important conclusions follow, which we can not ignore without paying a heavy penalty. Attention has been called to the infant in order to show that, prior to all school education, nature asserts herself and points the way in which the human brain and mind develop. Any education that overlooks these facts is directly against the organization we possess, and must be more or less of a failure. How far our methods have been and are in harmony with them I shall presently attempt to show.

For the moment let me follow the child out of the stage of infancy into that of school age. The boy of five, let us suppose, is sent to school a perfect stranger to books and the usual educational equipment. Everything on the road to school attracts him to such an extent that likely enough he may arrive late. When at school the teacher may find him so restless that the question of keeping him in order so that he shall not disturb others is a matter of serious difficulty. So long as he can be kept in action things go well enough, but to keep this activity within bounds is the problem.

Very often repressive measures that quite paralyze his nature are resorted to in order to adapt his organism to the environment instead of the reverse being attempted. It is forgotten too often that if this young creature were not active, even restless, impulsive, impatient—i. e., ever ready to secure some new impression—he could not develop after Nature's plan.—Popular Science Monthly.

ALCOHOL AND HEALTH.—There is high value in abstinence from alcohol; it modifies and averts danger to thousands, and it is always an experiment which every man may very profitably make upon himself. If it succeeds, good and well, so much the better for the individual; if it does not succeed as a health measure, then there must be other causes of ill health to look after, as bad air, bad food, etc. The drinking habits of the country are a disgrace to civilization. We swallow gallons of alcohol which are not needed, either for nutrition or for any other purpose whatever. Our bars, restaurants and gin palaces supply a demand for that which is noxious, debasing and a source of poverty, disease and crime.

What is the remedy? Is it local option, prohibition or what? Both these may be useful, but beyond and above them all is needed a knowledge of the fact that drinking injures the body of the drinker. We need also all of us to have a higher regard for our bodies and their sacredness. The article which we published in the Herald of Health, in February last, by Mr. Frothingham, on the sacredness of the body, struck the keynote of this subject. When we have learned to regard our bodies as temples of an undying spirit, then shall we cease from drinking, whether there be local option laws and prohibition enactments or not. Then these laws will be useless.—Herald of Health.

HOW WE FALL ASLEEP.—Scientific investigators assert that in beginning to sleep the senses do not fall indifferently to slumber, but drop off one after another. The slight senses in consequence of the protection of the eyelids to receive impressions first, while all the other senses preserve their sensibility entire. The sense of taste is the next which loses its susceptibility to impression, and then the sense of smelling. The hearing is next in order, and last of all comes the sense of touch. Furthermore, the senses are brought to sleep with different degrees of protundness. The sense of touch sleeps the most lightly and is the most easily awakened; the next easiest is the hearing, the next is the sight, and the taste and smell awake last. Another remarkable circumstance deserves notice: certain muscles and parts of the body begin to sleep before others. Sleep commences at the extremities, beginning with the feet and legs, and creeping toward the center of nervous action, explains the American Analyst. The necessity of keeping the feet warm and perfectly still as a preliminary of sleep is well known. From these explanations it will not appear surprising that there should be an imperfect kind of mental action which produces the phenomena of dreaming.—Exchange.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

PARABLES.

BY FRANK DEMETER SHERMAN.

Out of a pebbled brook
Pebbles round and smooth I took:
Like a jewel, everyone
Caught a color from the sun—
Ruby red and sapphire blue,
Emerald and onyx too,
Diamond and amethyst,
Not a precious stone I missed:
Gems I held from every land
In the hollow of my hand.
Workman Water these had made;
Patiently through sun and shade,
With the ripples of the mill
He had polished them until,
Smooth, symmetrical and bright,
Each one sparkling in the light
Showed within its burning heart
All the lapidary's art;
And the brook seemed thus to sing:
Patience conquers everything.

To Japan.

AS FAR AS NASHVILLE.

From Chattanooga the road climbed at first through mountains, but by and by got into plains where wheat is the principal growth. The rice fields in Japan which are to be harvested in about thirty days remind me of American wheat and oat fields. The train stopped at one town that seemed only a fortnight old. Some capitalists had bought the land and were "booming." The Southern Methodists, Episcopalians, and Congregationalists all have chief universities in Tennessee. We noticed en route a sign, "This way to University of the South." This is the Episcopalian school. But it is said to read here in Japan of the recent intestine war in Tennessee. The effect of such troubles upon other peoples who take America as a model can not be told.

Arriving in Nashville, and taking a street car. It placed me about 8 p. m. at the main building of Vanderbilt University, where a great, warm throng was like to a commencement address. Vanderbilt campus is, perhaps, the loveliest spot in the South, full as it is of grasses, flowers, trees, beautiful walks and buildings, learned teachers and polished students. Every boy who reads this ought to have an ambition to go there and spend some years of his life. You may think this impossible for you! It is impossible if you have not the determination. If you have, you can. Bro. Moseley and I have been talking about this point in our own experiences, and agreed that many times a young man thinks he can not, when with more pluck and grace he could. To this end be diligent now to develop a strong Christian character and to get a high degree of mental training in smaller schools. These will be necessary before you go.

Mr. Emura: I am a little girl nine years old. I go to the mission in Keller's Row. I belong to the Band of Hope. It is to teach little girls and boys not to love wine. We have twenty-one scholars in the band. My teacher is good and kind. Her name is Mrs. Hillyard. I have two brothers, and they work. My mama is a widow. My brother Joe is a member of Bro. Beard's Church, on Felicity street. I hope I will love Jesus like my brother Joe and teacher.

MAY POSEY.

The Music of Alpine Children.

If it be possible to find a human being that is merely a mirror of nature and nothing more, take those children who spend their years in the uplands of the Alps in Southern Europe, watching flocks of goats and sheep with their tinkling bells, sitting all day in the sun, hearing the shrill bleats, and the whisper of the pines, and the eternal babble of the stream, saying nothing, playing no game or sport, solemn and silent, with their great eyes looking upon you as you pass, without surprise. But these strange children, that seem as absolutely absorbed in nature as it is possible for man to be, that people these wilds like the grasshopper or the anemone or the turtle-dove, have their note, like the last of the three. They have their little pipe or flute, and at intervals you hear them playing a melody which, however it may vary with the country, is, so far as I know, invariably sad in its tone; and when you hear it you feel that here is the real, the subtle, the adequate expression of that element in perfect joy, that sad without which any sweetness elicits and becomes a burden. When you hear such a melody—and I am taking its most simple and perfect occurrence—you can not but feel that here is expressed what words can not tell, what we can not explain to our civilized fellow, but what this silent child has felt out without conscious effort or theory.—Professor Mahaffy, in New York Christian Advocate.

Thinking Something Good.

Little Majorie was by no means fond of going to church. She had to sit too still, and "the man" talked about things she could not yet understand.
"What is it for, mama?" she asked one day.
"What do you go to church for?"
Mama tried to tell her the reason, and said:
"And when you can't understand what the minister means, you must remember he is talking about good and beautiful things; and you must make up your mind to think of something good yourself."
That day Majorie was very quiet in church, and her mother praised her for it on the way home.
"I did just as you told me," said the wee maid. "I thought of something good."
"What was it, dearie?"
"Apple pie!"—Exchange.

Singing Sand.

There are a few beaches in the world on which are found "singing sands" so called because of a prolonged musical sound heard when walking through the sand or stirring it with a stick. One of the best known beaches where the phenomenon occurs is at Mauchester, about twenty-five miles from Boston. Another place is on one of the Hebrides Islands. Some of the sands were sent to an American scientist last year for examination. One portion was sealed in bottles, and another sent in bags. The latter lost their peculiar properties, but the former sang sweetly on being stirred. No satisfactory cause for the curious sound has yet been discovered. One peculiarity of these musical beaches is that they occur in comparatively small patches, and the sound is not always of uniform loudness. It is said that along the shore of the Caribbean Sea there is a place where a disturbance of the sands makes a noise like the barking of a dog.—Christian at Work.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Nov. 20, 1892.

By REV. WM. H. LAPRADE, D. D.

Paul's First Missionary Sermon.

Acts xiii, 26-43.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"To you is the word of this salvation sent." (Verse 26.)

Paul and Barnabas did not remain long at Perga, but started almost immediately to Antioch in Pisidia, a city of importance, at that time a Roman Colony. From Perga to Antioch the road, leading a little east of north, passed through a mountainous district intersected with robbers and dangerous also because of the mountain streams, which became torrents in the Spring. The journey probably was made in May. It is probable that Paul alludes to this journey in 11. Cor. x, 23.

On the first Sabbath after their arrival Paul and Barnabas went into the synagogue. Jews and were numerous throughout Asia Minor, and had made not a few proselytes; these met together at the synagogue for comfort and instruction. The custom was, after prayers had been offered, and portions of the "Law," and then of the "Prophecy," read, "to call upon strangers, or upon men renowned for learning, for a word of exhortation or consolation."

Responding to such a call on this occasion, Paul arose and began to speak to the people. Alluding to the call of Israel, he traced their political history, in a few sentences, until the time of David; declared that Jesus, of the seed of David, was the Savior of Jewish prophecy; and quoted the testimony of John the Baptist concerning him. Then follows the text of our lesson.

Ver. 26. Paul includes both Hebrews and proselytes in his statement, having reference to the provision that to "the Jew first" the gospel should be preached. Personally, although pre-eminently the "Apostle to the Gentiles," his heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel, was that they might be saved.

Ver. 27-29. These verses set forth, (a) The ignorance of the Jews of Jerusalem as to the real character of Jesus; (b) their failure to understand the prophecies concerning the Messiah; (c) their unintentional fulfilling of these prophecies; (d) their demand, without cause, for his death; (e) their arrangement for securing his body from his followers.

Ver. 30, 31. The doctrine of salvation in Christ rests, historically, on the proven fact of his resurrection from the dead. Paul states the fact as one admitted, and then adds the proof, "he was seen many days," and by men still living, who were "witnesses unto the people." These witnesses were not strangers to Jesus, liable to mistake another for him; they had been with him in Galilee, had accompanied him to Jerusalem, knew him intimately.

Ver. 32, 33. "Glad tidings"—so the angels' song declared to the shepherds—i. e., that the long-promised Savior had come at last, and that the resurrection of Jesus "was the manifestation of his sonship," proving him to be the Son mentioned in the second Psalm.

Ver. 34. The meaning is: The promise (See Isaiah lv, 3), "I will give you the sure mercies of David," is fulfilled in the resurrection of Jesus, the Son of David, who thus is made the sure and eternal basis of all good things.

Ver. 35-37. Quoting from Psalm xvi, 10, Paul declares: (a) That David died and saw corruption; (b) that Jesus, although he died, was raised again without corruption. The argument is: David indeed served God in his own day, but death overtook his service; Jesus, raised from the dead, is an eternal dispenser of the "sure mercies" of his father, David.

Ver. 38, 39. Having shown that Jesus was the Messiah, the promised Savior, Paul applies to his hearers the glorious truth that through him is "preached the forgiveness of sins;" moreover, that where the power of the law ended—for "by the deeds of the law can no man be justified"—the power of Jesus, the Christ, came in, through faith in him, and accomplished justification. A sinner, under the law simply, must remain condemned until pushed; in Christ a sinner, pardoned, redeemed, renewed, is saved from punishment, and also from sin itself.

Ver. 40, 41. Paul now warns his congregation not to subject themselves, by rejecting Christ, to the threatened evils spoken by the prophet Habakkuk. To reject him is to defeat all God's plans for our salvation.

Ver. 42, 43. After Paul finished his sermon, he and Barnabas retired. As they did so the congregation invited them to speak again on the next Sabbath. Afterward, when the congregation broke up many Jews and proselytes, followed Paul and Barnabas and held further conference about this salvation, the apostles urging them to persevere, so as not to receive grace in vain.

The Ground of the Christian's Hope.

A ruling feature of a Christian's habitual state of mind is that he is constantly looking forward to another life. A Christian does not speculate on another life as a possibility; he takes it for granted as an ascertained fact. His looks forward to it, as he looks forward to the changes of nature, to the setting of the sun, to the succession of the seasons. He knows that death will come to him as to everybody else; that each day of his life brings him nearer; that it means a momentous and unimaginable change. But he knows something, too, of what will follow it. Christ our Lord has converted what was, before he came, at best, a splendid guess into an absolute certainty. He has unveiled its terror, he has enhanced its beauties. He has told all who will trust him as a guide how to secure in it a blessed immortality. And, therefore, as I have said, a Christian looks forward. He treats this life as a prelude to that which will follow it. He gives it up, it needs be, to secure the life beyond. He does not pretend to be particularly heroic, or other than a prudent man who acts upon the knowledge which has been put in his hand. He looks forward to the time when "mortality shall be swallowed up in life," and meanwhile he "rejoices in the hope of the glory of God."—H. P. Liddon.

LIVING ANTHEMS.—The prayer of Jesus begins with a petition which exhibits the supreme desire of a heart thoroughly consecrated to God—"that thy Son may glorify thee." "Glory to God in the highest" was the first note heard from the angels' song over the plains of Bethlehem. "Glory to God" was Christ's supreme desire in the approaching hour of trial and of atoning death. "To the glory of God" is the motto of all true Christian life, as emphasized by Paul (1. Cor. x, 31). If all Christians consciously realized this great truth and applied it, how much more of the Christ Spirit would breathe in their words and deeds! We sing our "glorias;" let us live them!—McClain's Herald.

ROGERS.-It is with feelings of sadness that I pen the death of Mrs. ELEAN ROGERS, who died Oct. 19, 1892, of heart and brain affection. Mr. Rogers was born and raised in Holmes county; was married to Mr. Frank Rogers on Dec. 9, 1874. She was a member of the Methodist Church, and was thirty-eight years of age.

A host of relatives and innumerable friends mourn her death, and seven children feel an aching void in their childish hearts that can not be filled. Truly, she was a good woman, a sweet mother, a kind neighbor and a most faithful friend, and will be missed by all.

Mr. Rogers was a woman that knew the blights and sorrows of this world; yet while her pathway was ruthlessly strewn with thorns instead of flowers, she was never too weary or heavy-laden to soothe the heartaches and lift the burdens of those within her reach. Like the divine blessings, that rest on the unjust as well as the just, were her kind ministrations: comforting words showered on the unworthy as well as the worthy. Her daily walk was peace and good-will to all mankind, and while the hearts and minds of the bereaved ones linger in sadness around her tenement of clay that lies mouldering in the church-yard, her happy spirit is singing the songs of the redeemed in the beautiful beyond. There are those who visited her in her sickness and her bereavement who noted and admired the quiet resignation and submission with which she endured her suffering and sorrows. To know her was to love her, and I know that she had as noble a heart as ever throbbled in the bosom of a human; but, Death, thou mighty monster, thou hast claimed thy victim! M. L. R.

IVES-CHRISTOPHER Ives, son of Abijah and Barbara Ives, was born in Rousseau county, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1821, and died at his home, in Ruston, La., Sept. 30, 1892. He professed faith in Christ at fifteen, and joined the Lutheran Church. He graduated in Union College in 1842; taught one year in New York; then came South, settling in Georgia. Here he was married to Miss Martha M. Bonner, Aug. 13, 1850. Of this union ten children were born: five of whom preceded him to the good land.

There being no Lutheran Church near him, he joined the M. E. Church, South, and continued a member of it till death. He was educated for a teacher and taught for more than thirty years. He moved to Louisiana many years ago; was widely known and much loved. He was an active Sunday-school worker, and filled the offices of superintendent and teacher with great acceptability. Bro. Ives was a good man, full of faith and love; a patient, faithful follower of the Lord Jesus. No cloud dimmed his spiritual sky, no fear disturbed his trusting soul. He lived the life, he died the death of the righteous; his end was peace.

J. D. HARPER.

NEWSOM-HENRY M. NEWSOM was born Jan. 8, 1860, and died June 23, 1892. He was the son of Jacob and Nannie Newsom. He was raised with a family of seven sisters. Nowonder, then, he was mama's joy, and on him were centered great hopes for the future. He was twice married: first, to Miss Emma Dean. To them were born three children. After her death he married Miss Maggie Henderson. To them were born one sweet little girl.

His was the most beautiful Christian life I ever knew. His conversion was bright and clear. He was willing to bear all things for Jesus' sake. He was meek and humble, loving and kind. His countenance was always beaming forth God's love. Yes, he is gone on before; forever at rest in the bosom of his God. Look up, dear mama; it won't be long till Christ will come. Glory hallelujah! Far away from that loved home he was laid to rest. Strangers closed those eyes and folded those hands on his noble breast, but God claimed his spirit. His sister, MAMIE.

PFEIFFER-BURNER PFEIFFER was born Oct. 10, 1874, and died July 22, 1892.

She entered the Methodist Sunday-school when only four years old, and until stricken with rheumatism, more than fifteen months ago, was a faithful attendant. Early this year she took her bed, and was never out again till weeping friends bore her to the grave. Several months before her death she was received into the Methodist Church, while on her bed, by Bro. J. T. Nicholson. Her little heart had imbibed the noble principles of temperance, and though drawn and racked by frightful rheumatic pains, I am confident that her greatest suffering were caused by her father's intemperance. During the first week of July, thinking the end was near, she sent for her father (who was night watchman at a saw mill near his home), and, clasping her emaciated arms around his neck, from the portals of death she pleaded with him to give up the damping cup. The sad wail of her heart was: "Oh! papa, I'm afraid to leave you. I'm afraid I will never see you again!"

At her request, Bro. Simmons gave her the sacrament of the Lord's Supper on the day before her death, and in the evening she said: "Now, mama, I've done all I can. I want to die." She had not long to wait; for, with the first beams of the morning's sun, swift, silent carriers from heaven came to conduct her home to health and happiness and Jesus.

May the sad hearts of mother, father, brothers and sister find solid comfort in Christ, and may be led them to a glad reunion on the farther shore! H. M. ELLIS.

SINCLAIR-MARTHA JANE SINCLAIR, daughter of Judge G. and E. C. Fenn, was born March 26, 1830, and departed this life at her residence in Westville, Miss., Oct. 3, 1892. She joined the M. E. Church in her fifteenth year. She was reared with pure and noble principles.

By her example the children under her care were taught to be truthful and honorable. The love and respect in which she was held by her neighbors and all who knew her best speak for her, for she was kind to all. She had completely won the highest esteem and confidence of the people of Westville. Her home was the home of the preacher and his family. She was quiet concerning her religious experience; her timid nature shrank from speaking all she felt.

It can truthfully be said she "was clothed with a meek and quiet spirit." She was kind and unselfish to children and grandchildren. Though a great sufferer for years, she bore her afflictions with patience and humility. Her trials and sorrows were many—once widowed, many loved ones "gone before." Among them children and grandchildren. All of which she bore with meek submission, growing more patient in all things, clinging more closely to her Bible and prayer.

Her death was sudden; but only a few days. Her dying testimony was full of comfort to weeping relatives and friends. Her meek, patient, humble life assures us that our dear sister is forever at rest. R. H. BARR, P. C.

COOPER-Mrs. SARAH COOPER was born July 30, 1806, and fell asleep in Jesus at 3 o'clock on the morning of Sept. 6, 1892, after a sojourn in this realm of disappointment and sorrow of more than eighty-six years.

Her husband, Wm. Cooper, who died soon after the war closed, was at one time a Methodist preacher, but afterwards united with the Baptist denomination.

Slater Cooper was born at Washington, Miss., within eight miles of the place of her death. She united with the Methodist Church when quite young, and was ever after a faithful member. She was denied the privilege of attending church services since the first of the year, when she had an attack of pneumonia, from which none expected to see her get up. However, she recovered sufficiently to walk about the house, but she suffered greatly, and almost constantly, for seven months.

A day before her death I went to see her, and when I asked her of her soul, feebly, but confidently, she said: "All is well! It is all right." I think these were her last words. When the angel came he found the worn out veteran sleeping, and she opened her eyes in Paradise with God. When the messengers shall summon us home, may we know "All is well. It is all right." H. M. ELLIS.

HANCOCK-Myrtle May, infant daughter of W. G. Hancock and Ella Sellinger, was born in Ruston, La., April 18, 1892, and died Oct. 6. Her was a short life, but long enough to accomplish her mission of tenderness and love; and then he who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," took her to himself, there to live, in fadeless beauty and joy forever. J. D. HARRIS.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep, had night sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a six-cent bottle.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.-Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to Dr. L. Mitchell, publisher.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A daring attempt was made to rob a Western and Atlantic train at Aftonville, Ga. Instead of securing any booty the robbers were driven off by the trainmen, and one of them is supposed to have been badly wounded.

Law suits directly and indirectly involving the title to 1,700,000 acres of Michigan land are now up before Judge Swan, of the United States Court. There are seven suits with the Michigan Land and Lumber Company as complainant.

Pig iron manufactured at Scranton, Pa., to the amount of 200 tons, has been shipped to Liverpool on the White Star Line steamship Tauric, which sailed from New York on Wednesday last. The shipment is consigned to Derby.

One of the reasons advanced for an extra session of Congress is the impending deficiency in the revenues for the current fiscal year. A deficit of $50,000,000 is predicted, owing to the enormous appropriations and decrease of revenue due to the McKinley bill.

Besides receiving the electoral votes of all the Southern States in the election for the Presidency, Mr. Cleveland carried New York, New Jersey, Michigan, California, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin and Connecticut, receiving 300 votes in the electoral college.

The authorities of Philadelphia are greatly interested in the work now going on of electro-plating with aluminum the iron work of the new City Hall tower in that city. The tower has a surface of 50,000 square feet. It will take three years to complete the work.

Ninety thousand acres of mineral lands in West Virginia have been purchased by an English syndicate, and it is intended to establish steel and iron works such as those owned by Andrew Carnegie. The syndicate has secured the services of skilled workers in iron and steel from Homestead, Pa., who were lately employed in the Carnegie works.

The latest indications are that the new House of Representatives will consist of 215 Democrats, 127 Republicans and 14 third party men, or Fusionists. The latter were generally elected by a combination of Democrats and Populists, and will act as the Democrats on all leading issues. The new Senate will stand: Democrats, 44; Republicans, 40; Third party men, 4.

The three-hundred, Charleston and San Francisco, with Admiral Gherardi in command, will be joined by the Yorktown. The four vessels will then proceed slowly down the South American coast, visiting the principal naval outposts and exchanging the usual naval courtesies between foreign countries. Admiral Gherardi will also take occasion to urge the republics to send a naval representative to the great review in New York harbor next Spring.

The directors of the Chicago Exposition at a meeting on Friday, by a vote of 26 to 4, put themselves on record as being in favor of opening the Exposition on Sunday. The act of Congress, at its last session—making a grant of $2,500,000 to the Exposition, coupled with the grant a stipulation that it should not be open on the first day of the week—is not interfered with by this action of the directors, who only desire to announce their position on the question.

It is intended to construct a new union depot in St. Louis. According to the approved plans the train shed, which will be entirely of iron and glass, will be the largest in the world, having ample capacity for thirty-two full trains, all of which are to be backed in on the pocket system. This portion of the structure will cost $1,400,000. The "head house," or depot proper, will be highly ornamental and will cost $500,000. The land, etc., involved in the matter cost in the neighborhood of $3,500,000. Thus the whole structure will represent an outlay of over $5,000,000.

Nothing daunted by a deficit of 50,000,000 marks, the German government proposes to add about 100,000 men to the standing army at an outlay of 100,000,000 marks a year.

The experiments with the new Mannlicher rifle by the Austrian government experts have proved that the weapon is in every way satisfactory. The new rifle fires 120 rounds a minute, and is sighted at 2,700 yards.

An immense socialist demonstration was held in Trafalgar Square, London, on Nov. 13. Forty speakers, including John Burns, the labor leader, addressed the multitude. There was no collision with the authorities.

The silver wedding of King Humbert and Queen Margherita of Italy will soon take place. Their Majesties have officially notified those whom it may concern that they will accept no gifts on that occasion. Whoever wishes to make them a present is advised to give the value to the poor.

Dense fog have been prevalent in London for a week past. At noon, on Nov. 13, the atmosphere became thicker than ever and the blackness of midnight set in. The gas and electric lights were in use everywhere in the city, but in the streets their rays were unable to penetrate the dense mass of vapor that hung over the city so heavily that it appeared to make its weight perceptible.

The Minister of Education has decided to allow the Methodist Church in Vienna to be reopened. Although at the time the church was closed the reason was said to be that the Methodist doctrines attacked Romanism in an offensive manner, the Minister has now taken a different ground, and has explained to the British ambassador that the building was closed on account of its insanitary condition and its insecure structure.

What is Catarrh?

THE OPINION OF AN EMINENT MEDICAL AUTHORITY.

Catarrh is the cause of more diseases than all other causes combined. There are very few diseases to which human flesh is subject that can not be traced directly to catarrh. Not only is catarrh capable of producing a great variety of diseases, but it also attacks any organ or part of the body. It causes in the ears deafness, in the eyes blindness, in the head and throat discharges and offensive odors, in the bronchial tube and larynx cough and hoarseness, in the lungs consumption, in the stomach dyspepsia, in the kidneys Bright's disease, in the pelvic organs a host of derangements too numerous for mention. Pe-ru-na cures catarrh and all catarrhal diseases wherever located. Pe-ru-na is a systemic remedy, and hence cures catarrh of internal organs as surely as it does catarrh of external organs, as no local application to the affected organ is necessary. Christian Advocate.

VOL. 39.—NO. 47.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1892.

WHOLE NO. 1892.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.
Rev. B. F. LEWIS, Asst. Editor.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

THANKSGIVING ODE.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Once more the liberal year laughs out
O'er richer stores than gems of gold;
Once more with harvest-song and shout
Is nature's bloodless triumph told.
Our common mother rests and sings,
Like Ruth, among her garnered sheaves;
Her lap is full of goodly things,
Her brow is bright with Autumn leaves.
O favors every year made new!
O gifts with rain and sunshine sent!
The bounty overruns our due;
The fullness shames our discontent.
We shut our eyes, and flowers bloom on;
We murmur, but the corn-ears fill;
We choose the shadow, but the sun
That casts it shines behind us still.
God gives us with our rugged soil
The power to make it Eden-land;
And richer fruits to crown our toil
Than Summer-wedded islands bear.
Who murmurs at his lot to-day?
Who seorns his native fruit and bloom?
Or sighs for dainties far away,
Beside the bounteous board of home?
Thank Heaven, instead, that Freedom's arm
Can change a rocky soil to gold;
That brave and generous lives can warm
A clime with Northern lives cold.
And let these altars, wreathed with flowers
And piled with fruits, awake again
Thanksgivings for the golden hours
The early and the latter rain!

"Our Itinerancy."

MR. EDITOR: Your paper, of Nov. 3, contains an article, well written, under the above caption, over the signature of "A Member at Large." Your editorial comment rather invites discussion of this subject amongst the laymen of the church. If you will give me space for a few thoughts, I will write them.

I agree with the writer that a change from our present plan may be necessary; but I differ with him materially as to what the change shall be. He thinks "the preacher should remain as long as the people require his service." I think the time now authorized to remain (four years) is too long, possibly, and might be profitably changed by falling back into the old lines of two years' limitation. I admit the seeming hardship on the preacher. After he has planted his vineyard, he, doubtless, thinks he is entitled to the grapes; but I am not writing this article for the benefit or convenience of the preacher, but how the Word of God shall be best administered, his name glorified, and the church most honored and blessed. The minister who becomes an itinerant Methodist of an Annual Conference is presumed to have given up secular things, and consecrated himself to the work of spreading the gospel of Christ and of the salvation of mankind, and that without his own preference or the desire of the people of any particular locality or place. It is true a preacher may be popular and efficient for four years, or more, at the same place, and the people and membership of the church may be sincerely attached—yes, love him dearly for his work sake; but all these are but evidences that such a man's work ought not to be confined to one place or to one people. Distribute his good work, and make him the instrument of bringing, not only individuals, but scores and hundreds of individuals, to our Redeemer. Other Christian denominations call their preachers and keep them along the path and plan of my brother, "Member at Large," and many of them do well. The Methodists, however, follow their system of itinerancy, and change, and do better. There is no plan of gospel work equal to the plan or system known to me, which equals the Methodist itinerancy. True, there may be, and doubtless are, hardships; but where is the place, business or occupation in this life without them? And are not these inconveniences and disadvantages greatly overcome by the immense good wrought by our plan?

My good brother says no argument can be offered in favor of the "present system except ancient custom." Demonstrated truth needs no argument. The work of the Holy Spirit through its instruments—Wesley, Whitefield, Soule, and on down to the Bishops of the present time—has so thoroughly demonstrated to the world that the plan is a good one, that no reason or argument can be successfully urged against it; and so long as the men in authority in the church are influenced and directed as were Barnabas and Saul, in the first part of the thirteenth chapter of the Acts, there will be no mistake in this matter. If the work is of man, it will fall; but if of God, it can not be overthrown.

The "Member at Large" says the preacher needs a home, a library, an extensive acquaintance, a general reputation for godliness, etc. All these are easily answered. Our good women of the Home Mission and Parsonage Societies are working out the problem of furnishing homes for the preachers by having comfortable parsonages on every station and circuit; and if the preacher gives up one, another awaits him; and if there should be no library at the new home, the cost to remove the one he has is small. An extensive acquaintance he can not have by remaining in one place. A general reputation for godliness can only be obtained by an extensive circulation amongst the people, and a godly walk, not by his effort in one place, however good that effort may be. How would the people in Albany or Schenectady hear the great divines of New York if they remained in New York? If Sam Jones had remained at Cartersville, Ga., how many men in New Orleans would have known and felt his powerful influence? If Bishop Galloway had remained editor of your own good paper, how many people in Europe would have known his greatness? Our preachers must move about to be useful and eminently successful.

Your correspondent speaks words of praise of Dr. Palmer. I accord it all; but the world will never know the good the great Dr. Palmer would have done, and the renown he might have won, if his great talent and usefulness had been distributed in New York, Chicago, and other great cities, and not penned up and confined to New Orleans.

Now, Mr. Editor, I will dare say no man ought to be a Bishop in the Methodist Church who will not, or does not, make the Holy Ghost the man of his counsel; and no man ought to be in the ranks of Methodist itinerancy who is not willing to do, or try to do, the work he is called of God to do. The appointments may seem hard; but if made of God, and the preacher will believe and trust, all will be well at last.

I accompanied a good brother to his new appointment once. On arrival per steamer, the evening was intensely cold. Although notice had been sent, there was none to meet or receive the new preacher. After walking over the town, and making inquiry for accommodation, none could be found except at a hotel, and the only fire there was in the office, well stocked with liquors and billiard tables, not well suited for the preacher and his good wife. The brother almost determined to return to his Naxos home; but he felt that if made of God, and the preacher will believe and trust, all will be well at last.

MAON, Miss.

Beginnings of the American Thanksgiving Day.

The first Thanksgiving service held in North America was observed by religious ceremonies conducted by an English minister by the name of Wolfe in the year 1578, on the shores of Newfoundland. The reverend gentleman accompanied the expedition under Frobisher, to whom belongs the honor of bringing the first English colony to settle on these shores. This was, perhaps, the first Christian sermon preached and the first celebration of the holy communion in North America.

The earliest record of any observance of a similar service within the present territory of the United States was held by the Popham colony, who settled at Sagadahoc, on the coast of Maine, in August, 1607. This service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Seymour according to the directions of the Church of England for that Sunday. On the 19th of August (O. S.), 1607, they formally took possession of the New World in the name of their sovereign, and laid the foundations of a free Christian state with prayer and thanksgiving. Their charter was unrolled and read before all the people, after which a sermon was preached by the Rev. Richard Seymour. This was the first sermon before the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, and three months after the landing of the company at Jamestown, in Virginia. At the same time they held the first popular election in the territory of the United States, and the first officers elected to govern an American commonwealth were chosen.

The Pilgrim fathers anchored in the harbor of Plymouth, Mass., Saturday, Dec. 9 (O. S.), 1620. Monday, Dec. 11 (O. S.), a landing was made upon what is called "Forefather's Rock." During the long, dreary Winter which followed, forty-six of the one hundred and one settlers died and had been buried on the bluff overlooking the place of their landing.

November 9, 1621, the ship Fortune arrived, bringing an addition of thirty-five persons. The Pilgrims had gathered their crops from twenty acres of corn and from six acres of barley and peas; the cold weather had brought into the harbor an abundance of water fowl, and deer and wild turkeys were found in the forests near the settlement. About this time Gov. Bradford gave direction for the observance of a day of thanksgiving to be held Dec. 13, 1621 (O. S.).

From that time the observance of a day of thanksgiving occurred with more or less regularity in Plymouth Colony, and later among the settlers at Salem and Massachusetts Bay.—L. L. Gracey, D. D., in The Christian.

Extracts from a Letter of the Rev. H. G. Hawkins, Missionary to Japan.

Matsuyama, Japan, Sept. 22, 1892.

B. D. Miller: Your letter, of Aug. 10, reached me Sept. 15. The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is a very regular visitor, and, of course, nearly everything in it is read. This is the fourth week of my work here, and thus far it has been very pleasant, indeed. I am learning to close my sensibilities against what is unpleasant and can not be remedied. Of course, there is much to interest, and in many respects my surroundings are delightful. There are 430 students, mainly of the old and proud Samurai class, in this school. I am with each of the upper divisions for three hours every week, and they have been very respectful. My contract has in it a prohibitory clause as to the teaching of religion in the school; but this may not prove a great hindrance. Indeed, it may be well under the existing circumstances. The students learn soon the position of a teacher upon the subject, and already at their request I have set apart one night in each week for a talk on "American Customs," and a Bible study at my own home. (He rents a house, and has a Japanese servant to wait upon him—as the experienced missionaries advised him to do as much better than boarding.) The room has been full every time. I am glad I can see an influence in the "American Customs" talk, of which they are not always conscious. I can present to them the happiness of an American home, and leave it to them to connect this with the religion of that home. They always associate America with Christianity, and that is why the bad foreign element in the open ports is such an enemy. Now can be realized the force of the argument of those who urge great efforts for the completion of America in order that the followers of Christ may be multiplied abroad. And yet the harvest in Japan is ripe, and should not be wasted. There are among the students here four Christians; perhaps twenty-five who cling loosely to Buddhism or Shintolism, and over four hundred without a faith.

A different set of students from those who requested the talks on "American Customs," asked the study of the Bible; but most of them remained through two hours of reading and talking about religion. Among their questions were: "What is the difference between Christ and the Holy Ghost?" "Will you prove to me that there is a God?" This leading to the subject of the resurrection, one remarked, "But Christ could not rise from the dead!"

The work is somewhat obstructed by the fact that they do not understand English well, and an interpreter must be introduced. But I am sometimes glad he must work between, because it gives me time to think.

Two have become probationers during the past week, and come regularly along with my waiting-boy to prayer at 9:30 p. m. Last night two others joined them, one being the son of the chief justice of this region.

My Sunday work is in Matsuyama, a wicked city of 5,000 people, where the gospel has been preached for ten years without visible result. The Congregationalists first had it; then turned it over to us. Our membership is two converts from other points.

The young men of this school read much, but the character of the literature is not good. They are stuffed with infidel ideas, and something must be done to counteract this. They are at my side when I go out for a walk, or to the sea, and I could have them with me in the sitting-room down stairs all of the time, if I wished; but, in order that there may be some time for private purposes, it has been necessary for me to fix hours for receiving. I have managed them so that they feel at home in my house, and do not feel maltreated if I refuse to see them. Some are below with my waiting-boy now, hoping that I will go down to them, or invite them up to me. But I have already allowed one ship to sail for America without sending any message home. If I just had a good reading-room adapted to their needs, it would, to some extent, solve the difficulty.

I am quite anxious for the agent of Millsaps College to place at my disposal $100, to be invested in articles for the college museum. I think Matsuyama a much better place to secure such than Kobe or Yokohama.

I must close and take my afternoon walk, though the streets are very wet. Save the lady who has charge of the Congregationalist Female School, I have been the only foreigner in Matsuyama these four weeks. Sister Mosely is in Kobe for her health, and Bro. Mosely has been at home only two days. But I'll have company in this walk.

H. G. HAWKINS.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. W. Chambers, P. C., Enterprise and Stonehill circuit, Nov. 7: "We had a fine meeting at Mayerhoff Springs. Rev. J. P. Drake was present with us in the power of the Spirit. The community was greatly benefited. Over 20 conversions and 18 accessions to the church."

Rev. C. McDonald, Dowdville, Miss., Nov. 12: "In this part of the Brandon district for some years past the holiness movement has had some hold on the people, so as to do the churches some damage. Those who were carried away with these extreme views generally left whatever branch of the church they belonged to. Strange to think any man would get too good to belong to the church! Some of these are coming back to their first love. We regard this strange movement now about ended. The church is a useful organization. Let us be loyal and zealous members."

Chas. A. Davis, McNutt, Miss., Nov. 7: "We are now in sight of the close of this Conference year, feeling that we have been the recipient of many unmerited blessings, of which one was to receive license to preach the gospel. The church at this place has been graciously blessed with a revival, accompanied by the Holy Spirit. Rev. E. S. Lewis, our pastor, preached his last sermon last Sunday. He goes to the Southern University after the sitting of Conference. We send some resolutions to the memory of one of our little Sunday-school members, whom it was our sad duty to bury."

Rev. B. S. Rayner, P. C., Vossburg circuit: "We are closing out our second year in this charge. God has been with us and greatly blessed us. We have increased our membership from 288 to 392, having had 128 accessions. Our people have 'grown in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord.' Amongst them are many excellent Christians and zealous workers. We have had this year 70 accessions, and, doubtless, more than that number of conversions. I have been efficiently assisted in meetings by Revs. I. L. Peebles, E. T. Breland, and others. We have five Sunday-school missionary societies, with a membership of 200; also two Women's Missionary Societies and one auxiliary society. We hope to have our parsonage neatly repaired by Conference."

Rev. O. C. Grisham, Banner circuit, North Mississippi Conference, Nov. 7: "God has been good to us. Fifty-odd conversions, 53 additions; baptized 20 adults, 16 infants; built 2 churches. We have ten appointments, five of which are supplied by local brethren. As I was not physically able to do the work needed, these brethren—Bro. Lagrone, Bruner and Webster—have done faithful work. They have stood close by me in all my work. Their prayers have continued to go up for our success. May the Lord bless them! We are on rising ground, spiritually. We have had gracious revivals among the members this year. Bless the Lord! Financially, we are behind greatly. The crops are very short in this section. Brethren, pray for us. May the ADVOCATE prosper!"

Rev. W. M. Young, Lula and Tunica, North Mississippi Conference, Nov. 15: "This has been a hard year on the preachers in this valley. It has been an unusual year of fatality in this portion. Crops have been very much damaged by the frost and rain; so the outlook, financially, is very gloomy. We have had but few accessions to the church this year, but some gracious revivals in the church; especially at Lula. My people are more religious now than at any time since I came to this work—three years ago. We have made some material advancement this year. We have just finished a neat, new church at Tunica, which is a perfect gem. Bro. Standefer dedicated it for us last Sunday, and at night raised the entire salary of the pastor. This is Bro. Standefer's last year on this district, having filled out the term of four years. He certainly leaves a host of close personal friends all over this district. The people hate to give him up. We are stirring in a hurry now to get ready for Conference. Hope to meet you at Conference. Oh, how we look forward to the time which is close by when we shall meet the brethren!"

Rev. D. W. Babb, Stone, Ala., Nov. 16: "I send you my report for fourth quarter, Hebron circuit, North Mississippi Conference. Our last quarterly meeting held. Our presiding elder well in his place; exerts a wholesome influence on our work. We have had some good meetings this quarter. Twenty-eight additions on profession of faith. Many persons warmed up; many family altars erected. Our finances much behind; somewhat attributable to our exceeding high water in July. You remember we are right on the bank of the Tombigbee river. However, our people will make a fair showing in money matters. We are much indebted to Bro. J. H. Mitchell for valuable aid in our meetings this quarter. May the Lord reward him! We are in less than two weeks of Conference. How fast the year has gone! Our people have been exceedingly mindful of us. A more courteous, hospitable people we have not found. We have had much sunshine this year, with here and there a cloud; but the sun has shone all the while, nevertheless. We have much to thank God for. We take courage and press onward. The ADVOCATE is growing in favor."

Rev. H. Wallace, P. C., Port Vincent circuit, Nov. 16: "Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held at Bayou Barbery, Nov. 12 and 13. Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. P. A. Johnston, was at his post of duty, full of the Spirit of God. On Sunday, at the eleven o'clock service, he preached and administered the Lord's Supper to about eighty communicants. The Lord has greatly blessed us this Conference year. Our collections will be up in full, notwithstanding the over-assessment levied by the Board of Stewards. Last year this work was assessed $80, and, with three churches less, assessed this year $112. We have received into full connection 41 members, and others yet to be received in when baptized. We hope to report our parsonage on the way to completion at Conference. We have collected several hundred dollars toward building a church at Port Vincent. Collected $500 worth of endowment notes for Centenary College. We have only 238 members upon this charge, inclusive of those received in this year. They are a kind people. May God greatly bless them! Many thanks to Bros. W. W. Simmons, J. P. Haney, W. Curry and W. Van Valkenburgh for assistance. Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

A NEW CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

On Oct. 22, Bro. E. T. Breland and myself began a meeting in Zion's Rest Congregational Methodist Church, near Ecucutta, in West Wayne mission. I remained until Thursday following, at which time Bro. Chambers came and continued the meeting, with Bro. Breland, until Sunday following. The meeting resulted in 25 accessions, and a church was organized with that number. We also baptized 11 children. The material received is good, and the church self-supporting from the beginning. This new church supplies a want in that section. The neighborhood is an excellent one, and the church will, no doubt, grow rapidly.

Church Extension Pointers.

Church extension extends.

Millions for church building will yield billions for world conquest.

The first thing essential to the living of bees—a difficult job at best—is a hive.

In Louisiana the sociological conditions are so peculiar that we must build or retire.

Oh, that the synagogue, as well as the pedagogue and the demagogue, were abroad in the land!

Twenty thousand Methodists in Louisiana gave a thousand dollars to church extension last year.

The schlem that destroys Roman Catholicism must first overturn her cathedrals and raze her convent foundations.

Those who give to church extension sow units and reap tens; sow tens and reap hundreds; sow hundreds and reap thousands.

Christians who contribute of their means to the church extension cause are, in a double sense, "builders together with God."

The bins have been published between Foreign Missions and Church Extension, and the latter, as the former's beautiful bride, will soon be ready for an ocean trip.

The church home is as essential to the integrity of the religious community as the family home to that of the family. Only barbarism can thrive on wilderness or hut fare.

The flock that can not be folded will not survive "mosses and mountain" in a strange land, nor the rapacity of an enemy "more swift than eagles and more fierce than lions."

The church that gives ecclesiastical shelter to the poor man, grows rich by the operation of that rule of Providence which decrees that the rich man gets poorer and the poor man richer.

At the State conventions held by our Baptist brethren in Louisiana, when church extension is reached the mercury springs to Summer heat, and the hat goes around amid a tempest of applause.

The Great Builder contracts to furnish the spiritual if we will provide the material supplies for earthly temples where he can be worshipped, while the bulk of the profits, both material and spiritual, he concedes to us.

Sir Francis Lyett, a Methodist layman, contributed one hundred thousand dollars to chapel building in the English metropolis, and did more in a decade for London Methodism than Wesley, Watson and Bunting in a century.

Daniel Boone will be known to the next century as the great American myth. The reason is that he had no certain dwelling-place, and courted nonentity in the pathless woods. The average man is both a social and religious animal in spite of himself.

Pious David prayed, "Build thou the walls of Zion," and at the same time put his hand into the king's purse and took thence an hundred thousand talents of gold and ten hundred thousand talents of silver to endow the project. Let us both pray and pay, and we, or our posterity, will be permitted to build.

The Baptists will thrive on immersion, the Presbyterians on election, the Episcopalians on apostolical succession, the Roman Catholics on the confessional; but Methodism represents an unearthly and inconceivable substance that will evaporate quickly without a sheltering angle of states or shingles. Walls of fire and cloud canopies were for the wilderness chieftain. The temple was of stone, and flanked with bulwarks which the ages have not been able to consume.

A SONG OF THANKSGIVING.

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD.

Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving! Of yore,
In the youth of the nation,
When the harvest had yielded its store,
There was feast and oblation,
Or when dawning had lifted its hand,
From the lips of the living
There rang through the length of the land
A Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

Our home was a wilderness then,
With the wilds to enfold it;
To day, with its millions of men,
We rejoice to behold it.
From the sea to the surge of the sea,
We have all for a treasure;
We are blest in the promise to be
In a manifold measure.

War flaunts not a red pennon now,
For the olive is reared;
Like birds that are twin, on one bough
Sit the dove and the eagle.
The clash of the conflict that eld
We in sorrow remember.
But the fire of the great feud has left
In the ash scarce an ember.

For the fruit of the time of our toil:
For what'er we have fought for;
Whether born of the brain or the soul,
Be the deed we have sought for:
For the gifts we have had from his hand
Who is Lord of all living,
Let there ring through the length of the land
A Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

The Standard Hymn-Book.

What lover of his church and people who does not regret to see a decadence in the use of the standard hymns and hymn book of our church? Those grand old hymns that have been the watchword and battle-cry of the church, ringing with a martial spirit and holy fervor, and heralding the triumphant advance of the church as she moved on, "conquering and to conquer," are being gradually replaced by songs deficient in sentiment and doctrinal soundness. These old hymns were ever on the lips of the great leaders of the church. Methodist preachers knew how to sing, and they did sing. It is proper that a leader should know the watchword, and how to give it. These old hymns are sound in doctrine and sentiment. They come to us with the highest guarantee in this respect—the names of the Bishops of the church. Not only this, but the further guarantee afforded by the names of their distinguished authors—the Wesleyes, et alii.

Now, what about these new songs in this respect? From whence do they come, and who are their authors? Has any committee appointed by the church ever placed on them the stamp of authority, thus protecting the church against unsound doctrine and sentiment? Do they claim to proceed from the gifted muse of a Wesley or a Toplady? No, these great men never went to a bloody battlefield to gather inspiration, and never wrote such bitter, partisan and offensive songs as, "Hold the fort." They never eulogized sentiments having such an origin.

We must not underestimate the power of song. What a power! A nation has been known to rise, overthrow a tyrant, and repel Bastille invasion, by a simple country girl singing an old patriotic ballad in a large gathering of the people. A great man has said, "You suffer me to write the songs of a people, and you can write their theology." How many thousands, dead and living, will bless the author of "Rock of Ages!" And then the associations connected with these old songs—of father and mother, brother and sister, relation and friend, who sang with us here these songs, and, doubtless, now are singing the songs of the redeemed. Such associations mellow the heart and moisten the eye, even of the most obdurate, and pave the way for the triumph of truth in the heart.

I believe that it is as injurious for a minister to suffer his congregation to sing songs unsound in doctrine and sentiment as for him to preach a sermon deficient in these respects. Because—should the song be one of those flashy, take new productions—it will be sung and resung over and over again long after the sermon has been forgotten. And such is the importance of this subject, it seems that an ordinance of the church making the use of the standard hymn book compulsory, and exclusive of all others on its ministers, would not be amiss. This seems so proper, because the church certainly has the right to control so important a subject, and power in this case implies obligation, and as the church has put forth a "Standard Hymn Book," it should require it to be used. As the matter now stands, the hymn book is merely a recommendation of certain hymns to the church. There are many points of doctrine to which a great deal of attention is paid that are not near so important as the songs that are sung by the church, and, perhaps, the great body of the laity know little of these points of doctrine, whereas the songs are sung almost daily, and the singing of these songs does more to impress the sentiments they contain on the people than a sermon on a point of doctrine; and the truth is, you can impress a doctrine on the minds of the people more readily by putting it in the form of a song than you can by preaching sermons on it.

These are times when many strange doctrines are being born into the world, and now, of all other times, it is important that our people should hold to that theology which has brought salvation to so many. And then again, the two sections of our country are widely apart in thought and sentiment, and as most of these new songs come from the other section, we, in order that our children may be brought up in the faith of their fathers, should see that they are taught that faith. Much could be said on this important subject if I had the ability and time to do so. A LAYMAN.

Letters from O. B. Olsh.

GENERAL MATTERS.

My Dear Cousin Jack: As we are soon to see each other, I will give you in this letter a few general hints; and remember it is said, "A hint to the wise is enough."

1. As you are going to be a minister, the first thing I have to say in a general way is, don't be uneasy as to where you will be sent, and how much pay you are likely to get. These, I know, are vital subjects, but they do not ever go by rule, haven't you noticed it? To explain: Of course, you never know where you are going to be sent. It's like a presidential election. You never know till it's over. Well, that settles that part of the question. You never can determine either how much pay a circuit is going to roll up—or how little it will (shall I say) roll down! The whole thing depends upon you! Some preachers go to circuits (and stations, too) and, by their laziness or exorbitancy, disgust the people, and they just sink! Don't ever be unreasonable, Jack, in anything. Don't say cross and sour things to the people. I once heard of a philosopher who said he could catch more flies with sugar than with vinegar. Whether he actually tried it or not I can not tell, but I think he was very philosophic in his thoughts, if not in his ways.

Our Savior says that we must be wise as serpents, but harmless as doves. Now, when you go to a circuit don't go for the pay, but go to give them good, honest service, and they will be sure to appreciate you. I have been among all kinds of people in my day and time, and have found this to be a good rule: Go in the name of the Lord Jesus, do your duty, and God will do the rest. There is entirely too much talk these days anyhow about "salaries," and such like, on the part of preachers. Why, the people are catching the same spirit, and are getting very particular about who their preacher is. The way some of the "ruling" stewards do talk to the presiding elders when they get home from Conference is a sin! Poor fellows! (the P. E.'s) they catch it "fore" and "aft" from the preachers and stewards.

2. The next thing I want to impress upon your mind is about your preaching. Always preach Jesus Christ, and him crucified, as the Redeemer of the world. Do not be flattered into a compromise with the world and the devil. You are between God and man in many respects. You are to cry aloud and proclaim the sweetness of the gospel, and likewise its terrors. None are exempt from keeping all the laws of God. You are to be patient, yet firm. Above all things, you are yourself to be a man of God. Remember this and act accordingly.

You may ask how you are to find texts and subjects to preach upon. If, as it is said, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," so ever watchfulness is the price of variety and constant supplies of ministerial thunder. You must look for texts everywhere, keeping your eyes, ears and soul open for impressions to turn into sermons with proper study and prayer. But, most of all, search the Word of God. Study it for personal profit and for passages that can be given to the people for instruction. I have a good many books, first and last, but I study my Bible more than all the rest put together. Just take up your Bible and read, marking such passages as impress you, and soon you will find that you have a host of texts.

Now, lastly: Feed the people on the Word of God and the doctrines thereof. Do not waste much time in the theories of big men, such as Huxley and others. You don't need to refute Huxley—half the people in your congregations never heard of him! My private opinion about such preachers who love to descant upon "principles of science," is they do it to show their learning! Mr. Wesley never did that. He preached the gospel, and millions have felt the touch of his sermons? No Jack, don't you try to be so "scientific;" you feed the people on the true bread. No Greek and Latin in you; no gingerbread, but just meat and bread, so to speak. Don't forget to pray. Sam Jones says most people go to church from the looking-glass instead of from their prayers in their closets.

Now, I've given you some general hints. In my next I'll write to some of those church members of yours.

Your loving cousin, O. B. OLSH.

One Word to O. B. Olsh.

In the treble P. motto (preach, pray, pay), given in your last letter, is a fatal mistake, which is too often made by too many. They put preaching before praying, and much of it, is not worth a cent. Praying ought to be first and all along. It is that, and that alone, that brings down the power from on high which enables the preacher to preach successfully and to pay cash. Every preacher always receives all he ought to have. That must be so, if he be called of God to preach and does his duty. It was to him he be don't preach, will not be to the people if they don't support him properly? If the Lord puts it into the hearts of some men to preach, will he not put it into the hearts of the others to support him? We read, "Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." And if the Lord employs shepherds to feed his sheep, will he not see that they get their living out of the flock?

If I were a preacher, and found my support meager and short, I would at once snaffle one of two things was the matter—either, that the Lord had not called me to preach, or that I was not doing my duty. I could not believe that the Lord would employ me to work for him, and then not support me. And instead of becoming sour and quarrelling with my people about not paying my salary, I would "take everything to the Lord in prayer," and I would do my whole duty, and "pray without ceasing," and in everything give thanks; feeling assured that "no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

Pray first and last, and all the time, and then (but not till then) your preaching will be successful in bringing souls to Christ; and when they get there they will support you cheerfully and comfortably.

D. W. FOSTER.

Pleasant, La.

Letter to O. B. Olsh.

My Dear Cousin: Your letter reached me only a few days since, and I hasten to reply that you may know how much I appreciate your fatherly (pardon the epithet) advice. It is always a great boon to gain the counsel of those who paid experience for what they know. However, it has been insinuated that the man who gets experience without paying for it is the wisest man.

Well, just at this time your theory of economy is very much appreciated, since I have been (contrary to my feelings) learning something of what domestic economy is, and reading Mr. Wesley's exhortation to gain all you can, save all you can, and give all you can. I am just beginning to learn clerical economies. I am sure your rule is a very good one.

But, Cousin O. B. Olsh, you know when you have reached the mountain top you can't see many of the rocks and rugged places that hindered you when you were at the base. It has been quite a while since you were on Post Oak circuit, and since you spent several years on the Brandywine district, and have been for some time at Honey Island station, I fear the mist that envelops me has passed from your view.

You say: "Owe no man anything." But just there, cousin, the mist envelops me again. I came to Post Oak circuit with money enough to pay my freight bill—less one dollar and a half. In a few days our first quarterly meeting was held, and, oh! how anxious I was for the time to come! Ques 8. was called just after I had reported an encouraging outlook. The presiding elder called for a report from Chestnut Ridge Church, when the steward arose and reported, "Nothing." A report from Pindartown Church was next called for, and the representative reported, "Nothing." "I call next for the report from Possum Hollow Church," said the presiding elder. The two stewards from that church winked at each other until I arose and reported $4.50 paid in provisions. There was no report from the seven other churches. And when we came to the latter part of Ques 8, "And how has it been applied?" also the $4.50 had been paid in provisions. It was decided by the Quarterly Conference that the presiding elder should board with me until he had gotten his part.

Now, cousin, please tell me how you would have "paid as you went" under such circumstances. Up to the present time I have been paid about $150, which leaves a balance of $450 of my salary still due. And since I preach and pray I suppose it will all be in by Dec. 14, or before that time. I know of only one way I could "pay as I go" under these conditions. And that is the way "Uncle Remus" "Br'er Rabbit" climbed up a tree on the outside when the dog was about to get him—"He was obliged to."

I am fully determined next year, when I next get to Silver City station, to adopt your "trade-mark" of "P. P. P." as mine; since I expect my salary to be paid quarterly, and it may be monthly. You know that over here, where the land is poor, peas, peanuts and pumpkins don't ripen but once a year. This reminds me that some of my parishioners have adopted the three P. trade-mark with a different meaning, viz.: "Pay in peas, peanuts, and pumpkins."

I fear if I had made your "trade-mark" mine at the beginning of this year, by this time the mare would have become an object-lesson, and would be interpreted as follows: "A poor, perished parson." But you know, dear cousin, when I entered the ministry, I did it with a determination to fight the world, the flesh and the devil on an empty stomach, and to look for my reward beyond Jordan.

Since writing the above paragraph, I have been to dinner. The potatoes, and buttermilk were so fine it makes me want to strike out the paragraph; but for fear, in my sober moments, I will regret having done it, I will let it stay. I think I shall go "possum" hunting soon.

Well, about getting married. I am glad you spoke of that. It is a question I have been thinking on for some time. To be honest about it, I am engaged, and have been for the past two years. I am sure my girl will make just the wife I need. I wish you could see her. Twice we have had the time set to get married, but because of my small salary I have postponed the marriage. We have been talking about getting married just after Conference. She accuses me of wanting to make a big show, and says if I love her as she loves me, we will get married if we have to live on bread and water: I tried to assure her that my love was as strong as hers, and told her if she would furnish the bread I would furnish the water, and we would marry. I don't know about your advice. I think if the girl can stand it, I can. I am in favor of the wife starting with the husband, so she can appreciate his condition.

For fear I weary you, I will close this letter. Anxiously awaiting your next letter, I am, Your cousin, JACK.

Camp Meeting Associations.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your paper, of Sept. 29, an article from "Dionysius" about camp meeting associations, from which he thinks great danger may come. If there are such places, associations or bodies of Methodist people owning camp grounds and running camp meetings on such grounds as the Methodist Church has no need to them, there is some danger of its going into a Presbyterian or Baptist camp meeting. But what would the Methodist Church lose? If "Dionysius" means camp grounds owned by the Methodist Church, and run by a body of Methodist people, then he includes myself and others, and I want some information from him. First, Who are the Methodist Church? Presiding elders and preachers only, or members only? It must be one, or there could be no disloyalty. If presiding elders and preachers, what assurance have the people that they will be loyal to-morrow? Then, who runs camp meetings, and who has the best right to know the people where they are run? Our elders and preachers can only stay with us four years, and I have been living here fifty-two years. If I have been converted (and I am sure I have), who has the best right to know what kind of preachers this people need? We always have a meeting on our camp ground several months before meeting, and decide on some preachers, and select some one or two to write to them, and if we fall in getting them, the ones selected to write them select and write to others until help is promised. If that is disloyalty, we are ready to turn over our camp ground to the church. What profit would it be to us to supply the pulpit with the wrong man? Does it look reasonable that we, who feed and sleep one or two hundred people apiece for a week, would want anything in the pulpit but the very best that could be produced? "Dionysius" spoke of preachers from a distance. I suppose he meant evangelists. That is our only hope, should we ever have another camp meeting. We have not had a sermon from a presiding elder in three years, and we usually invite and offer to pay the expenses of eight or ten preachers, but never get them. We always have to preach our local men that have lived with us for forty and fifty years, and have closed our meeting twice without our preacher in charge. If evangelists won't come, what will we do?

At our last meeting Bro. Howell was with us, and preached five sermons that won all hearts, and as people were a going home every day, his fame went out, and the last two days men came in from twenty miles to hear him; but he was gone, and we had to preach locals. If evangelists are not what they ought to be, why do we hear such words from our itinerant men as a "devil" and "hell"? I never heard such things when I was a boy.

Yours in Christ, G. W. WALKER.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Nov. 27, 1892.

By REV. WM. H. LA PRADÉ, D. D.

The Apostles Turning to the Gentiles.

Acts xiii, 44-xiv, 7.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles." (Acts xiii, 47.)

How Paul and Barnabas employed themselves during the week following that first missionary sermon at Antioch in Pisidia, we do not know; but, beyond question, they were mindful of their great mission, and did all that could be done in a quiet way to deepen the interest aroused at the synagogue on the preceding Sabbath, and to secure a large audience on the Sabbath following. The result was—as might have been expected—the synagogue was crowded.

Vers. 44, 45. Gentiles, as well as Jews, flocked to the synagogue, much to the disgust of the latter. Full of race pride and of religious bigotry, they resented the crowding of their synagogue by these uncircumcised Gentiles, and were angry at Paul and Barnabas as the cause of it. They antagonized the apostles at once, contradicting the teachings of Paul and blaspheming the name of Jesus.

Intense ecclesiasticism and great love of truth do not always combine. These Jews were, or thought that they were, very devoted to the church, but they were, nevertheless, very narrow and very wicked.

Vers. 46, 47. The apostles were true to Christ's plan. "Beginning at Jerusalem," he had said. Paul, writing to the Romans, said that the gospel was "to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." To offer Christ first to the Jews was incumbent upon them; it was in this line of prophecy and of promise. Quoting from Isaiah xlix, 6, Paul interpreted that prophecy as commanding that the Messiah should be offered to the Gentiles.

Vers. 48. God's word is glorified in its acceptance, not in empty praise of its wisdom, or beauty, or truth. According to the teachings of that word true repentance and turning to God disposed, or (as the text has it) "ordained," people "to eternal life." All who thus turned toward God rejoiced in the truth and believed in the Lord Jesus Christ. People who do not repent will perish; so says our Savior. This being "ordained to eternal life" means simply being so desirous of eternal life as to repent and seek God. "Disposed" is as literal a translation as "ordained," and better expresses the fact.

Vers. 49-51. The apostles, after their rejection by the Jews, continued at Antioch, teaching all who gave audience to them. The work spread beyond the city. Among the proselytes to the Jewish faith were some Gentile women of position and of earnest, devout spirit, who, naturally, were influenced largely by the leaders among the Jews. Their influence was turned against Paul and Barnabas, as was, also, that of "the chief men of the city." Good people sometimes, through ignorance, lend themselves to bad measures. As the result of this strong influence against them, the apostles were expelled.

As Jesus had himself directed (See Matt. x, 14) they "shook off the dust" against them. Then they went to Iconium, "forty-five miles to the southeast, at the foot of Mount Taurus." Their two great teachers and leaders were gone, but the disciples at Antioch "had salt in themselves." They were "filled with the Holy Ghost," and rejoiced.

Chap. xiv, Ver. 1. Still following the plan pursued at other places, the apostles went first to the synagogue. Their message was, at first, well received. Many believed, both Jews and Greeks.

Vers. 2. The method adopted by the Jews who did not believe was shrewd. They stirred up the minds of the masses of the Greeks against those of their own people who had joined themselves to Paul and Barnabas. Their object was to create disturbance for which the apostles would be held responsible.

Vers. 3. The opposition was great, but so also was the success. Besides, the believers needed to be established. So the apostles remained a "long time," speaking boldly, the Lord giving endorsement by doing "signs and wonders" through them.

Vers. 4-6. The division among the Greeks grew until the city was separated into two great factions. Finally the Jews, with their adherents from amongst the Gentiles—men of influence—assaulted the apostles, intending to stone them. Being informed of their purpose, Paul and Barnabas escaped in time, and went to Lystra, first, afterward to Derbe. These were small towns, whose exact location we do not know. Lystra was probably about twenty or twenty-five miles south of Iconium; Derbe was, it is believed, farther east by fifty miles, or more.

Vers. 7. The apostles were not foolhardy. When the Word had been preached, the seed sown, the early disciples established in the truth, and then death threatened them, they went elsewhere. But they kept on preaching. That was their vocation. They could not force people to hear, to believe; but they could preach. When we read of the persecution these men endured "because of the gospel," there is something sublime in these simple words, "and there they preached the gospel."

The Problem of Methodism.

How are we to keep certain works in our various Conferences from always being served by an inefficient ministry?

Methodist preachers, equal to every emergency, can only be developed. They are not born; nor can Vanderbilt, with all its excellent appliances, manufacture them. We will always have a class of recruits. If a work suffers at the hands of these, the church, and especially the Conference, must bear the blame. If a work suffers at the hands of any others, the presiding elders are alone responsible. If, after a two years' trial, the man has not developed his fitness for the place, let his presiding elder deal kindly, but firmly, with him, and retire him to the local ranks. If, after giving promise of a useful ministry, he becomes lazy, secular, inefficient, let the tender words of love awaken him, if possible; but, if not, let him be retired. The question is narrowed down to this: How shall the works be protected which are served by these recruits? Return to the junior preacher appointment, where two preachers—a younger and an older—are sent to the same work to preach; not each one in his own part, but each one in every part of the work.

This will effectually solve the difficulty. I do not believe that our older preachers would be overbearing, nor yet that our younger ones would be heady and disobedient. The God of our fathers is with us. Methodist preachers, young and old, as I know them, are loyal, loving soldiers of the cross. Our older and stronger preachers would renew their youth as they went from place to place over our old, broken-down circuits, while the young men would bring a freshness and a glow of vital, youthful piety to many a mummified station.

A larger latitude in guiding and directing the work needs to be given to the presiding elders, or else existing law must be interpreted to give to the presiding elders the same power over the preachers in charge in their districts that it gives to the preachers in charge over the local preachers in their various charges.

A return to the junior preacher appointment, and larger power in the hands of the presiding elders, will, it seems to the writer, effectually solve the difficulty.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

Indian Mission.

MR. EDITOR: I have good news to report from the mission. Simpson Tubby has been licensed to preach, and also recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial into the travelling connection, and he is a good case, too. I also want to report that I received a letter from a Choctaw Indian that does not belong to any church, stating that he had been reading in the Advocate the appeals for help to educate Simpson Tubby, and wanted to help some to keep him in school. Is that not encouraging? A poor heathen Indian willing to help educate a preacher to preach to himself and others. May God bless and save that Indian!—and let all the friends of the mission say, Amen! I also wish to report $5 received from Miss Meddle L. Robinson, of Steen's Creek, Rankin county, Miss. Miss Meddle made her money teaching school, and gave it freely, with a promise of more to follow. May Miss Meddle never lack for schools to teach, and may God bless her more and more till the perfect day! Who will follow her example?

I wish to state now, in conclusion, that we are yet behind in Bro. Cammack's salary about $110, which ought to be paid, by all means, by the meeting of our Annual Conference, Dec. 14, for we do not want to have to call on the Board for a dollar, and a great many promised two or three years ago amounts on the installment plan that have not paid first payment.

Now, in order for me to be sure to get it in time, send it at once, or so it will reach me at Barlow by Dec. 10; or, if you prefer it, hand it to your preacher, and instruct him to hand it to me the first or second day of Conference.

Brethren and sisters, do not neglect this matter, if you have subscribed; and if you have not, send me something, anyway. I think in the course of two or three years you will rejoice that you took part in this important work.

Yours for the salvation of the Indians, A. D. MILLER.

Barlow, Miss.

Constitution and By-Laws of the Ministers' Relief Association of North Mississippi Conference.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I. This body shall be known as the "Ministers' Relief Association of the North Mississippi Conference," with power to make and to change its own Constitution and laws.

ART. II. The object of this Association shall be to furnish immediate relief to the families of deceased ministers of this Conference, who are also members of this body.

ART. III. This Association shall be composed of all persons who obligate themselves to pay five dollars on the death of a minister of this Conference, who is also a member of this body.

ART. IV. None shall be claimants on this Association but families of deceased ministers, who at the time of their death were members of this Conference and also of this Association.

ART. V. The officers of this Association shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary and Assistant Secretary. The Secretary shall also be the Treasurer of the Association.

ART. VI. Any number of members, present at the annual meeting, shall constitute a quorum for business.

Amendments.

ART. VII. The transfer of a member to another Conference shall not vitiate his membership.

BY LAWS.

1. The Association shall meet annually at the time and place of the Annual Conference, and shall assemble at the call of the President.

2. On the death of a member, whose family is a claimant on this Association, the President shall officially inform the Secretary, who shall promptly notify the members thereof, and they shall remit their dues to the Treasurer within sixty days from the date of the Secretary's notice.

3. The failure of any member to pay his dues within sixty days from the date of the Secretary's notice, shall forfeit membership in this Association.

4. Any person who has forfeited membership in this Association may be reinstated by paying the sum of five dollars, due at the time he lost his membership.

5. Any person becoming a member of this Association shall agree to the following form of obligations:

I, A. B., pledge myself to pay the sum of five dollars upon the death of a minister of the North Mississippi Conference, who is also a member of this Association, for the benefit of his family.

6. At each annual meeting the ministerial members shall pay into the treasury the sum of twenty-five cents each, as a contingent fund to defray the expense of the Association during the year.

7. Each member shall be authorized to act as agent in obtaining members for the Association, and shall promptly forward the names of each to the Secretary for enrollment.

8. The officers of the Association shall be elected annually.

9. The President shall perform all the duties usually devolved upon that officer. He shall decide points of law; he shall call the Association together at each session of the Annual Conference; up on the death of a member he shall officially inform the Secretary of the same, and direct the collection and payment of the dues; he shall also present at each annual meeting a full report of the work of the Association during the year.

10. In the event of the death or absence of the President, the Vice President shall discharge all the duties of his office.

11. The Secretary shall keep an accurate record of all the transactions of the Association, and upon receiving the official notice of the death of a member he shall immediately notify the members of their dues.

12. The Assistant Secretary shall assist the Secretary as he may direct, and in the event of the death or absence of the Secretary he shall perform all the duties of his office.

13. The Treasurer shall receive from each member his dues, and shall give a receipt for the same, which shall be the member's voucher to the Association. He shall also within sixty days after receiving official notice of the death of a member who is a claimant on this Association, pay over all the dues collected to the family of the deceased, whose receipt shall be his voucher to the Association. He shall also submit to each annual meeting an itemized report of his official work during the year.

Programme for Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

JANUARY 2-8, 1893.

MISSION ROOM, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.

MR. EDITOR: A copy of the programme which the Board of Missions instructed the Secretaries to prepare for the Week of Prayer and Self-denial is sent herewith.

The programme provides for special services each day, suggesting topics for discussion. Responsive exercises, containing a large amount of information, have been arranged in pamphlet-form, and will be furnished free upon application.

Flexibility of outline and adaptation to local conditions being thought most desirable, no part of the programme is insisted upon, save that which provides for stated meetings for special prayer for missions during the whole week, to be accompanied each day by special offerings for the payment of the debt.

Let us pay the debt in one united effort, and, making the Week of Prayer the culminating feature of the movement, pray for a great missionary revival throughout our borders.

I. G. JOHN, Cor. Sec.,
H. C. MORRISON, Sec.,
W. R. LAMBETH, Sec.,
Board of Miss., M. E. Church, South.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

BOOKS.

LITTLE COMRADE MINE. By Martha Burr Banks. D. D. Merrill Company, New York. Price $1.

A beautiful story told in a clear style. It you begin it, you will go through to the end and be pleased.

WORDSWORTH'S GRAVE. AND OTHER POEMS. By William Watson. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. G. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $1.

In this little book are some real poetical gems in the form of lyrics, sonnets and epigrams.

BIBLE STUDIES. By Geo. F. Pentecost, D. D. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York. Price, $1.

This is an exposition of the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1893. These "Studies" have proved themselves quite popular, and they are quite long drawn out—too much for us. We like to find out some things, rather than have everything told us.

—DRUMMOND'S ADDRESS. Seven of these are carefully dressed up by E. H. Woodward & Co., Baltimore. There are some of the Professor's best sayings in these addresses, but we have come to the conclusion that he is not always clear and satisfactory in all he says. Price, seventy-five cents.

SCENES FROM NATURE. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. Geo. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $1.50.

Here are six beautiful photographs—On the Fence, Silver Stream, Going to Market, The Crossing-Place, Returning from the Fete, and Pastoral Farms. These are charming pictures, and well worth the price.

GLORIA PATRI; OR, OUR TALKS ABOUT THE TRINITY. By James Morris Whitton, Ph. D. Thomas Whitaker, New York. Price, $1.

The author has given in dialogue form a very interesting discussion of an abstract subject of theology. There is freshness of thought and vigor of style, but some very important conclusions are rather jumped at than reached by logical steps. A good deal of learning is manifested, and some unproven scientific dogmas are taken for granted. To us the book is not altogether satisfactory.

FROM THE PULPIT TO THE POOR-HOUSE. By Jay Benson Hamilton, D. D. Hunt & Eaton, New York. Price, $1.

This is an expansion of a sermon which when delivered before the New York Preachers' Meeting created a perfect storm. Dr. Hamilton has worked what he calls "romances of the Methodist Ministry" into a book exceedingly interesting and instructive, and which is calculated to bring good to our superannuateds and widows and children in the form of increased help in their old age and widowhood and orphanage. We trust it will.

BABYLAND FOR 1893. Cloth, $1.00; boards, 75 cents. With colored frontispiece. Boston: D. Lothrop Company.

The bound volume of Babyland for 1893 is especially beautiful and delightful in its picturesque setting of dainty story and pretty verse, with occasional merry jingles. There are three story sets of twelve tales each: "The Tip-toe Twins," "The Sweetheart Stories," and "Nurse Karen's Norway Tales," not to mention the shorter stories and verses, which Babyland will soon learn "by heart" after hearing Mama read them over at bed-time, and looking at their pictures all by himself.

Mothers find Babyland an unfailing assistant in entertaining the little ones, when toys and games prove of no avail.

THROUGH AFRICA AND TROPICS. Around the World by a New Path for a New Purpose. By Harry W. French. Boston: D. Lothrop Company. 400, 318 pp., very fully illustrated. Cloth, $1.50; boards, $1.00.

Two sturdy New England boys, seventeen years of age when the story opens, are the joint heroes of this thoroughly wide awake book. They are sailors of the good old stock that in times past has done us such noble service when an enemy was in our waters, and that later battled with the dangers and hardships of the ocean on long and perilous fishing voyages.

They traverse forty one thousand two hundred and sixty miles, through Africa and Tropics, in the course of their year's journeyings, and have a royally good time in spite of some perilous adventures.

But the story has a value beyond its mere attractiveness. In the accurate and interesting information it gives of the scenery, social customs and general mode of life of different nations the world over. The book will be eagerly welcomed by all who are looking for a genuinely absorbing, yet wholesome story for young people.

Easy to Take

And prompt to cure, Ayer's Pills act on the intestines, not by stimulating, but by strengthening them. They promote the natural peristaltic motion of the bowels, without which there can be no regular, healthy operations. For the cure of constipation, biliousness, jaundice, vertigo, sick headache, indigestion, sour stomach, and drowsiness.

Ayer's Pills

are unsurpassed. They are equally beneficial in rheumatism, neuralgia, colds, chills, and fevers. Being purely vegetable, delicately sugar-coated, and quickly dissolved, they are admirably adapted for household use, as well as for travelers by land or sea. Ayer's Pills are in greater demand, the world over, than any other pill, and are recommended by the most eminent physicians.

Important Discoveries.

Four hundred years after Christopher Columbus discovered America, we discovered that the young people of the "Sunny South" were searching for some medium published in their own fair Southland that would not only tell them all about Columbus' great discovery, but also about all other discoveries of special interest to them. We accordingly proceeded to publish our discovery in the form of a handsome monthly magazine, entitled "SOUTHERN SUNSHINE," and containing from 60 to 100 pages of beautifully illustrated reading matter, consisting of short stories, also continued stories, new games, puzzles, and sports, and, in fact, everything for the amusement, instruction and interest of young people. During the past year we have further discovered that fully 25,000 of these young people have been so fully interested in "SUNSHINE" as to send us each $1.00 for their yearly subscription to it. Now we want to discover 25,000 more of the same sort, and as an inducement for you to assist us in our exploration, we propose offering you the following splendid premium:

If you will send us $1.00 we will not only send you "SUNSHINE" for one year, but we will also send you Washington Irving's history of "The Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus," which is a handsomely bound book of 750 pages, containing a complete account of the famous discoverer's life, and all of his voyages. Also illustrations of his fleet which first came to America, viz: the "Santa Maria," "Pinta" and "Niña." This book alone is worth more than the total amount of the subscription, and besides that you will have all the nice things we shall discover and publish in "SUNSHINE" for one year, send to us a sample copy of "SUNSHINE," or, better still, send $1.00 and get the Magazine and Premium.

Just as certain as we shrink from duty we will shrink in character.

The M. E. Church has raised for missions the past year $1,257,372. This is $24,000 more than was appropriated and nearly $30,000 more than was raised last year. Their deficiency has been transformed into a surplus. Well done!

Dear brother, don't assume the role of a martyr before the Conference session! You might possibly make a mistake, and then you would appear ridiculous in your own eyes as well as in the eyes of those before whom you acted in that role. Just wait till the Bishop reads the appointments; then you will have more time and can make a better success.

All the way from Japan there comes to us by mail a beautiful "Memorial Volume of Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D." It contains the addresses delivered at Dr. Lambuth's funeral by Rev. J. C. C. Newton, Rev. K. Usaki and Rev. W. E. Towson; also memorial addresses by Prof. S. H. Wainwright and Rev. K. Usaki delivered at the Kwansei Gakuin, and a memorial sermon preached at Hiroshima by Rev. Y. Tanaka. Besides it is illustrated with some fine pictures, amongst which are our church at Tadotsu, Japan; Chapel and Book Room, China, and Dr. Lambuth's grave at Kobe, Japan. Altogether it is the finest memorial volume we have seen for some time. It is printed by the Kobe Publishing Company, Limited.

One of the grossest outrages that has ever been perpetrated, one of the deepest insults that has ever been given to a people, is the action of the City Council of New Orleans in regard to the saloons.

The ordinance regulating the establishment of saloons directed that it was unlawful for anyone to set up or establish any drinking house, coffee house, bar room or place where liquors were sold at retail by the glass without having previously applied, by a written petition, to the Council, whose consent it was necessary to obtain before securing the needed permit to go into business. As a further safeguard to the residents and property holders in the square in which the saloon was to be established, the ordinance required that the petition of the saloon keeper should be accompanied by a written consent of the majority of the residents or property holders within one square of the place where it was intended to set up the saloon.

At one sweep this ordinance has been repealed, so that now any man can set up and run a saloon anywhere he pleases. Neither private residence, nor school, nor church can do a thing to prevent a saloon being established next door? Is not this a fine state of affairs? Are the people of this city so engrossed in their business as to pay no attention to such a serious matter as this? Will the Christian pulpits be silent under such a threat as is contained in this action of the City Council?

Exaggerations in the Pulpit.

Travelers who have visited the East and have had intercourse with its people agree together in saying that the Orientals, as a class, are the most pronounced people in the world for exaggeration of statement in speaking or writing. It is declared that they never are known to speak of a matter as it really is. They most commonly talk and write in figures of speech, and their favorite figure is hyperbole. The eastern people seem to enjoy their habit of magnifying or minifying everything they talk about, and practice it as if they had a monopoly of it. In that, however, they are much mistaken. Only a few days ago, when in conversation with a gentleman in the country, speaking of a certain class of people, he said: "I have learned not to believe anything they say." The propensity to exaggerate seems in some way to be imbedded in human nature and very early begins to crop out. The boy soon begins to talk of hundreds for tens, and millions for hundreds, and the girl to use superlatives which make her statement exceed anything anybody else can say. This habit, if not checked, will end in a condition of chronic exaggeration.

It seems, too, that this tendency to hyperbole creeps into almost every business, if it is not watched and warned off. The merchant, mechanic, lawyer, doctor, farmer, everybody has to watch this tendency to pay too little respect to truth. It would seem that the pulpit would be exempt, but it often slips in there, and preachers use hyperbole so rashly as to horrify their auditors. It is harder to excuse it in the pulpit than anywhere else, for the reason that the preacher is supposed to be a man "who has been made a new creature," and all the old tendencies of his nature have been extracted by the work of the Holy Ghost. To give a sample of hyperbole in the pulpit: A lady of our acquaintance was struck dumb with indignation when a certain preacher, who had been in her town only four days, said from the pulpit: "Since I have been here I have seen five hundred women in the street cars drunk with opium." She declared, without using any euphemism, that it was a lie, and she would hear that man preach no more, and she did not. His "Oriental style" did not correspond with her severe attachment to the simple truth. In fact, she did not believe the preacher had seen five hundred women in the street cars, and, of course, could not believe the opium part of the story. This same preacher after the "Oriental style," preaching in another town, very gravely asserted from the pulpit that he "could take a bottle of whisky and buy every Methodist in town." Now, of course, nobody of sense believes such exaggerations as these, and, therefore, people sometimes think they do no harm and they go unrebuked. It seems to us that of all the places in the world the pulpit should be the place where the simple truth should be told. A man can not afford to exaggerate when he is dealing with his fellow-men in the most important matter of life and eternity. He owes it to his own integrity of character and to the awfulness of his message that his hearers shall think that he himself believes what he says. If the hearer has a suspicion that the preacher does not believe what he says, the preacher's vocation is at an end, and the sooner he quits the better. Of all the things under the sun that intelligent men and women hold in utter abomination, insincerity in the pulpit bears the palm.

Now, the cases we have mentioned we really believe are extreme cases, but they show very clearly whereunto this vicious habit will grow. There is no safety in dallying with a tendency of this kind. If indulged at all, it will grow, and the preacher who indulges in it will surely lose the respect of all truth-loving people, and no preacher can afford to do that. So we say to all preachers—young and old—be careful how you cultivate the use of that figure of speech called by the rhetoricians, "hyperbole!"

Spurgeon and His Work in London.

Arthur T. Pierson, editor of the Missionary Review of the World, has a most interesting and suggestive article in the November number of that journal on "The Metropolitan Tabernacle (London) As a Missionary Center." For eight months after Mr. Spurgeon's death, Mr. Pierson was pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and this intimate personal contact gave him a rare opportunity for the study of the interior workings of this colossal organization. It is not our purpose to go into any detailed account of the workings of the Tabernacle. Nothing short of the publication of the article in full would do justice either to the writer or his theme.

The church membership now embraces nearly six thousand, which is the more remarkable since for years the drift of the population has been away from the Tabernacle towards the more delightful and healthful residential suburbs. There are about forty elders and deacons, who, with the pastor, constitute the governing and directing force of the organization, the elders having charge of the spiritual interests, and the deacons of the temporal.

The Sunday schools of the Tabernacle enrolled about twelve hundred pupils, all under one superintendent.

The college with its seventy, or more, students, which has for its object the training up of a generation of preachers and pastors, is supported, in the main, by voluntary collections from the congregations, for which sixty boxes are arranged in various parts of the vast auditorium, and the collections average from forty to sixty pounds sterling each Sabbath. This in our money is between $200 and $300 each Sabbath. This college is training and has sent out nearly one thousand young men engaged in either home or foreign mission work, and are scattered throughout the world. The Stockwell Orphanage has now over four hundred inmates, and has sent out more than one thousand children. From the Tract Loan Society there go forth every week visitors to three hundred homes with loan tracts to be collected and redistributed when the week expires.

And thus we might go on enumerating other phases of Christian work, such as The Evangelistic Association, The Colportage Association, Band of Hope, Flower Mission, etc. But these are sufficient to show the character and wide extent of the work engaged in. In this church there may be found a larger percentage of members engaged in Christian work than in, perhaps, any other church in Christendom.

It is said that while in Florence an American visitor asked Mr. Spurgeon the secret of his success. His quiet, humble, reverent, truthful answer was, "I have a people who pray for me." There is scarcely half a day during the whole week when some kind of religious service is not going on in some apartment of the church. Out of over twenty different rooms in the Tabernacle, there is not one that is not sanctified by multiplied forms of service. It is estimated that between seven and eight thousand different persons attend worship each week, one-seventh of whom are strangers. We close with this quotation from Mr. Pierson's article, penning the sentences with the earnest prayer that God will help us, as Christian workers, to "go and do likewise."

"Mr. Spurgeon's great law in preaching was to combine simplicity with evangelicity. He believed thoroughly in the inexhaustible beauty and power of the old gospel, when its native divine attractiveness and effectiveness are unhindered by the vain trimmings and trappings of the world, and he honestly and persistently sought to make every sermon not only a means of edification to saints, but of conversion of sinners. Last anything should divert attention from Christ as the center of the message, and God as the center of worship, he gave no encouragement to an organ or choir, and the vast assemblage has always been led by a precenter. The service opens with prayer and song; the Scripture reading and exposition are followed by another hymn and prayer, and the benediction immediately succeeds the sermon. So great was Mr. Spurgeon's dependence on the power of the simple Word, accompanied by the Holy Spirit, that he was not wont to hold 'after meetings' except for prayer; nor did he use the methods so common with modern evangelists of 'bringing hearers to an immediate decision.' Yet to the honor of God be it noted that the average accession of members for the last thirty-eight years has been three hundred and ninety per year, and in 1874 and 1875 exceeded five hundred."

SO MUCH FOR PREACHING THE WORD.

Our Itinerary.

CHANGES SUGGESTED.

"A Member at Large" suggests some radical changes in our economy, and, from the standpoint of a layman, there may be some pith in his suggestions, especially so in view of the methods in vogue in the denominations around us. I believe the great body of our people are as well satisfied with the pastors sent them by the Bishop as are the members of other churches with the preachers called by them. Except in rare instances, we have, in proportion to the number of our charges and preachers, about as few changes of pastors as any of the churches. We never have a pastorless church, nor a churchless pastor. This can not be said of any one of the more so-called democratic churches. Hundreds of their churches spend months and sometimes years calling for a pastor, and hundreds of their pastors are idle because no man hath called them "effectually." We are happily free from all this; and no feature of our economy is more admired and praised by other denominations than this feature. We have the advantage of all the churches in this very particular—the very thing "A Member at Large" would have changed.

This good layman thinks the charges ought to be allowed to call the preachers they want, and the Bishops ought to send the man called. Well, suppose ten or twenty charges call the same man, what is the poor Bishop going to do? And suppose there are ten or twenty preachers called by no charge, then what are they to do? This would be a "muddle" that would tax the heart and brain of the Bishop ten-fold more than the present plan.

If the charges are to be allowed to choose their pastors, then surely the pastors ought to be allowed to choose their charges. It would be a one-sided affair if this were not so; would bind a burden on the preachers too heavy to be borne. If the charges are allowed to choose their preachers, and the preachers allowed to choose their charges, then we would have no need for Bishops, presiding elders, Annual Conferences, nor for a General Conference, as now constituted.

We would at once cease to be an episcopal and become a congregational church. That which makes us one church, binds us into one bundle—the bond of unity—would be destroyed.

Thousands of our congregations would go pastorless for years at a time. As it is now, the strong churches help to support the weak. All congregational churches raise and need vast sums for State missions. We supply the same work by our itinerant systems without missionary money, or nearly so.

Where the charges and the preachers mutually agree to leave this whole matter to the arbitrament of one man—the Bishop—there is less friction and less trouble than by any other system yet known among men.

"A Member at Large" thinks it a great hardship to be forced to listen to the exhortation of an unwelcome appointee. I wonder if it ever occurred to him that it would be equally hard to be forced to preach to an unsought charge. It requires great grace to listen to some preachers, and just as much grace to preach to some people. This is a two-sided affair all the way through. "Let well enough alone." This is my motto.

GILDEROY.

Thanksgiving.

We have come again to the annual thanksgiving time. The chief magistrate of this great nation has, by proclamation, called all the people to arise and give thanks unto God. For what shall we give thanks? President Harrison answers this question fully:

The gifts of God to our people during the past year have been so abundant and so special that the spirit of devout thanksgiving awaits, not a call, but only the appointment of a day when it may have a common expression. He has stayed the pestilence at our door; he has given us more love for the free civil institutions in the creation of which his directing providence was so conspicuous; he has awakened a deeper reverence for law; he has widened our philanthropy by a call to succor the distress in other lands; he has blessed our schools and is bringing forward a patriotic and God-fearing generation to execute his great and benevolent designs for our country; he has given us great increase in material wealth and in the diffusion of contentment and comfort in the homes of our people; he has given his grace to the sorrowing.

There is nothing more to be said. So let all our readers give thanks this day.

Note from Dr. Lambuth.

MR. EDITOR: Upon reaching Nashville from German Mission and West Texas Conferences, I found inclosures from Dr. T. L. Mellen for missionary debt:

Nov. 8. Per M. H. Moore, collector for Seashore District.....$80 70
Per J. M. Moore, collector for Brandon District.....12 00
Nov. 11. Per M. H. Moore, for Seashore District.....35 00

Of the last, $20 was collected by C. A. Powell at New Prospect Camp Ground.

These amounts sum up $528 70 received to date on the $3 703 distributed to the Mississippi Conference. Mississippi will bring up her quota. Thank you, brethren. Get ready to spring the movement simultaneously throughout your bounds as soon as Conference has adjourned. This debt shall be paid by March 31, 1893. Cordially,

WALTER R. LAMBUTH.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 14.

"Praise ye the Lord: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant, and praise is comely." (Psa. cxlviii, 1.)

NOTES.

James Russell Lowell says of giving: "He gives nothing but worthless gold, who gives from a sense of duty."

"Oh give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever." (Psa. cvi, 1.)

Paste this up in your memory: "No man or woman can be an intelligent member of the church without reading church literature!"

We call everybody's attention to what Archbishop Whately said long time ago: "If our religion is true, we are bound to change it; if it is false, we are bound to propagate it." If we are not missionaries, we are nothing, and should cease our profession.

When reduced to its simplest last analysis, religion is "yellow" between the spirit of man and the Spirit of God." This is the best definition, because it comprehends the whole subject. It is delightful to contemplate and experience such religion.

Here is a sentence whose truth should be pondered long by every young person:

Many a man far into life is working hard and with sadness to make sure that he shall lose no more, having lost already some of the brightest of life's successes, from which he shrinks, and which will never come his way again.

A thoughtful correspondent, in a private letter, says: "I have long thought that there is too much preaching to please the people and gain applause, without deep solicitude for the salvation of souls and importunate prayer for guidance and power from on high to lead them to the Savior." This is the observation of a man who has long been watching the trend of things, and deserves the careful attention of every preacher. Not long ago Bishop Keener gave our preachers meeting some valuable observations on the same point. Let there be "mighty prayer" both before and after preaching.

"I will worship toward thy holy temple, and praise thy name for thy loving kindness and thy truth: for thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name." (Psa. cxxxviii, 2.)

Concerning the "good old times" much lauded now-a-days, Rev. J. R. Sutherland, in the American Journal of Politics, says:

Though comparatively a young man, I can well remember when in the country in which I was born and brought up there was only one pronounced total abstainer. In those so-called "good old times" the man who did not drink and did not supply intoxicating liquors to his friends was considered, to say the least, lacking in hospitality.

Alas! for these degenerate days! Such a common custom as a decanter upon the sideboard, and everybody invited up to "take a little something," is a thing of the "good old times!"

In comparing the "good old times" with these degenerate days, a writer in the Interior says:

Twenty years ago it was often true that a young man who drank beer, or wine, or ever whisky in moderation, might be advanced to places of greater trust and responsibility. It is now scarcely possible. The habit is simply fatal to success. I do not believe there is a single reputable business house in Chicago where an employee who drinks intoxicants of any kind, or anywhere, has anything like an even chance for promotion. The taking of a single glass of beer, and, often does mean, losing the chance of a lifetime. Brainy boys and young men, teetotalers from principle, are plenty enough to fill all the places in the line of promotion.

The comparison don't give much ground for croskers to stand upon.

Notes.

I desire to submit, through the ADVOCATE, for the consideration of the members of the Conference a motion that I expect to submit to the next session of the Mississippi Conference. The proposition is about this: That the Conference adopt a system for the preparation and examination of the Conference course. Take, for example, the first year: January and February—Wesley's Notes. March and April—Book of Discipline. May and June—McTear's Catechism on Church Government. July and August—Watson's Institutes, Part IV. September and October—Wesley's Sermons, first volume. November—Original Sermon on Repentance. Let each class be arranged in the same way. Let the different committees arrange a set of questions and furnish each member of his class with same; say, give him the questions on Wesley's Notes by the first of January; on the Discipline by first of March, etc. Let each member of the class pursue his study, and at the end of each two months send in his written answers. Let the committee examine it, and, if not satisfactory, could give him another trial by bringing it up before Conference. At Conference the committee could meet on that day and pass upon the whole. I will not here discuss the advantages and disadvantages, but will leave that till Conference. J. O. CAMMACK.

Summit, Miss., Nov. 8, 1892.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Be sure to pay the preacher before he starts to Conference.

Dr. R. H. Rivers, our old college president, is said to be the only minister living who was ordained by Bishop McKendree.

"I will praise the Lord with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation." (Psa. cxi, 1)

The postoffice at Canton, Miss., was robbed last week of $400, a gold watch and diamond ring, belonging to the assistant postmaster.

Rev. P. A. Johnston, presiding elder of the Woodville district, en route to appointments across the Lake, gave us an appreciated call last week.

Judge Foote's article, on "Our Inheritance," published on the first page, is worthy of careful perusal by every reader. Be sure not to pass it over.

"Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." (Psa. ciii, 8.)

Bishop W. H. Miles, of the colored M. E. Church in America, died at his home in Kentucky last week. He had been in the episcopal office twenty-two years.

Our special edition for North Mississippi Conference will come forth next week, in time for the Conference session at Corinth. If you want extra copies, let the publisher know.

We publish this week the programme for Week of Prayer and Self-Denial, Jan. 2-8. Preachers will do well to cut it out and study it, so as to be prepared to carry on the work that week with vigor and success.

Trifet, music publisher of Boston, has our thanks for the November number of Gleazy of Music. It contains ten vocal, and ten instrumental pieces, all for one dime. The Gleazy will be sent for a year for one dollar.

"Sing unto the Lord a new song, and his praise in the congregation of saints. Let Israel rejoice in Him that made him: let the children of Zion be joyful in their King." (Psa. cxlix, 1, 2)

This piece of news is going the rounds of the church papers:

Bishop Keener's address has been changed to Carrollton, La.

Where that news has been slumbering for the last thirty years is a mystery to us!

The Western Carolina Advocate is the product of the union of the Western North Carolina Advocate and the Statesville Advocate. The first number reached us last week. We congratulate Bro. Groome on this edifying and lively issue. May it grow larger and stronger with the growing year!

Brethren are again writing to know what has become of the obituaries they sent; and again we say, in all sincerity, those obituaries are resting quietly in the editor's drawer, patiently awaiting their turn to appear in the paper. The brethren might learn patience from those same obituaries.

"Praise God in his sanctuary; praise him in the firmament of his power. Praise him for his mighty acts; praise him according to his excellent greatness. Praise ye the Lord." (Psa. cl, 1, 2)

Of course, we read all our papers and note their progress, and it seems to us that the Alabama Advocate has improved more in both its editorial and publishing departments than any of us. We congratulate our old Louisiana workers, Armstrong and Wells. Is the success not due to their Louisiana training?

We are obliged to Chas. F. Webb, president of the Y. M. C. A. of the University of Mississippi, for a copy of the University Magazine, edited and published by students of the university. We have found in it some good reading. Our friend, Dr. William Rice Sims, edits the "Literary Notes," and no one is more competent.

We are pained to receive the following from Bro. F. M. Keen, at Anguilla, Miss.:

We are in deep affliction. Our last and only child, little Nellie, four years old, was taken from us yesterday (Saturday) at 4:30 o'clock P. M. We buried our little boy last week. Please request the prayers of the brethren, and, dear Doctor, we ask an interest in your prayers.

When our next issue comes out—the North Mississippi Conference edition—that Conference will have been in session twenty-four hours. If no unforeseen accident prevents, we will be there and shall heartily enjoy shaking hands again with the brethren at their great annual reunion. With what a yearning do we look forward to these Conferences! May the Lord be with us and bless us and thoroughly equip each of us for our next year's work! Bro. D. L. Mitchell will be on hand looking after our financial interests. We know all will be glad to see him, and hope each member of the Conference will look him in the face—A. S. T. Ed.

The statement made two weeks ago included some subscriptions. I have received in actual cash to date, $151, leaving a balance of $49 due. I borrowed the amount needed on ten days' time and had the sale passed on the tenth. The money is coming in almost every day, and when it reaches the $200 asked for I will say, "Hold up." I thank God for this home for our dear Bro. Fount.

Mississippi Conference and the Missionary Debt.

Since last report the following amounts have been received and forwarded to Bro. Holt, treasurer Board of Missions:

Brandon District—By J. M. More, solicitor.....$12 00
Seashore District—By M. H. Moore, solicitor..... 80 70

But nothing yet from the Vicksburg, or the Jackson, or the Woodville district. Bro. Moore and the Seashore district are examples unto the rest in zeal and liberality. May these closing weeks of the Conference year see all the solicitors heartily at work, and all the men of means liberally responding!

T. L. MELLE, Conference Solicitor.

To Subscribers to the Palme Loan Fund, North Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: You will see from Dr. Morton's statement that many notes given to this fund have not been paid. Dr. J. T. Sawyer will represent Dr. Morton at the session of our Conference at Corinth, and will have these notes with him for collection. Please bring or send the amounts of your notes and pay them off. Come, brethren, sisters, let us pay up and we will feel better; so will Dr. Morton and the needy churches.

Reynal Notes from the Meridian District.

Enterprise and Stonewall circuit, J. W. Chambers, P. C., assisted by Rev. J. P. Drake: Mayerhoff Chapel—16 conversions and 18 accessions, and money raised to finish the chapel.

West Wayne mission, E. T. Breland, P. C., assisted by Rev. B. S. Rayner and Rev. J. W. Chambers: Eucutta—25 accessions, and a society organized. Good meetings are reported at Oak Grove School-house, on Why Not circuit, and at Enon, on Waynesboro circuit.

At the recent Quarterly Conference at Lauderdale there were 4 accessions by certificate, 2 young ladies baptized and received into the church, 1 infant baptized, and a delightful communion service enjoyed by many.

Mississippi Conference and the Missionary Debt.

Another remittance from the Seashore district! Bro. M. H. Moore sends a slight draft for $35. Of this amount $20 was collected by Bro. C. A. Powell at New Prospect Camp Ground; and $10 by the Sunday-school at Purvis. Only one preacher in charge in the Seashore district has objected to the visit of the district solicitor, and he waived his objections and cordially co-operated with the solicitor when the visit was made. The Conference collections and preachers' salaries have suffered no diminution because of these contributions. Bro. Moore has not trusted to letter writing. Face to face, heart to heart, talks and prayers have done the work.

T. L. MELLE, Miss. Conference Solicitor.

"Let the Poor Be Remembered."

Governor Simms concludes his happily worded Thanksgiving proclamation by saying: "Let the poor and needy be remembered in loving charity, that our thanksgiving may be the more acceptable to the Lord." One more acceptable to the Lord! One more acceptable to the Lord! One more acceptable to the Lord! The Thanksgiving offerings of last year by churches and Sunday-schools carried to the institution through the Winter; and I again earnestly request that collections be taken in all the churches in the State in which Thanksgiving services are held, and that on the Sabbath following, every Sunday-school scholar in the State be invited to contribute five cents to the orphan at Natchez. Send all contributions to Mrs. Mary R. Fleming, treasurer, Natchez, Miss. She will promptly and gratefully acknowledge.—J. L. Power, in Clarion.

An exchange says there are three rats that people ought not to get out of—the rat of daily secret prayer, the rat of daily Bible reading and the rat of regular attendance upon all the church services. If you keep in these rats, you will soon get out of all others.

The grip has made its appearance in New York again. This is a terrible disease; and let everybody take care of themselves.

NOTICE TO THOSE OWING THIS ADVOCATE FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Publisher of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will be much obliged to subscribers to hand amount due to the preacher in charge, so that the preacher can settle at Conference with the representative or the agent of this paper.

Let every member of the Louisiana Conference, who intends bringing his wife to Conference, notify me immediately, that homes may be provided for them.

Let every presiding elder inform me at once—

1. Who will come as applicants for admission.
2. For ordination.
3. As lay delegates.

Attend to these things at once, brethren. THOS. J. UPTON.

Lake Charles, La.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi Conference.

Brethren: Will you do me the kindness to remit me your church extension money before you go to Conference? Exchange on New Orleans, New York or Vicksburg, express money order or postoffice order on Vicksburg will suit. Be sure that money orders are on Vicksburg, and be sure not to send me money by ordinary or registered letter. If you can not remit me before Conference, please convert your money into bank exchange or postal orders, and bring that to Conference instead of money. If you will do this, it will relieve me of any amount of annoyance, labor and responsibility in caring for these funds, and thereby I will be able to report to the Board at an early day and expedite its work. Do not send your money to Thos. B. Holloman at Canton, Miss. Some of the brethren did that last year. Do not remit later than Dec. 7.

COMMENDED BY THE HIGHEST AUTHORITY.

From Ex-President Hayes: "It is a valuable work. I have subscribed for two copies."

Dr. Elliott Coues, author of "Birds of the Northwest," says: "It is a really notable work."

Prof. C. J. Maynard, author of the "Birds of Eastern North America," says: "Contains the best pictures of the species which I have ever seen."

Dr. J. B. Newberry, President Academy of Sciences, says: "The work is accurately and beautifully prepared, and I take pleasure in recommending it as the most authoritative popular exposition of our ornithology yet given to the public."

From Prof. Wm. D. Hornaday, Taxidermist, U. S. National Museum: "I have carefully compared the figures in the Birds of North America with those in Audubon's great work, and am free to say that they are more accurate in outline as well as more faithfully colored to nature."

Samples of plates and text sent to any address on receipt of twenty-five cents in postage stamps.

WHOLLY CONSECRATED.

BY A. T.

"Dear Lord, I consecrate my life to thee! Let me so work that when my task is done My gathered jewels, without loss of one, Resplendent shining in thy galaxy Of precious gems, received from such a hand Approved of thee, may find accepted place! And thus, not for my glory, but through grace Divine that steadies and upholds my hand, For thine own honor and name's sake alone!" A young man, taking holy orders, spoke These thoughts in humble prayer. For Jesus' sake

Such are ordained to labor, not their own; And bright will be the jewels that will star Their chaplets, who thus consecrated are.

—Methodist Recorder.

Praise.

"My dear flock," said the sainted Robert McCheyne, "I am deeply persuaded that there will be no full, soul-filling, heart-ravishing, heart-satisfying outpouring of the Spirit of God, till there be more praise, and thanksgiving to the Lord."

There are many ministers who feel the same in reference to their own churches. At the dedication of the Temple it was when "they lifted up their voices and praised the Lord, that the cloud came down, and the glory of the Lord filled the house." So was it in the New Testament church. After the ascension "they were continually in the temple praising and blessing God." And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. "And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."

The repetitions of Scripture ere, of course, intended to emphasize the truth they teach, and upon no point is the Bible more emphatic than upon the fact that God loves to have his people praise him. It is much more frequently enjoined the offering of praise than the duty of prayer. God declares that his desire in seeing the church was that they might be "people for his praise." "He inhabits the praises of Israel." The Bible is full of such teaching. Thoughtful Christians are greatly concerned about the condition of our churches in relation to the service of praise. Earnest prayer is offered in all our churches, and many of them are blessed with good preaching, but alas! the service of praise goes largely by default. We all believe in singing, but we are slow to make our singing praise. We love to sing because it is cheerful and enjoyable; because it enlivens our services, and makes them attractive; because it pleases the young people and helps to draw a congregation. It is commonly regarded as a sort of ornamental appendage to the more serious engagements of God's house. Of course, this is all wrong. As the direct personal offering of each worshiper to his Maker, the singing is the most important part of the service. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me." It is God's own ordinance, and to degrade it to the low level of human expediency is an insult to the Divine Majesty. Our hymn books should be regarded as sacred books, used for sacred purposes. But many Christians have not learned to value them. They must be interested in the book of praise before they can be interested by it.—W. H. Parker

They Shall Walk with Me in White.

It is related that a young merchant from the West spent the Lord's day in New York City, and by invitation attended church with Mr. B., a well-known and influential Christian man. The next day, while transacting business with a merchant, he expressed some surprise at the confidence he manifested in him, as a stranger, when he replied:

"Did I not see you in Mr. B.'s pew?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I am not afraid to trust any man who sits in Mr. B.'s pew."

They Shall Walk with Me in White.

It is related that a young merchant from the West spent the Lord's day in New York City, and by invitation attended church with Mr. B., a well-known and influential Christian man. The next day, while transacting business with a merchant, he expressed some surprise at the confidence he manifested in him, as a stranger, when he replied:

"Did I not see you in Mr. B.'s pew?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I am not afraid to trust any man who sits in Mr. B.'s pew."

There is a story of a young man, having some financial scheme which required a large amount of capital, called upon a very wealthy banker, and sought to interest him in the enterprise. He declined to advance the funds that were needed for the undertaking, but promised to put him in a way to get them; so, taking his arm, he walked with him once or twice up and down the exchange, conversing with him as they went along. When they returned, he told him he could go among the bankers and get what he wanted. The young man found that the statement was true. The very fact of his being seen walking up and down with that wealthy man gave him all the credit he required.

It is thus when men walk with men. The world is quick to see, and draw inference from our associations. But what must it be for a man to walk with God? What do the angels say when they see a weak, hapless, sinful, fallen mortal taken into fellowship with their Master, and walking with him along earth's desert way? No mortal walked with God 300 years. Men know him as one who lived a secret, hidden life, whose mystery they could not penetrate; the demons of darkness knew him as one clothed with armor which they could not pierce, and defended by One to whose presence they dared not intrude; but the angels know him as a man who walked with God, and were not surprised when at last "he was not, for God took him."

To such fellowship and intimacy as this Christians are called. We are invited to draw nigh to God and have fellowship with him, to maintain such intimacy that the world shall know that we have been with Jesus.—Christian

Save the Fragrance.

Gotthold had for some purpose taken from a cupboard a vial of rosewater and, after using it, inconsiderately left it unstopped. Observing it some time after, he found that all the strength and sweetness of the perfume had evaporated. Here, thought he, is a striking emblem of a heart fond of the world and open to the impression of outward objects. What good does it do to take such a heart to the house of God, and there fill it with the precious essence of the roses of paradise, which are the truths of Scripture? What good to kindle in it a glow of devotion if we afterward neglect to close the outlet by which I mean to keep the world in an honest and good heart? (Luke vii, 15.) How vain to hear much, but retain little and practice less! How vain to aspire to holiness without sacred and holy emotions unless we are afterward careful to close the heart by careful and diligent reflection and prayer, and so keep it unspoiled from the world. Neglect this, and the strength and spirit of devotion evaporate and leave only a lifeless truth behind. Lord Jesus, enable me to keep thy word like a living cordial in my heart. Quicken it by thy spirit and grace. Seal it in my soul that it may retain forever its freshness and its power.—Service

The Value of a Holy Character.

We naturally reply, when asked what the value of a holy character is, that it consists in happiness, because it possesses, however humble, the right to believe that he is at peace with the Almighty Father; in usefulness, because those who observe it are often caused to admire and to try to imitate it, and also because it involves the doing of many good and useful deeds, in imitation of him who went about doing good; and in safety, because the same God who spared Noah and his household because of his righteousness, when the remainder of mankind was destroyed by the flood, is just as certain to sustain and bless the righteous now, although in less conspicuous ways.

But is there not another answer to this question, less often volunteered, perhaps, but not less significant? The highest value naturally attaches to the most important thing, and the most important possession which one possibly can own or acquire is a holy character. The value of a holy character, then, is seen in this, that it represents the highest ideal known to man. We know this because we have in the Bible an account of the flawless, stainless character of our Lord Jesus Christ, the only perfect example of such a character ever witnessed. We should know it also, although, of course, less positively, from the conditions of mere reason. Even men whose ideal standard of character is very low and defective, admit the truth of what we have said by openly honoring what they consider the best specimens of character according to the standards which they have adopted.

It is a great and grand thing to hold up a lofty moral ideal before one's fellow-men, and this, in addition to all else, is what the possessor of a holy character does. It is what in his measure he does who only earnestly strives to illustrate righteousness, though he fall often and must needs renew his struggles repeatedly, and almost from the beginning. Here again, too, apprise the blessed truth, that neither wealth, reputation, nor fame, nor friends, are necessary to the attainment of a holy personal character, but that the boys or girls, as truly as their parents, the poorest and the least, the one and the other may succeed in glorifying their heavenly Father, and honoring themselves as well, by humble, penitent, reverent, loving service, and by seeking to be constantly in communion with the Holy Spirit.—Congregationalist

A Book Which Makes Things Safe.

Everyone knows that where the Bible has influence it makes things safe. Why is this? If it were a bad book, we should expect to find it in the hands of the worst men. In New York there was a kind of rogues' museum—a place where they had all kinds of skeleton keys, and jimmies, and brass knuckles, and dikes, and pistols, and implements of mischief, which they had taken away from rogues and criminals. Do you suppose there was a single New Testament in the whole lot? Why not? If it were a bad book you would expect a man to have a revolver in one pocket, and a New Testament tucked away in another. There was a row the other night, and a man broke his wife's head with a Bible! No! It was a bottle! Where the Bible bears away, the rows and quarrels do not come.

Years ago, a young infidel was traveling in the West with his uncle, a banker, and they were not a little anxious for their safety when they were forced to stop for a night in a rough roadside cabin. There were two rooms in the house; and when they retired for the night they agreed that the young man should sit with his pistols, and watch until midnight, and then awaken his uncle, who should watch until morning. Presently they peeped through the crack, and saw their host, a rough-looking old man, in his bear-skin suit, reach up and take down a book—a Bible; and after reading it a while, he knelt and began to pray; and then the young infidel began to pull off his coat and get ready for bed. The uncle said, "I thought you were going to sit up and watch." But the young man knew there was no need of sitting up, pistol in hand, to watch, all night long in a cabin that was hallowed by the Word of God and consecrated by the word of prayer. Would a pack of cards, a rum bottle, or a copy of the Age of Reason, have thus quieted this young infidel's fears?—Inspiration of the Bible

Contentment.

A pastor tells the following story of one of his flock:

A poor widow, who supported herself with the most rigid economy by knitting, I saw in the intense cold of last winter. To her house was one upon which time had made no sad ravages; that only one room could not be habitable; and in that she dared not have a fire when the wind blew hard, because the chimney had become unsafe.

"How favored I am!" she said; "for when I have been oldest the wind didn't blow much; or there was so much snow on the house I could have a fire without danger; I can not be thankful enough. And then," she continued, "Joseph has been at home nights almost all winter, and he could get my wood and water when there was so much snow I could not get out."

"But do you not feel very lonely while Joseph is away?"

"No; I feel along very well through the day," her Bible lay on the table by which she was sewing, "and when I can see the neighborly light in the evening they are company for me. I have thought a great deal about sick people this winter; and then I think how favored I am that I can go to bed and sleep all night in health."

I saw her again afterward. Rheumatism had disabled one foot, and she sat still sewing, with a swollen, painful limb raised upon a cushion. "How favored I am!" she exclaimed; "when my poor Lydia was alive I lost the use of both my feet for a time, and she took care of me; but now I can get about by moving my foot upon a chair, and I make out to do my work, and get Joseph's meals ready nicely. What if I had been my hands? How favored I am!"

THE BEST RECIPES FOR REST.—There is nothing which will give a chance for rest to overtired nerves so surely as a simple religious faith in the overruling, wise and tender Providence which has us in its keeping. It is in obeying against the conditions of our lives that we tire ourselves immeasurably. It is in being anxious about things which we can not help that we often do the most of our spending. A simple faith in God which practically and every moment, and not only theoretically and on Sundays, rests on the knowledge that he cares for us at least as much as we care for those who are the dearest in us, will do much to give the tired nerves the feeling of the bird in its nest. Do not spend what strength you have, like the elements, in climbing up yourself, but lay hold on things that are eternal, and the peace of them will pass into your soul like a healing balm. Put yourself in the great ever-lasting currents, and then you can rest on your own and let those currents bear you on their strength.—Anna C. Brackett

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

April's coy suggestions, Whispered vows of May, The pledge of June, that set astune Each radiant Summer day, The promises that Nature wrote About the August fields, Are all fulfilled, In sweets distilled From Autumn's luscious yields.

For where the May-lily blossoms slept, Later, red apples hung; And where each little tendril crept, A purple cluster swung: The rippling waves of emerald wheat Changed to a golden sea, And clover-dew was melted Into honey by the bee.

Brown, shilshp nuts And ruddy fruits, The firebird's genial cheer, Are here to greet With welcome sweet This feast-day of the year: And clasping hands Of household bands, Bright smiles and laughter gay, Bring happiness And peace to bless This glad Thanksgiving Day.

The Best Thanksgiving.

BY REV. A. W. PATTEN, D. D.

The "Thanksgiving" time is one of the most enjoyable of the whole year in our American life. Somehow it has a coldly national cast. Not only because the President of the United States issues his annual Thanksgiving proclamation setting apart the day for thanksgiving and prayer, but because our Pilgrim fathers at the very beginning of their colonial life recognized the providence of God to their history by observing these occasions, and gradually it has grown into a national custom. It has become a season of family gatherings, when the scattered members of the household hasten homeward to rejoice in the blessings of the year, and to discuss the past and plan for the future over the luscious dishes of turkey, cranberry sauce, and squash pie. But more than this has it become an occasion for the outflow of a cherishing spirit prompted to the relief of the distressed and the gladdening of the homes of the lowly by substantial tokens of good-will—sending a portion to those for whom nothing is prepared. Many people will spend this day merely as a holiday, with elaborate feasting and merry-making. Others will take the occasion to roam the forests with dog and gun in search of game. Many will repair to the church to worship God, joining in the anthems of praise and attending the Thanksgiving sermon.

What have we, as young people, to be thankful for? Why should the members of the league thus lift up the voice of grateful praise to God?

1. I am thankful for a sound mind in a sound body. "Every year," said an eminent man, "I am grateful to God for my reason." The nervous pressure of this age often causes men to succumb to the strain. Some of the brightest minds have become permanently deranged through the dreadful pressure of this busy age, or through the fearful weight of sorrow. I have reason to be devoutly grateful to God for the maintenance of my reason undimmed, and for physical strength.

2. I am thankful for the blessings of home, says another. Eminent and America are preeminently the countries where the highest type of family life is found. The Christian home is the only genuine relic left us of Eden. Here love unalloyed is found when the love of Christ has away. Many of us are all we are to the godly parents who so carefully watched over us, bringing us early to the church in baptism, and bearing us on the wings of prayer to God himself as a offering for his glory. It was in the home that I received the inspiration which started aspirations for holy life and character.

3. I am thankful for the church. "I love thy church O God." The home of prayer, the open Bible, the hymns of praise, the communion of the saints, the preaching of divine truth! I can form no estimate of the value of the church to me, in hedging me about with pure influences, in giving me loving sympathy in my trials, in holding up before me lofty ideals, and in bringing me into association with those who were striving to achieve the Christian race and reach the heavenly home. I should show my gratitude by my deeds of loving kindness and my unwavering fidelity. A purpose to follow my Lord when-ever he may lead me, and do whatever he requires of me, will be the best testimony of my thankfulness for the church.

4. I am thankful for God's blessings to my native land. Historians, poets, orators, musicians are vying with each other to honor the memory of the daring Genesee. Columbus made to live again as perhaps few men have been made to live. Splendid pageants have marked the dedicatory exercises of the World's Fair. A national holiday has been for us, and we have sung to the breeze the colors of America and of Spain. I am thankful that I am living in a Christian civilization; in a country where men have had a true start; where no hereditary royalty or nobility has weighted down the progress of the race; where everyone may have an open field and fair play for the development of his manhood; where, above all, a free school, a free church, a free State, and a free salvation are open to all.—Epworth Herald

Why He Didn't Rise.

Detroit is a lovely city, and everybody knows it. The love of it is bred in the bone, and never gets out of the flesh. The other Sunday a visiting clergyman addressed the Sunday-school of an up-town church. After a serious talk he said to the children:

"All of you who desire to live in a better world than this, please rise to your feet."

All the children rose except one small boy in the corner.

"My child," he said, very gently and kindly, "why don't you rise with the others?"

"Detroit's good enough for me, that's why," sang out the youngster, and the solemnity of the occasion was knocked to pieces.—Detroit Free Press

Professor: "You seem to be very dull; when Alexander the Great was your age he had already conquered the world." Student: "Well, you see he had Aristotle for a teacher; if he had had you I think he would have been very different."—Texan Bluffings

Little Dot: "I don't like this milk." Mama: "Why not?" Little Dot: "It tastes as if a milkman had been eating onions."—Good News

SCIENTIFIC.

The Lick Observatory.

BY RUTH ABBOTT.

Ever since shepherds have watched their flocks by night on gently sloping hillside or on grassy plain, the twinkling heavens have been sought to tell to listening man the story of their birth. For centuries for years turned a deaf ear to the truth that rolls from pole to pole, and blind humanity saw only signs and evil portents where gradations lessons might be learned. Crude observers with yet inferior apparatus soon reached the limit of their research. Philo-sophical speculation found the absolute necessity for facts "before the knowledge of the construction of the universe could advance further." So, at Alexandria, about 300 B. C., the first observatory, justly so called, was founded, and, until near the middle of the second century of the Christian era, continued in activity. It was here that modern astronomy takes its beginning in the investigations of Hipparchus.

After the dark ages Arabian princes founded several observatories and continued the cultivation of the science until the fifteenth century, when Europe awoke with the hope of inspiring the ideas relating to the motion of celestial bodies.

To Tycho Brahe belongs the honor of giving to practical astronomy the mighty impulse which installed the science in the universities. The changes made in astronomical instruments during the last two centuries seem to serve as a mere index to the changes wrought in the human mind regarding the radiant orbs, and the progress of scientific research in this direction is only too tellingly shown.

America, always in the van when science and truth lead the way, has, within the last decade, given to the world, through one of her generous sons, the largest astronomical observatory the world has ever known.

Born near the close of the last century, James Lick lived until 1875, thus coming in contact with that mighty impulse which has marked the present century as the most marvelous in the history of the world. It was as an organ and piano maker that James Lick laid the foundation of that fortune which was later to make his name famous. By successful real-estate investments he made the larger part of his fortune and placed himself in the rank of the many-time millionaires. Just how he decided to erect the observatory which bears his name will, perhaps, never be known. He was a great reader, especially of Andrew Jackson Davis' works, "which, like Edgar Allan Poe's 'Eureka,' present a comcomony more poetic than veracious." His really powerful mind had turned to even larger account the strange ideas and eccentric enthusiasms which mark his large beliefs.

He possessed an almost morbid desire to be remembered by his fellow-men; to do something important in life in a way to strike the imagination. Accordingly we find his vast fortune somewhat strangely bequeathed. One legacy amounting to $50,000 for a monument to be erected in San Francisco. In memory of Francis Scott Key, who wrote the memorable words of the "Star Spangled Banner." Also $50,000 for a California Institute of mechanical arts, to be a sort of manual training-school for the girls and boys of San Francisco, besides $100,000 for statutory emblems of three most significant epochs in the history of California.

It was in 1874 that he decided upon that gift which has given to science a most satisfactory astronomical equipment, and to the donor a monument more enduring than the pyramid of Cheops, which he had planned to rival in marble on San Francisco Bay. Could his really powerful mind have received a systematic training, the present disposition of his endowment would doubtless have entirely satisfied him of the wisdom of the choice made. Seven hundred thousand dollars was the sum laid out for the erection and equipment of a telescope which, according to the founder's requirements, was to be "superior to and more powerful than any telescope ever yet made." That the true test have been laid in the discharge of duties placed upon them is evident in the completed work, which, according to the terms of the legacy, was returned over to the University of California. Lick Observatory is located twenty-six miles east of San Jose, on the west of Mount Hamilton's three peaks. The winding mountain road makes nearly 4,000 turns before it reaches the altitudes where, 4,272 feet above the level of the sea, the observatory stands. Mr. Hamilton is remarkable for the steadiness of his air, and, indeed, is superior in this respect to any other observatory yet established. In the summer of 1886 the Lick foundation for the iron pier of the equatorial was built.

The telescope has an object glass 36 inches in aperture, while the moving part of the dome, weighing 199,000 pounds, can be moved by a 20-horse-power engine. It is also provided with a photographic attachment, enabling it to be used as a photographic camera in the photography of stars. Although the instrument far exceeds the twenty-one which preceded it in the United States. At the same time the observatory serves as a museum, for in a vault in the pier foundation supporting the great telescope are treasured the remains of the founder, who has thus erected for himself a unique monument, which not only perpetuates his memory, but serves as the highest name of mankind as well.—Epworth Herald

THE PAINLESSNESS OF DEATH.—Many people have an idea that death is necessarily painful, even agonizing; but there is no reason whatever to suppose that death is more painful than birth. It is because in a certain proportion of cases dissolution is accompanied by a visible spasm and distortion of the countenance that the idea exists, but it is nearly as certain as anything can be that these distortions of the facial muscles are not only painful, but take place unconsciously. In many instances, too, a comatose or semi-comatose state supervenes, and it is altogether probable that, more or less, complete unconsciousness then prevails. We have, too, abundant evidence of people who have been nearly drowned and resuscitated and they all agree in the statement that after a few moments of painful struggling fear and anxiety pass away, and a state of tranquillity succeeds. They are visions of green fields, and in some cases hear pleasant music, and, so far as the mind is concerned, their situations are successful, the resuscitated persons almost invariably protest against being brought back to life, and declare that resuscitation is accompanied by physical pain and mental misery. Death is a fact which every man must personally experience, and consequently is of universal interest; and, as facts are facts, the water course is to look them

ATLUFF—Mrs. Ida M., wife of Capt. E. H. Atluff, died at her home in Demopolis, Ala., June 7, 1892, at the age of 82 years. She was born in 1810, and died at her home in Demopolis, Ala., June 7, 1892.

After Atluff's mother died when she was a child, but she was not left without fond relatives who watched after her every interest carefully and tenderly as a mother. Soon after her mother's death she was placed at school, at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Ga., where she received a liberal education, returning from school she was happily married to Capt. E. H. Atluff, a prominent member of the church. She joined the M. E. church, South, at the age of fifteen. From the time she joined the church until she was released from the church militant to the church triumphant, she was a consistent member. But her conversion (some two years ago), not only was she a consistent member, but a faithful and earnest worker in the Master's vineyard. After serving as organist, secretary of the M. E. church and Ladies' Aid Society, she was active in her efforts to advance the Master's cause. But in her own beautiful home, surrounded by a kind husband and bright children, she died the lustre of her virtue and Christian graces shimmer resplendent. Sister Atluff was a devoted wife, an affectionate mother, and a neighbor. When asked if she was afraid to die, she said: "No, no; but I do not want to leave my husband and little children." But when death came, and all that physicians and friends could do they could not turn aside sorrow or stay the hand of death. She was a devoted wife, a mother, three children, father, brothers, sisters and many relatives to mourn her loss. God comfort the bereaved family in the sight of the Lord in the death of this saint.

W. W. SIMMONS—Howard B., son of W. H. and Della Collins, of Booneville, Miss., was born Sept. 11, 1878, and died Oct. 25, 1892. He had always been a frail child, and was afflicted for the severe attack of fever that he had. He was a little more than two weeks, bore his sufferings without a murmur, was conscious at the very last moments, and is now at rest—a rest that will never be marked by afflictions.

Howard was a curious little fellow. A strange fellow, but kind and obliging to a fault. He was a member of the M. E. church, South, and took the protracted meetings in Booneville, Miss., in the summer, took an active part in his sphere, seemed to enjoy the meetings very much. He had only been sick a few days (and no one of us thought his case dangerous), and he was very happy, and said to his mother, while the tears were coursing their way down his cheeks, "Ma, I just know I am a Christian, and I am going to heaven before long" (for words to that import).

He died at his home in Booneville, Miss., on Sunday morning, Oct. 25, 1892. A large concourse of friends of the family followed us to the cemetery, where we deposited his frail little body to await the resurrection morn.

Howard, little Howard; sleep on in Jesus. May God bless, sustain and save his loved ones in heaven! B. F. PHILLIPS.

GOZA—Ann C. Goza was born June 25, 1817, and died at her home in Claiborne county, June 8, 1892. At the age of eighteen she was married to John Goza, who preceded her to the home beyond about thirty-nine years. Sister Goza died the church at about twenty-five years of age, and was a consistent member to the day of her death. Her seat was seldom vacant. She had been a member of the Sunday-school for some years, and teacher in the same for five years. She loved the Sunday-school, and was always on hand unless providentially hindered. She walked a mile and a half on Sunday to Sunday-school, and fell asleep the following Friday. It may be said of her, She was faithful unto death.

She was the mother of ten children. Five of them crossed the river before she did, and no child was waiting at the beautiful gate for her. Those that remain are following the example of mother, and are on their way home beyond the skies. The church and Sunday-school have sustained a great loss; but our loss is eternal gain. D. F. GRIFFIN.

CONERLY—Little DAVIE ENNA, daughter of T. S. and Sister Courtney Conerly, was born Nov. 25, 1891 and died Oct. 24, 1892.

Little Davie was a sweet little bud just opening to the world. The darling of her mother and aunt; it was so hard to give her up. The Lord knew best, and so transplanted the flower in the bosom of his love. There's a little angel gone on before to wait and watch for papa and mama.

God grant they may live so that they may meet only have his supporting grace now in their bereavement, but finally, when life with him is over, they may meet little Davie in the Father's house, where there will be no more weeping! M. J. MILLER.

CHINA GROVE, MISS.

SWAYZE—Mrs. MARY VIRGINIA SWAYZE (nee O'Rilly) was born near Russellville, Ala., Nov. 18, 1843, and removed with her mother to Yazoo county, Miss., when seventeen months of age. She was married to Prentiss Swayze Dec. 20, 1865 and departed this life, Friday, Oct. 7, 1892—just one week after her husband had died. She joined the M. E. church, South, with her husband, Oct. 4, 1877. Since then she has lived a faithful, consistent Christian, making her home a pleasant home for her pastor.

Mrs. Swayze was above the average woman, intellectually. She was a favorite among her relatives and friends; was highly useful in her neighborhood, and will be greatly missed by all. She leaves three sons, a daughter-in-law, a grandchild, an aged mother and a sister to mourn her death. Oh, how she will be missed by those! Her place can never be filled. All who knew her will feel their loss, especially all her old pastors will feel poorer when they hear of her death. How applicable to her is the thirty-fourth, thirty-fifth and thirty-sixth verses of St. Matthew xxxv.

May God sanctify this bereavement to the good of the afflicted ones! Her pastor, D. C. LANGFORD.

CRAWFORD—HIRAM H. CRAWFORD was born in Copiah county, near Crystal Springs, May 8, 1841; died at Terry, Miss., Aug. 30, 1892. He was married to Miss Harriet A. Barnes, Dec. 17, 1867, with whom he lived happily until death parted away. They lived five or six years in Pike county; three years near Evergreen, La.; the latter part of his life was spent near Terry. He was a member of the Methodist Church twenty-four years; lived a quiet, unobtrusive Christian life; had no enemies; jovial when with those he knew best.

He leaves a wife and three children, besides a sister and other near relatives to mourn the great loss; was only sick three days, but felt that he would not recover, and expressed himself freely to the dear ones, who were so much concerned about the life for which we are all preparing, as being reconciled to God through his dear Son. He was laid to rest beside Bro. J. D. Hays to await the resurrection morn.

May the strong arm of God bear these loved ones up amid the storms of life, and prepare them for that home where death never comes and where sorrow is unknown! W. T. GRIFFIN.

HUHN—Died at his home in Terry, Miss., on Sunday, Aug. 24, 1892, Bro. J. J. HUHN, after a protracted illness of over six months, which he bore with much fortitude, especially during his last days. Bro. Huhn was born in Germany in 1832; came to this country in 1847; spent thirty years of his life at Terry; joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. Geo. Baneroff.

His last days were his best days in Christian experience. His hopes brightened as he neared the end, and he often said he left it all with Jesus; and died fully trusting in him for salvation. In his death we have lost a good citizen, a kind husband and father, a true friend. He suffered as few men suffer in this world, and it was a great relief to him for God to call for him. He leaves a wife and four children to wait for that meeting where parting is not known. May the Lord comfort and sustain them in their sadness and prepare them to meet to a better world! W. T. GRIFFIN.

CARRUTH—Tribute in respect by the Adams Woman's Missionary Society in memory of Sister ELIZABETH CARRUTH (nee Wells), who died at her home in Amite county, Miss., Aug. 30, 1892. She was born Oct. 10, 1841; joined the church at Adams Camp Ground, 1864 or 1865; was also a member of the Woman's Missionary Society at that place.

How sad are the hearts of her loved ones! But they have the promise that the Savior has gone to prepare a place for those that love him, and they can be reunited with her where parting will be no more; therefore, be it resolved, that we, the members of the society, do deeply sympathize with the bereaved family in their affliction. She was a ready worker in every good cause to the church, the home and in society. In all the walks of life she was true and trusted; for in her heart was the law of love and in her mouth the words of kindness. Thus closed a beautiful and exemplary life, full of the hope of a glorious resurrection. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Mrs. F. E. MOORE, For Committee.

APPLEWHITE—The Savior has again said: "Suffer the little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of God," and the angel of death has visited the home of Dr. E. L. and Sister Lou Applewhite, and carried little MARVIN GALLOWAY to the loving arms of Jesus.

May papa and mama, brothers and sisters, meet him where there will be no more sickness, pain nor death. M. J. MILLER.

China Grove, Miss.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of today may be the pneumonia of tomorrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Hays' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Dr. Hays' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE HENNING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

A Only Daughter Orned of Consumption
When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures slight weakness, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1092 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Southern Wholesale Druggists' Convention met in this city last week.

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the National League for Good Roads was held in New York City on Nov. 16.

The small-pox epidemic in New Haven, Conn., continues unabated. Despite the efforts to check the progress of the disease, new cases are breaking out each day.

The Illinois Central Railroad Company recorded in Vicksburg, Miss., on Nov. 18, a mortgage for $25,000, 000 on the route in favor of the United States Trust Company of New York.

This year has considered a big one for rice. New Orleans has already handled $14,337 sacks of rough rice, against $60,658 last year—an increase of a quarter of a million sacks, or nearly 40 per cent.

Over a half-million dollars of property in Arkansas City was destroyed by fire on Nov. 20. The Desha Lumber and Planing Company, with a capacity of 100,000 feet daily, and 20 houses (most of which belonged to the company) were burned. About 5,000,000 feet of lumber were consumed.

Com. Ramsey, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, in his annual report to the Secretary of the Navy, says the efficiency of the service demands that some changes shall be made in its personnel in order that the number of officers in the different grades shall be in keeping with the duties now required of them and with the character and number of vessels composing the navy.

A serious outbreak among the Cheyenne and Arapaho tribes, in the Indian Territory, is threatened. Since July 1 the government has been giving the Indians only half rations, for the reason that they were expected to aid in their own support by cultivating their lands. The attempts of the Indians in this direction have been miserable failures, and on account of their ignorance of husbandry, hundreds of them are in actual distress.

The report of the Secretary of Agriculture has been submitted to the President. The report emphasizes the fact that of the more than $1,000,000,000 representing the exports of our domestic products for the past year, nearly 80 per cent. consisted of agricultural products, thus not only making the United States the creditor of the world for a sum of exceeding $200,000,000, the excess of our exports over imports, but relieving our home markets from a surplus product which would otherwise have reduced prices to a point below cost of production.

The great strike at the Carnegie Steel Works at Homestead, Pa., has been declared off. After five months' struggle, the army of strikers finally decided to give up the fight. This action was taken at a meeting of the lodges of the Amalgamated Association at Homestead on Nov. 20, the voting standing 101 in favor of declaring the strike off and 91 against it. For several months the mills have been running almost as well as before the strike, but the strikers have steadfastly refused to admit defeat. The strike at one time involved nearly 10,000 men, and the loss in wages will reach, approximately, $2,500,000.

The heavy pension payment this month, amounting to nearly $18,000,000, and the unexpected falling off in government receipts, has reduced the cash balance of the Treasury to $27,650,000, nearly all of which is either in subsidiary silver or on deposit with national banks. A still further decline is expected before the end of the month, but it will undoubtedly be checked very shortly by a natural increase in the revenues. Secretary Foster has said that, notwithstanding the unusually heavy drains on the Treasury, and the fact that the sugar bounty for the year will amount to nearly $10,000,000, against $7,000,000 for the previous year, he was confident that there would be no deficit in the national finances during the present fiscal year.

FOREIGN.

The directors of the Panama Canal Company who are to be prosecuted by the French government will be allowed three months in which to prepare their defense.

It is said that the Imperial loan which the German government proposes to raise on account of the army, navy, and imperial railways amounts to 149,000,000 marks.

The executive committee of the Irish Landlords' Convention intends to issue simultaneously with the appearance of the report of the evicted tenants' commission a counter-report, giving the landlords' side of the question.

The Hamburg-American packet steamship Fuerst Bismarck, on her initial trip to the Mediterranean, carried 1,000 Italian steerage passengers. Most of them are returning for the Christmas holidays, while others have accumulated small fortunes and are going to live in Italy again.

The English Cabinet passed without difficulty the clauses of the Home Rule bill dealing with political changes in Ireland, but has become perplexed in facing the financial question. Mr. Gladstone himself has not ventured to present a solution of the question, postponing, with the assent of his colleagues, the clauses relating to finance until the Cabinet resumes its sittings in January. Under Mr. Gladstone's scheme the cost of administration in Ireland is estimated at an amount which reaches nearly the whole of the present revenue of about 7,000,000 pounds sterling. Of this sum 4,500,000 pounds are now expended locally; 2,500,000 pounds is the amount of Ireland's contribution for imperial purposes.

The Cotton Crop.

Charleston, S. C., Nov. 19.—The News and Courier has had an exhaustive examination made of the condition of the cotton crop of the South. It shows that the crop is short far beyond the calculations of experts, and that the greater part of the crop has been picked and rushed to market, and the late top crop will amount to practically nothing. From these reports, which come from the Commissioners of Agriculture of various States and from trustworthy newspapers, it appears that the crop will scarcely exceed 6,000,000 bales.

The Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer-Sun says: "The cotton fields in this and adjoining sections are almost entirely bare. It is a conservative statement that fully nine-tenths of the crop has been picked and marketed. The yield in some sections is conceded to be 50 per cent. less than that of last year."

The Memphis Appeal Avant telegraphs: "It is estimated by conservative men that the crop in the Memphis territory, West Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi will be fully 40 per cent. less than that of last year. It is probable that from 60 to 80 per cent. of the crop in this territory has been marketed."

The Fort Worth Gazette says: "The maximum estimate of the Texas cotton crop is 1,000,000 bales. At least 65 per cent. of the crop has passed out of the hands."

The News and Courier estimates that the crop of South Carolina will be about two-thirds that of last year. Two-thirds of the members of the Mobile Cotton Exchange estimate the crop short by, at least, 20 per cent.—Times-Democrat.

Earnings of Railroads.

The gross earnings of 127 railroads for the month of September were $53,613, an increase of $1,947,500, and of operating expenses $3,337,000, an increase of $1,172,000, and net $49,276,000, an increase of $735,500. Gross earnings of 166 roads from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30 were $114,840,000, an increase of $34,375,000; operating expenses $42,582,000, an increase of $3,906,000, and net $72,258,000, an increase of $3,069,000. Gross earnings of November were $50,410,000, an increase of $155,900. Gross earnings second week of November, Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis, $25,755, an increase of $1,055, and Kansas and Texas, $196,067, a decrease of $25,192.—Times-Democrat.

At the Front.

The Bowling Green Business College and Literary Institute, Ky., seems to be taking the lead among schools of this kind in the South. It has a very large enrollment of pupils from all over the South and West. It sustains seven different schools or departments, embracing Business, shorthand, English, Teachers' Training, Penmanship, Telegraphy and Typewriting. An able specialist is in charge of each department. The school occupies six large rooms and halls aggregating over 6,500 sq. ft. of flooring. Hundreds of its graduates are filling the most honorable and paying positions. Catalogue free. Bowling Green, Ky.

LOOKING AHEAD.

Assuming that education is both an art and a science, Looking Ahead holds that its principles should be studied alike by parent and teacher. Fathers and mothers can not escape the functions as teachers of their children; and how well their work is done often determines how well the teacher may do his. The teacher's being a specialist can not remove all responsibility from parents.

Looking Ahead has been established to present in simple and attractive form the great truths that should govern those who are charged with the training of the young. It is a perfect personal experience as their sole educational guide, have no conception of the beauty, power and interest of the truth it is by the approval of clergy men everywhere.

The Rev. J. T. Jackson is now traveling in its interest. That schools may be induced to extend its circulation, we make this offer: If fifty teachers will send us their promise to enlist their pupils in taking subscriptions for Looking Ahead at 50 cents each, to that school whose teacher forwards the greatest number of cash subscriptions between this and Feb. 15, 1893, we will present a 12-inch Fitz Globe worth $25. To the teacher forwarding more than 500 subscriptions we will present a Johnson's Wall Map, worth $3.50, should that number fail to take one of the two prizes.

These maps and globes are put up by G. A. Co., and no better can be had for the money. No teacher should hesitate to send his name at once. Teachers' names at 50 cents each, must be sent to Fitz Globe, as a guarantee of good faith, our books will be submitted to Rev. A. D. McVey, President of Mansfield College, before prizes are awarded.

North Mississippi Conference

Biographical Sketches.

Rev. JOSEPH H. BROOKS, the oldest member of the North Mississippi Conference, has spent a long and useful life in the service of his Savior. He was born in Shelby county, Ky., March 24, 1815; consequently he is now in his seventy-eighth year. He was licensed to preach in 1840; admitted on trial in the same year; was ordained deacon by Bishop Andrew in 1842 and elder by Bishop James in 1844. During the forty-seven years of his active ministry Bro. Brooks served nine circuits, seven stations and six districts. He was a presiding elder for a period of twenty-five years, and has attended fifty-two sessions of his Annual Conference. No man in the Conference stands higher in the estimation of his brethren than "Uncle Joe Brooks," as he is familiarly called. At the session of 1884, held in Aberdeen, Miss., Bro. Brooks, in the absence of a Bishop, was elected president of the Conference, and presided until the arrival of Bishop Keener. His work nearly done, and at peace with God and all mankind, Bro. Brooks calmly awaits the summons, "Come up higher."

Rev. JAMES D. CAMERON, D. D., is a native of Tuscaloosa county, Ala. He was admitted on trial in the Alabama Conference in 1836, and labored in that Conference until the formation of the North Mississippi in 1870. Since that time he has served five stations and three districts. At this time he is pastor of the church at Winona. Dr. Cameron is a sound, solid preacher, and a wise administrator. He was a delegate to the General Conference, at Atlanta, in 1878, and Richmond in 1886.

Rev. THOMAS C. WIER, M. D., is an Alabamian, and has seen thirty-seven years of active service. He has been circuit and station preacher, presiding elder, chaplain in Confederate States Army, Tract Society and Bible Superintendent, college professor and president. He is now serving the first year of his third term as presiding elder of the Columbus district. Dr. Wier is a sweet-spirited gentleman, and none know him but to love him. He was a delegate to the General Conference of 1886.

Rev. THOMAS W. DYE was born in Hardeman county, Tenn., Dec. 26, 1844, and educated at Andrew College. He joined the North Mississippi Conference at its first session, held in Water Valley in 1870. In the twenty-two years of his ministry he has served circuits, stations and districts. Bro. Dye believes that the Scriptures "are profitable for doctrine," and takes great delight in "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints." He is a man of decided convictions and undaunted courage. He was a delegate to the General Conference of 1890, and did good work in that body.

Rev. JAMES W. HONNOLL, circuit and station preacher, presiding elder and college president, was born in 1836. He was licensed to preach in 1860; admitted on trial in 1861; received into full connection at Aberdeen in 1864; ordained deacon by Bishop Paine and elder by Bishop McTyeire. During the thirty-one years of his ministry Bro. Honnoll has filled five circuits, ten stations, and two districts. He is now the president of Malone Female College, Holly Springs. Bro. Honnoll is a safe counselor, a judicious administrator, a sensible debater, and a success wherever you put him. He was a delegate to the General Conference, at Richmond, in 1886.

Rev. AMOS KENDALL is a native of Lincolnshire, England, in which county he was born on Christmas Day, 1830. He commenced his ministry in the Primitive Methodist Church, of which communion four of his brothers were ministers, one of whom, at the time of his death, filled the office of president of the Conference. Bro. Kendall came to this country in 1854, and since that time has filled nine stations and five districts. He was presiding elder for an uninterrupted period of twenty years, and during all that time missed but two appointments. "A record," remarked the late Bishop Paine, "unparalleled by any other man, living or dead." For the past two years Bro. Kendall has been in charge of West Point station. His faithful attention to all departments of his work shows that the "wholesale" department has not neglected him for "the details of retail." He is a pastor universally beloved.

Rev. W. B. MURRAH, D. D., president of Millsaps College, is a native of Alabama, though most of his life has been spent in Mississippi. He was born in Pickensville, Ala., in 1831. His childhood was spent in Summerfield, where he received his primary education. His preparatory training was received in the high schools of Columbia. Dr. Murrah graduated at the Southern University, in Greensboro, Ala., in 1874. He has given a great deal of attention to educational matters. For several years he was principal of the high school in Winona, and was connected with Whitworth College as vice-president for six years prior to his election to the presidency of Millsaps College. Dr. Murrah has filled some of the most important stations in the bounds of his Conference. In 1890 he was a member of the General Conference which met in St. Louis, and last year was a delegate to the great Ecumenical Conference which met in the city of Washington. Dr. Murrah is not only a strong force in the school-room, but he is at home in the pulpit. He is a gentleman of fine presence and affable countenance, dignified bearing, and is a fluent, graceful speaker.

Rev. JNO. W. BOAWELL, D. D., was born in Gibson county, Tenn., Nov. 30, 1839. Dr. Boawell was licensed to preach by Dr. E. O. Slater, Feb. 12, 1859, and was received on trial by the Memphis Conference, at Memphis, Tenn., in November of the same year. Dr. Boawell spent ten years on circuits, five on districts, and the balance of his ministry in stations, save nearly two years while he was assistant editor of the Nashville Advocate, and nearly six months in filling out the unexpired time of a presiding elder whose health had failed. His last pastoral charge was First Church, St. Louis, Mo. He was eleven years in the Memphis Conference, two in the North Mississippi, eight in White River, ten in the Arkansas, and the past two years in the North Mississippi again. Dr. Boawell has spent nearly six years in editorial work, which, except the time he was in Nashville, was in connection with pastoral work. The Arkansas Methodist was started by Rev. Julian C. Brown, D. D., and Dr. Boawell. Dr. Boawell is editor of the Memphis Christian Advocate and Western Methodist, a new paper just started in the city of Memphis. During the thirty-two years of his ministry he has been faithful to every trust committed to him, and efficient in all the varied and different kinds of work he has been sent to perform. He is a wise counselor, a safe administrator of the affairs of the church, and an able expounder of the Word of God.

Rev. R. G. PORTER—better known as "Gildero"—was born in Alabama, February, 1839. When eight years of age he was converted at family prayer, conducted by his mother. He first joined the Presbyterian Church, but only remained in it about a year, when he joined the Methodist. His educational opportunities were quite limited, but he made a good use of them, and by diligence at odd times he acquired an extensive acquaintance with the branches of study that composed the curriculum of the schools. His literary and biographical and the Methodist theology were well stored in mind by the time of his majority. In his childhood he acquired a fondness for writing, which he has cultivated to such a degree that it is as easy for him to write as it is to talk. His articles in the church papers are thoughtful and sprightly, and command attention. He has also written several very interesting books. At fifteen he was class leader and Sunday-school superintendent. He was licensed to preach September, 1858, and admitted on trial in the Memphis Conference. At the organization of the North Mississippi Conference, in 1870, he adhered to it. His record as an itinerant is this: Three years as pastor before the war, three years chaplain in the army; eight years on circuits, nine years in stations and nine years on districts since the war. In all this time he has not been absent from his work for rest or pleasure twenty days, all put together. Bro. Porter is a most genial companion, and makes everybody feel easy in his company. It is a pleasure to know such a man, and an honor to have his friendship.

Rev. JOSEPH SYKES OAKLEY is large, portly, and inclined to be fine looking. He stands erect, full to the front, straight as an Indian, and, if possible, he leans back the other way. He has, somewhat, the mien and bearing of Bishop McTyeire, only his head is not thrown back so far, and his eyes do not seem to be so nearly closed. Bro. Oakley is a very careful, methodical and exact in his preparation for the pulpit. He always comes to the altar with well-beaten off. He is a Wesleyan Abolitionist in the exact sense of the word. He goes on no long voyages to discover new islands or continents of religious thought. The standards of Methodist theology and the Word of God are enough for him. He is, perhaps, the best-poet man in Methodist history—particularly early history—in the North Mississippi Conference. Bro. Oakley nearly always thinks through his pen. He puts his thoughts in ink, and this has tended to make him an accurate and exact thinker. He reads more largely in the pulpit and on the platform than any other man in his Conference; but reads so readily, so easily and so naturally one would hardly know it. His sermons are all built after the models of the English pulpit. (So much for early associations and training.) His style of writing is flowing, easy, quite finished and suggestive and strong. His handwriting is beautiful, and yet a curiosity—the like of which one rarely sees in a lifetime. His voice is very deep, and seems to come from a large base drum inside of him. He always speaks in one key. But for this he would sometimes ascend into the higher regions of oratory. He has the thought and the felicitous and rhythmical flow of words, but not the flexible, silvery voice of the born orator. He is always interesting, edifying, suggestive and instructive. Bro. Oakley is a competent and accomplished secretary. He is always up with his work. It is rare, indeed, that a single angustion is made by way of correcting his Minutes. What is done in the day goes down on a typewriter at night; so that, save the reports of committees, the Minutes are ready for the printer the next day after Conference adjourns.

Rev. JOHN J. WHEAT, son of John and Grace Wheat, was born in Copiah county, Miss. He was educated in Hanover College, Ind.; Centre College, Ky., and Princeton, N. J. His conversion began while in college, and grew to a decided conclusion experience at home in the year 1853. Dr. Wheat was a candidate for the ministry in the Presbyterian Church, and exercised his gifts for a time in that relation, mainly among Methodist people. In the year 1854, at old Topisaw Camp Ground, Amite county, Miss., he was granted a license to preach in the Methodist Church—Rev. Jno. Lusk, P. E. In 1855-56 he was stationed at Clinton, La.; at Woodville, Miss., two years, and Natchez one year. The two years following he was professor of Greek in Centenary College, at Jackson, La., and preacher in charge of Laurel Hill, same State. After this Dr. Wheat was stationed in Jackson, Miss., two years, and was chaplain in the Confederate Army one year. The next year—1865—he was on the Runkin circuit till September, when he became professor of Greek in the University of Mississippi. This chair he filled till 1887, when he was made professor of metaphysics, which position he held for two years, when he resigned from the university. During the time of his connection with the university he filled Oxford station nine years. At the close of his service in the university he was made presiding elder of the Winona district two years, and one year on the Sarda district. He is now closing his first year in Grenada station. Thirty-eight years have been spent in the service of the church and for the good of his fellow-men. Dr. Wheat has always been an instructive and edifying preacher of the gospel of Christ. Of late years he dwells, mainly and tenderly, on the love of God as manifested in the gift of his Son, and on the love of Christ as seen in the voluntary surrender of himself for the salvation of the world. His style is simple, clear, and highly descriptive. His manner is gentle, tender, and very persuasive, and full of comfort to the bereaved. On Nov. 22, of this year, Dr. Wheat was married to Mrs. M. W. Markham, relict of Rev. J. F. Markham. It is understood that Dr. Wheat will not take work the coming year.

Some Other Ministers.

BY "GILDERO."

Often, when riding up and down the hills and hollows of North Mississippi, I fall to thinking of some of the good men who labored here in the early days. I remember many of the preachers as far back as 1843 and 1844, when I was only four or five years old. Lewis H. Davis, the blind preacher, whom my parents knew in South Carolina when they were all young, used often to be at our home. His sightless eyes and devout spirit impressed me deeply. He often prayed with me drawn up close to him, and his hands resting on my head. The memory of this is very precious to me. Well do I remember A. H. Ragland, and especially the fact that he generally prayed kneeling on one knee. R. J. Harp was often in our home, and we have a few books now that my father purchased from him. T. J. Manly labored here in the early days, and somewhere along from 1844 to 1847, I remember, as if it were only yesterday, how he and my father and others of the preachers used to sit out in the yard under the shade of the trees, and talk for hours at a time, about the division of the church. I then caught the names of Paine, Andrew, Pierce, Williams, and many others. My father thought they were great men, and I thought so, too. I named my corn-stalk horses after these great heroes. Bassom was the greatest of all of them, or I thought so. Something he did or said, that was published in a pamphlet with blue backs on it, was a great book with my father, and he used to read it aloud until he made get excited, and stand up and make gestures like a preacher. How I used to listen and wonder what it all was that was so exciting and of such absorbing interest to the company! I absorbed a good deal of it, as I found out later on. William L. Bonner, a lame man carrying a crutch, who baptized me before I could remember, spent much time in our home. He and my father used to practice jumping, and, with the aid of his crutch, Bonner could out-jump my father. A. B. Fly was another one of the great men with me in the early days. I was a great admirer of C. C. Glover, C. C. Chisholm, T. J. Lowery, and Nathan Sullivan. All of these have gone home except R. J. Harp and A. B. Fly. I remember but few of the presiding elders of that day and time. They seldom came our way, or stayed so short a time that no lasting impression was made on the mind of a small boy. I have a faint impression that Mordos Gell, Malcom McPherson and Joseph Travis had some large share in planting Methodism in this territory. I could verify this impression, but I am now writing from memory. Later on I remember distinctly, as of yesterday, Jesse Walsh, Thor. L. Boawell, Joseph H. Brooks and M. J. Blackwell. Boawell and Brooks still abide, and both live in the land of Beulah in full view of the city of God that sits on the hills just beyond the river. To my way of thinking, M. J. Blackwell was the clearest, deepest and strongest preacher I ever heard, and he was one of the best men I ever knew. I remember more of his preaching, and I got from him a larger heritage of thought than any other preacher. He had a way of letting in light on the meaning of God's Word that need to make me jump out of my seat when I was a boy. I caught the truth, and it made me glad like I had found a gold mine. After a lapse of thirty-five or -six years I could write out some of his sermons with a fair degree of fullness. I had rather wear his mantle, and preach after his style, than the mantle or style of any man I have ever known. No preacher ever did me so much good.

There are others—a long list; some living and some dead—that wrought in this field: William S. Jones, Miles H. Ford, C. J. Manlin, A. C. Smith, A. J. See, Sam Caran, all mighty men of God, each in his own way.

We had some local preachers who were not one whit behind the best in the pulpit and in power for good. Robert Bonner! What a man he was! How many I how deeply pious! how greatly loved! What an influence he wielded for good, and what an earnest, unnoted, sound preacher he was! Methodism in East, North-Mississippi owes much to him. William A. Campbell—educated, gifted, peculiar, a little old, full of humor, a cousin of A. B. Longstreet, and much like him, deeply pious, entirely original—what a preacher he was! He never did or said anything like anybody else; but, when done and said, it seemed to be the right, and in the right way. David Harkey was another local preacher of great power and influence. He wore his hair rather long, parted it in the middle, and combed it down slick; but, for all that, he would have been an acceptable preacher in any pulpit in the State.

These are some of the great men that I remember when a little boy and while in my teens. I was local, and confined to a narrow circle; but the preachers were itinerant, and so I came into contact with numbers of them. I find much pleasure and no little profit from these retrospective and reflective words.

Education.

From the time of its organization, in 1870, the North Mississippi Conference has been represented in educational work by its own institutions of learning, and sometimes by its educators in schools other than its own. Dr. L. C. Garland, the Nestor of Methodist laymen and of educators in the South, was at that time chancellor of the State University at Oxford. Rev. J. L. Douglas, D. D., was conducting successfully a female school at Iuka. Dr. Douglas was a veteran educator, a man of many excellent qualities, and was eminently fitted for the delicate and responsible position of a teacher of young ladies. The first session of the Conference adopted Verona Female College, which had been organized during the same year by the writer of this article, as its president, in which capacity he continued for eight consecutive years. Later in the history of the Conference district high schools were established—one at Black Hawk, Rev. T. A. S. Adams, principal, and one at Kosciusko, of which Rev. W. P. Barton was first principal, and who, resigning after a year or two, was succeeded by Rev. T. A. S. Adams. During these earlier years of the Conference several thousand dollars were raised for the establishment of a male high school at Booneville. The cornerstone was laid with impressive ceremonies in the presence of an immense throng of people, and a commodious brick building was erected. The school opened, I believe, under the principalship of Prof. Verdell, of Georgia. After a comparatively short history it passed from the control of the Methodist Church. There have been other schools within our territory conducted by members of our church, and helpful to Methodism. But we are without data sufficient to make satisfactory statements concerning them.

At this present writing there are two female colleges within the bounds of the Conference and under its patronage—Grenada College, Rev. T. J. Newell, president, and Malone Female College, at Holly Springs, Rev. J. W. Honnoll, president. The former, under its present able management for ten, or more, years past, has been doing good work in the cause of Christian education. It has ample grounds, and an imposing and well-arranged brick college building. It is owned and controlled by the Conference. Malone Female College, now in its second sesquicentennial year, is named, as I understand, in honor of one of its most liberal contributors—Dr. Malone, of Holly Springs. Its excellent president, though new to school work, adjusts himself readily to the situation, and is worthy of the esteem and favor of the public.

Millsaps College, for the education of young men, was projected by the North Mississippi and the Mississippi Conference, and is owned and controlled jointly by these two Conferences. It is the outgrowth of a general desire for a Methodist male college for the State of Mississippi, and is located at Jackson, the capital of the State. Its first session opened under favoring auspices and with encouraging prospects on the twenty-ninth of September, last, with Rev. W. B. Murrah, D. D., as president. Dr. Murrah is a member of the North Mississippi Conference, and an able minister of the gospel. He is a graduate of the Southern University, at Greensboro, Ala., and had the benefit of some years of experience in school work before entering upon the presidency of Millsaps College. If the eighty thousand Methodists of Mississippi will endow and equip this institution as is needed, and as they are able to do, it has before it a hopeful outlook and a future of great possibilities.

Among Methodist educators in North Mississippi, connected with institutions of learning not under control of the Conference, is Rev. J. J. Wheat, D. D., for many years professor of Greek in the State University at Oxford. Prof. R. W. Jones, LL.D., is a member of the faculty also at the State University. He was the first president of the State Industrial Institute at Columbia, for the industrial training and education of girls. The school prospered under his administration. He resigned the presidency at the end of three years. Dr. Jones is an honored layman of the North Mississippi Conference. Miss Mary J. Callaway also worthily represents Methodism in the Industrial Institute. She is the daughter of the late Rev. Elisha Callaway, and one of the best teachers in the State, if not, indeed, in the South. Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan is worthy of mention in this connection, not only as a strong patron and friend of education in North Mississippi, but as one who "has wrought in the quarries," having been a teacher in several places. He was, for a time, a member of the faculty of the A. and M. College at Starkville. Methodism is still worthily represented in this same institution by Prof. Danney Lipscomb and Prof. J. H. Connell.

The North Mississippi Conference furnished a president to Centenary College, at Jackson, La., in the person of Rev. T. A. S. Adams, D. D. He resigned his position, after two or three years, perhaps, and returned to the pastorate. T. C. WIER.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. P. A. Johnston, P. E., Woodville district: "At Clinton, La., Sunday morning, 9 A. M., Oct. 29, in the home of Dr. Emmet Irvin, there was a very pleasant service to this scribe. Two of Dr. Irvin's children, one of Bro. Smith's pastor, and one of Mr. Bennett's were baptized. Dr. Irvin's great-grandchildren of Dr. Williams, of the Mississippi Conference. The great-grandmother, Sister Wall, was present, also the grandmother (the Doctor's mother), and enjoyed the service. It was a unique and, I trust, profitable occasion. We then repaired to the church, where preaching was heard, and after that, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. On Tuesday morning, in a drenching rain, I went to the St. Helena charge, at Center Church. On Monday night there was a remarkable baptism of the Holy Spirit upon the people. There were, it was said three hundred people present, Tuesday, at the Quarterly Conference. How will that do for a week-day Quarterly Conference? Every church was represented, and promised that all claims should be paid in full. Bro. Ceoll, the pastor, was not present, having been sick for a month. I paid him a visit the next morning, found him in great feebleness indeed, but resigned and happy. Bro. Ceoll will have the prayers of his brethren in his affliction. From there, forty miles across the piney woods, to the Franklin work. Bro. Sullivan is in favor with his people, and they are anxious for his return. All the finances will be up in full on this work, with an advancement of fifty per cent. this year upon the pastor's salary. The prospect for advancement on all lines, over last year, upon the district are good." Bro. McDonald planned wisely and laid good foundations, and I am reaping some of the results. The preachers are assessed about $1,200 more this year than last, in spite of the hard times. Surely, God is with us. Centenary College is doing well. Not as many students as there ought to be, but those that are there are better contented than for several years. Good work is being done. Edward McGee College is doing better, so it is said, than it has since the war. H. Walter Featherston is the right man in the right place. You would not do better, and might do worse, than to send your daughters elsewhere. There are some other good schools in the district. Eight in number I call to mind just now. These schools are of high grade and are doing good work."

North Mississippi Conference

Short History.

The North Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church, South, was organized by Bishop D. S. Doggett at Water Valley, Nov. 30-Dec. 6, 1870. It was composed of remnants of the Memphis, Mississippi and Alabama Conferences. Its boundary lines are thus defined in the Book of Discipline, page 365: "The North Mississippi Conference shall include all of the State of Mississippi not included in the Mississippi and North Alabama Conferences, and so much of Sumpter county, Ala., as lies north of the Noxubee and west of the Tombigbee rivers, and that portion of Pickens county, Ala., lying west of the Tombigbee river." Its territory is exclusively agricultural. It contains some of the richest lands in our Sunny South, and some that are very poor. It is thickly settled by a mostly industrious and frugal people. It has many towns and villages, but no large cities. Columbus, Aberdeen, Greenville, Grenada, Water Valley, Oxford, Sardis, Senatobia, Holly Springs, Winona, Macon, Starkville, West Point, Oxolona, Corinth and Iuka constitute the most of her largest and best stations. There are several double stations and quite a number of circuits which are excellent and desirable appointments, and are being filled by some of our best men. The members of this Conference are many of them young men, true and faithful and useful, promising much to the church of the future. Some are considerably advanced in years and are doing efficient work for the Master. This Conference has developed encouragingly since her organization in almost every department of her legitimate work. True, she has lost many of both preachers and members by death, removals and transfer. She has representatives in Texas, California, Arkansas and other States who are acquiring themselves most creditably in their different fields of labor. The following statistics kindly furnished me by our competent Conference secretary will show the character and extent of our growth since our organization—an exhibit of which our people need not be ashamed:

Traveling preachers in 1870, 110; in 1891, 147. Local preachers in 1870, 190; in 1891, 158. Members of the church in 1870, 21,757; in 1891, 41,333. Pastoral charges in 1870, 93; in 1891, 131. Presiding elders' districts in 1870, 8; in 1891, 9. Sunday-schools in 1870, 200; in 1891, 425. Officers and teachers in 1870, 1,112; in 1891, 2,295. Sunday-school scholars in 1870, 8,072; in 1891, 20,102. Paid preachers in 1870, $43,235; in 1891, $69,923. Paid for missions in 1871, $2,421.75; in 1891, $9,363.10.

Thus it will be seen that along several of the important and essential lines of church work our Conference has more than doubled, for which we "thank God and take courage." With such workmen in the ministry and among the laity and in such a country, who can tell what shall be the result in the two decades to come? It was predicted by some that, owing to the fact that our Conference was made up of parts of three different Annual Conferences, there would necessarily be brought together some discordant elements which would require time, wisdom and patience to adjust and harmonize. But such elements never made their appearance. All fell into line like true yoke fellows, and have been pushing the battle to the gate with commendable zeal and in brotherly unity, and to-day we are as free from everything like cliques, I presume, as any other Conference in our great and growing church, presiding elders and pastors, and pastors and people, working together in beautiful harmony. We be brethren; we are one, and the cause in which we are engaged is one, and among us there is an evident recognition of the great spiritual and connectional bonds which bind us together.

Thus the North Mississippi Conference has a history which need not be consigned to oblivion; a history which proves the fidelity of her ministers and members in the past, and augurs favorably and encouragingly for her future. Her banner has never trailed in the dust, and, under God, will not be allowed to do so. Of course, she cannot be strictly aggressive from the fact that she occupies all the ground within her prescribed bounds; but she proposes to be progressive in building churches and parsonages, establishing and fostering schools, and developing the various possibilities within her.

AMOS KENDALL.

Starkville Station.

Out of the territory ceded by the Choctaws in 1830 fourteen new counties were organized in 1833, Oktobbeha county being one of the number. Starkville, named for Gen. Starbuck, Revolutionary fame, was made the county seat. Close on the heels of the departing Indians came a hardy, thrifty, upright class of settlers, who have left their impress on their descendants to this day. Several denominations were represented among them; but for a while all used the log-cabin court-house, which stood on the present site of the store of W. W. Scales & Co., as a place of worship; the same building serving also as a school-house for the community. The Presbyterians led in the church-building movement, for by 1838 or early in 1839 they had built a comfortable brick church near where the negro Methodist Church now stands; the Methodists and others meanwhile worshipping in the old-fashioned clap-board school-house which had been erected back of Dr. Ames' present residence.

The Methodist Society, or class, was organized in 1835 with the following as charter members: Elijah Hogan, Mary Hogan, James Walton, Louisa Walton and W. H. Wilson. Prominent among the number added during the first year or two thereafter were J. W. S. Heath and wife. Bro. Heath deserves especial mention, standing, as he does, as the most conspicuous figure in the church during its early days; serving it faithfully as secretary, sexton, class leader and precursor. Nor has he ceased to serve it, for his mantle has fallen on his children.

Holding public services in the school-house and class meetings in the houses of its members, the society rapidly increased until in the latter part of 1839 they were able to build a two-story brick church on the hill our church now occupies. In a few years, however, the walls of this church cracked so badly as to be deemed unsafe. It was, therefore, pulled down, and a frame building, with gallery on three sides was constructed on the former brick foundations. This lasted until 1839, when the present neat and commodious house of worship was erected.

Comparatively few, of course, of the long line of herold and devoted men and women who have contributed to the growth and increasing influence of the church can be even alluded to in this brief sketch; hence none should be surprised or grieved at missing names they might expect to see. Turning to the records, the names of some of our pioneer Methodist preachers first attract attention. To most of us their names sound strange and new, but, as fathers of the church, we revere and cherish their memory for what they wrought and suffered in our behalf. To a few of the gray-headed veterans left in our ranks their names have still the charm of Spring and the freshness of the morning. Matthews, Stone, Gentry, Smith and Calloway are recorded as visiting ministers to the feeble hand, cheering and counseling them in their struggles for existence as a church. E. R. Strickland, with a young preacher, Edwin Phillips, as helper, came in 1839, after the building of a church, as the first regular pastor in charge. Samuel Hawkins followed in 1840; John J. Jones in 1841, and P. B. Bailey in 1842 and 1843; each accompanied by an associate young preacher, to whom he gave instruction and inducted into the details of the various labors of a Methodist itinerant. Asbury Davidson and J. M. Pugh served as presiding elders in the earlier years of the church. Gracious revivals marked each pastorate; quarterly meetings were then epochs in church history, attended by crowds from far and near; and the camp meetings held at Bluff Springs, three miles from Starkville, were frequently seasons of pentecostal power. The church grew rapidly, and before the war came on numbered over one hundred members. For a considerable time the Starkville Church and Pearson's Chapel, another growing church in the county, were united as a single pastoral charge. Godfrey, Fly, Nash, Castle, Harrington and Millaps were among the pastors from '45 to '60. Ransom J. Jones, E. H. Mounger, McCreary and Carlisle were the war pastors of the church, with Geo. D. Wade as presiding elder. Regular services were held throughout all that troublous time, not neglecting preaching and Sunday-school for the negroes on Sunday afternoons.

During the four years succeeding the war, Ransom J. Jones was pastor, and Kenneth A. Jones presiding elder—names still held in high esteem by Starkville Methodists. Then came devout and energetic J. R. Allen—now Dr. Allen, of Georgetown, Texas—who married Miss Morley, an estimable young lady of our town. Futrell, Moon, Powers and Campbell were sent to us in the '70's. Bro. Moon's pastorate was signalized by the famous Dye-Hall debate on baptism; in which, as is usual, both sides were victorious. Confidence in Dye's ability in that arena is yet unbounded by Methodists in these parts. But of that great contest the less said the better, lest we deepen the traces, now almost effaced, which it left behind. In '79 and '80 J. W. Lowrance, since of Missouri, hnt now at Jackson, Tenn., was the able and successful preacher in charge. Revivals had been frequent since the war under various pastors; but Bro. Lowrance was eminently successful in that line. In one meeting conducted by him there were forty, or more, accessions to the church. Cunningham and Ramsey were his successors for one year each, and then followed the second four-year pastoral term in the history of the church, with J. S. Oakley as the preacher in charge; he and Ransom J. Jones being the only ministers that have ever served this church that long. To Bro. Oakley, more than to any other single individual, is this church indebted for the satisfactory completion of the building it now owns—one that is large enough and substantial enough to last for decades to come. O. Bros. Augustus, T. Cameron, Price, Wier and Randolph, our recent pastors, and of Bros. J. D. Cameron, Sullivan and Wier, our recent presiding elders, it is not necessary to write in detail. Suffice it to say, they labored earnestly and faithfully among us, and under them the church has continued to grow and prosper, until it now numbers nearly three hundred members. Besides a Sunday-school, over two hundred strong, there is a flourishing Woman's Missionary Society, an efficient Parsonage Aid Society, a Juvenile Missionary Society, and an Epworth League, with about seventy-five members, organized this year by Bro. Randolph.

Due recognition should also be made of the valuable service rendered us in late years by Evangelists Robert Pearson and Joe Jones and George R. Stuart. The latter was with us in spirit and power last Spring, and the fruits of his labors still remain.

But what of the laborers who sat in the pews? Surely they should not be left unnoticed. Reference has already been made to J. W. S. Heath, the first class leader; and of Cushman, Hines, Sister Cololough, and others, it would be a pleasure to write. Bro. Heath died in 1842; but the year previous a Joshua to succeed him had joined the church in the person of Bro. A. W. Lampkin, who served as class leader, Sunday-school superintendent, and secretary for many years. In Columbus and in Mobile, to which places he afterward removed, he filled similar positions of usefulness in the church. The last ten or twelve years of his life were spent in Starkville, his former home; and, though advanced in age, he was still vigorous in mind and body, and re-entered upon his active labors in the church and Sunday-school. For over forty years his Christian life was almost without spot or blemish. Tried by afflictions and adversities that would have crushed an ordinary man, he was withal as humble and tender-hearted as a child, and yet as courageous and inflexible as a Roman sentinel—a meek, yet stalwart Christian—one of the truest and noblest men I ever knew. Between 1850 and 1860, after Bro. Lampkin had moved to Columbus, John Thornton, a pious Cumberland Presbyterian, served as Sunday-school superintendent to the satisfaction and benefit of the church. Grateful recognition of his valuable services is here most cheerfully accorded. Robert Lampkin, a man of strong individuality like his brother, was also for many years a prominent figure in the church. A beautiful memorial window over the front door of the new church is a constant reminder of him. His wife, a zealous, but modest worker in the church, to our deep regret, left us a few months ago to make her home with relatives in Texas. Space forbids more than mere mention of Bros. W. E. Saunders and F. A. Critz, worthy superintendents of the Sunday-school: the former with his excellent and beloved wife now in Atlanta, Ga.; the latter now a distinguished attorney of West Point, our neighboring city. Sister M. T. Sullivan, the accomplished, accommodating and devoted organist of the church for about a score of years, must not be overlooked. No uneasiness was felt when she was at the organ, for she could play whether it was in tune or not, and played without a murmur whatever she was asked whether it suited her or not. She could make mistakes and not mind it, and furthermore could always keep a choir and never have a quarrel in it. To but one who is at present a member of this church will a closing mention now be made. His usefulness and prominence as a church official ever since the war entitle him to this exception. Bro. M. F. Ames is the one alluded to—church trustee, chairman of the Board of Stewards, and district steward. He it is who brings things to pass in a financial way, finds money for the preacher where no one else would think of looking for it, and quietly, in his own inimitable way, rounds up the collections and assessments. Not less important, he has raised a family of sons and daughters to love the church and gladly labor for it.

Concerning the membership in general of the Starkville Methodist Church, it is gratifying to be able to report that a more regular and attentive church-going people could hardly be found. A church of its size, with a membership so largely composed of young people, and yet so little given to worldliness, I know of nowhere else. In numbers it is certainly the leading church of the town, and has been so, I am told, for many years. Most of its members are limited in financial resources; but, in the main, they give cheerfully what they can to the church and other worthy causes. All in all, this church is decidedly above the average, and, if but true to its mission, with God's blessing resting on it, will continue its hitherto unchecked career of growth and usefulness in the cause of Christ.

Agricultural College, Miss.

Corinth.

Corinth, Miss., the county site of Alcorn county, is a prosperous town of twenty-five hundred inhabitants, situated in the northeastern portion of the State, at the crossing of the Mobile and Ohio and Memphis and Charleston railroads. After the surveys of the above roads were made, the little village that sprang up was named "The Crossing." Within a year the name was changed to Corinth by a committee of citizens. The first business house was opened by Carter & Neely in 1853, and Wm. Moss built the first hotel, which is used as a boarding-house still. In 1856 the town was incorporated, and Jno. W. Hale was elected mayor. Col. Chas. P. Polk established a weekly newspaper, The Cross City—afterwards named The Corinthian—which was edited for many years by Gen. J. J. Gleson. In the Fall of 1856 Prof. Holmes, of Massachusetts, opened a school, and was succeeded the year following by Small and Elgin, the latter still living here. The first church-building erected was a Methodist Church. The contractor, Jno. Butler, a life-long Methodist, now in his seventy-fifth year, is a ripe sheaf ready for the Master's garner. The Federal Army destroyed that building during the late war. Our people were without a church until 1869, when a neat frame structure was built, which has just been removed to be replaced by a beautiful brick church, in which the next Annual Conference will be held. When the Corinth Church was organized, it was in the Eastport circuit, with Jno. H. Garrett, P. C., and in the Holly Springs district, with M. J. Blackwell, P. E. Within a year, or two, Corinth was made a station, with J. H. Garrett in charge, and a new district was formed, with James Gaines, P. E. Bro. Gaines is a man of precious memory heretofore. Among the early presiding elders were H. D. Howell, W. D. F. Hafford, E. E. Hamilton; and the early station preachers were C. N. D. Campbell, J. C. Lowe, J. W. Honnoll. The local ranks were represented by A. D. Porter, Rht. Williams and S. P. Young, whose "names are as ointment poured forth," and whose descendants are among our best citizens. Of the original settlers we mention D. R. Bradley, M. Seegriff, H. S. Brooks, Mrs. Ann Small, T. D. Duncan, C. P. Elgin. They are still with us, and are worthy citizens. The sainted S. B. Surratt was raised in this vicinity, and died here. Two widowed sisters and a number of nephews and nieces survive him, but are following on. The Methodist is the strongest and most influential church in town. We are still growing in grace and in numbers. To God be the praise.

T. Y. RAMSEY.

Greenville.

The first sermon that was preached in the vicinity of what is now Greenville was preached by a minister from Arkansas by the name of Sanders, at the house of Mrs. Elizabeth Carson, who is still living here, and is in her ninety-third year. This country then was a dense cane-brake, with the exception of a narrow strip of land along the river front, known as "Baohelor's Bend." The next sermon was preached by Mr. Powell, of which little is known. In 1838 Dr. Samuel R. Dunn came, with his family, from Philadelphia, Pa. He was a Protestant Methodist minister. He preached occasionally for the people in Mrs. Blanton's (afterwards Mrs. Theobald) dining-room. He continued to preach for several years, receiving no salary. He was an excellent, good man.

Mr. Gridley was the first minister appointed by the Conference, and in 1837 organized the first Methodist Church at this place. He was the only preacher in the territory where we now have fifty, or more, congregations. Bro. Gridley was succeeded by Bro. Cranshaw, a young lawyer who gave up his profession to become a Methodist preacher. He is said to have been a zealous and excellent young preacher. When he was asked at Conference how many members he had, replied, "Twelve, and all of them pillars in the church." Under his ministry one of our most honored members joined the church—Mrs. Price Hunt—whose useful life a gracious Providence still preserves. And about this time Miss Ann Pelham (now Mrs. A. B. Finlay) joined the church, and from then until now she has been one of the most faithful and zealous members of the Greenville Church as ever had.

In 1840 an attempt was made to build a church. A log cabin, with pinochion floor and pinochion benches, was the result. From the log cabin the congregation moved to the court-house, which was built in 1842. In the court-house they continued to worship until 1847, when a neat church was built. The country was rapidly settled by planters coming from Warren and other counties in Mississippi, and from the older States. The congregation, though small, possessed excellent material, the ladies taking the lead in this, the first congregation organized in the Delta, as they have done, to a greater or less extent, in all the churches since established. There were three women who were members of this congregation—Mrs. Blanton (afterwards Mrs. Theobald), Mrs. A. B. Finlay, Mrs. Myra Smith—that were pillars in the church in reality. They were the leaders in all church work—looking after the preacher's salary, caring for the poor, and in every possible way aiding the pastor. These were noble women, honored and respected by all who knew them, and their work still abides. Two of the three—Sister Theobald and Sister Myra Smith—have entered to rest.

In 1850 a neat church was built by the Methodists, and Bro. Hyde was sent on this circuit. He made his home with Sister Theobald, as there was no parsonage. Bro. Lusk succeeded Bro. Hyde, and he was also employed by the planters to preach to their slaves. Missionaries were sent each year to the negroes. During the years of the war Rev. Stevanon Aroher, a Presbyterian minister, served as pastor to all denominations. During the war Greenville was burned by the Federal soldiers. The Methodist and Presbyterian Churches were at that time destroyed. After the war the first services were held in Sister Finlay's home until a small frame building was erected, and here the Methodists and Presbyterians held their services for several years.

Bro. W. W. Drake was sent to Greenville station in 1857, and during his ministry the present comfortable church was built. This church is a monument to the tireless energy and persevering industry of Bro. Drake—a man of more than ordinary ability, of deep and unquestioned consecration. While serving in the capacity of presiding elder and station preacher the soul of this truly noble, good man entered upon its eternal rest. Bro. Drake was followed by numbers of other good and faithful men, among them Dr. Sullivan, Dr. T. A. S. Adams, Bro. Oakley, Bro. Page, Bro. Barton, and a great many others.

R. M. STANDEFER.

Columbus.

The Methodist Church at Columbus, Miss., was organized and held its first Quarterly Conference, Feb. 25, 1833. At that time it belonged to the Alabama Conference. At the first Quarterly Conference there were present: Rev. Eugene Le Vert, P. E.; Richard H. Herbert, P. C.; William Dowling, Sr.; Robert D. Haden, Geo. Saffner, Wm. L. Clark, Ovid P. Brown, and Wm. Dowling, Jr. During that year five other persons joined the church—John D. Bibb, L. N. Fields, L. P.; Dr. Dabney Lipscomb, Alexander Gray and Martin Sims, L. P.—showing a membership of only eleven at the beginning of 1834.

The growth was very slow until 1839, when, under the Rev. Wm. Wier, P. E., and Wm. Murrah, P. C., there were added to the church thirty substantial men, who, with their families, increased the membership to one hundred souls. From this date the church has been prosperous, and has grown steadily.

During the sixty years of its existence this church has enrolled 2,238 members; has had 16 presiding elders and 32 pastors. Of the first 500 members, 15 remain. Of the 425 members now belonging to the church, 400 have joined since the year 1864.

This charge was served in 1848 by Dr. (afterwards Bishop) McTyeire, and in 1860 by Bishop R. K. Hargrove. Among the noted pastors we may mention Jefferson Hamilton, P. J. Neely, Thomas W. Dorman, J. P. Hutchinson, Edwin Baldwin—all gone to their reward.

The Columbus congregation has owned three church-buildings—the present edifice costing $40,000, and being the largest and most complete church in the State.

GID. D. HARRIS.

Aberdeen.

The M. E. Church, South, in Aberdeen, Miss., was organized more than fifty-five years ago. The exact time of its organization and the building of the first house of worship we have been unable to ascertain. This much we learn: Up to 1850 they worshipped in a small frame building. It was erected on the same lot upon which their present substantial and spacious brick structure now stands. This house was erected at time above mentioned, during the pastorate of Rev. Ben Crouch, under the management of the following-named brethren as a Building Committee: E. Strong, Wm. H. Clifton, Geo. A. Sykes, Wm. H. Saunders, Wyatt Moyer. This building has been improved from time to time until we have one of the best and most commodious auditoriums in the State, together with a basement of six rooms which is well fitted and equipped for Sunday-school and other church work. Immediately in the rear of the church, facing one of our prettiest streets, is located the parsonage, which is one of the best residences in our Southern country, built and furnished mainly by the efforts of the good women of the church during the ministrations of Rev. R. P. Mitchell.

Methodism in Aberdeen has been strong and influential from the first. A majority of the leading families have been and are connected with the church. They have intelligently instructed their children in the doctrines and polity of Methodism. One of the most important factors in building up and maintaining the church was the residence of Bishop Paine. He moved his family to Aberdeen, Oct. 9, 1846. His great life, powerful preaching and glorious death have left a growing impression that will be felt by the generations to come. From the imperfect data furnished we are unable to give a perfect list and date of the pastors who have served the church. From the best information we have been able to obtain we give the following names—possibly not in the order which they served: J. W. Mathis, W. C. Rabb, J. L. Chapman, J. H. Brooks, Ben T. Crouch, Merriweather, Davies, C. D. N. Campbell, Isaac Elbert, Amos Kendall, A. H. Thomas, A. J. See, G. W. Carter, S. R. Brewer, Wm. Sheppard, Dr. Wm. Murrah, J. H. Sorugger, R. P. Mitchell, W. B. Murrah, T. W. Dye, E. L. Spragins and J. A. Brown. With a membership of four hundred, a competent Official Board, well organized and growing Sunday-school, three weekly prayer meetings, the missionary and benevolent work of the ladies and young people, the church is prepared for still greater usefulness.

Domestic Missions.

Domestic missions date back to the ascension of our Savior, and before, when he said to his disciples: "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." This is authority for a wise and diligent cultivation of the home field, and it stresses the importance of it in order to the largest and most satisfactory results in the foreign fields.

With a profound and abiding interest in the work abroad, and at the risk of being criticized, I would venture to say that no church should, in its enthusiasm for the conversion of the heathen, lose sight of its obligation to those nearer home. This has been done in the past. The work at home ought, at least, to keep pace with the work abroad. I would not withdraw one dollar from the foreign missions of the church, but rather increase the appropriations; but ought not every dollar given for foreign missions to be duplicated for the home work?

The masses in Christian lands need educating in the missionary idea. This can best be done by properly cultivating all the territory. Should we not be as careful in selecting the men for the home fields as for the foreign? And why do we not hear of men offering themselves specially for this domestic work as well as for that abroad? Doubtless, there is a reason of a very material sort for it.

Objections are sometimes raised by good men against domestic missions. They are all met by the fact that the gospel has no geographical boundaries. A man at the center is worth as much as a man on the circumference, and no more.

Then Christ gave this to John's messengers as one of the evidences that he was the Christ: "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." And then he said: "The poor ye have alway with you." Herein do we see that the obligation is a perpetual one.

But do domestic missions pay? Yes—sometimes. In our own Conference, a few years ago, certain territory received considerable appropriations as missionary ground. I believe the figures will show now that, so far as expenses go, it pays more per capita than any other part of the Conference.

Of another "home mission" field I heard Bishop Paine, in 1874, say: "I was presiding elder, just fifty years ago, of a district that included this mission, and in all that time it has not improved one particle." It had been served by men for convenience sake. Strong men have cultivated the other field. Some sections will never be other than missionary ground, because the soil is too sterile. Nevertheless, the obligation to supply them with the very best our gospel table affords abides.

North Mississippi Conference.

Woman's Missionary Society.

Ever since the establishment of Christ's church on earth, God's plans for its enlargement have been developing, and new and varied resources have been called into action. The heads and hearts of men have been taxed and utilized in the great march of God's truth, as the educational and charitable institutions of our church testify; but it has been left for the nineteenth century to bring into action a new power, to marshal a new host in the army of the Lord. The work of Christian women and children has in this century been given a separate and prominent place never known before, and the results of this movement have more than justified the wisdom of its projectors, and have stamped it with the great seal of God himself. Occupying a prominent place in this utilizing of woman's heart and hands to advance her Master's kingdom is the movement known as the "Woman's Missionary Society," or "Woman's Work for Woman." Of such recent origin as to be in the memory of many to-day, the labor of woman for the salvation of her down-trodden sisters in heathen lands has already girded the globe and set in motion forces which will continue to develop and bless the earth till "time shall be no more."

The organization of the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, at Atlanta, Ga., in May, 1878, opened up an avenue of service to the women of our church untried and, I believe, unthought. Whether the movement was wise and beneficial, let the fourteen years' record of the society testify. North Mississippi has cause for just pride in the fact that one of her own daughters preceded at the first incipency and organization of this society at Atlanta, Ga., May, 1878, and, returning to her own State, she began the good work there by organizing in Aberdeen, June 26, 1878, the first Woman's Missionary Society in North Mississippi, just one month after our General Conference had given it existence. I refer to Mrs. Bishop Paine, who still labors with us, and who was able during the recent annual session of the North Mississippi Woman's Missionary Society, in Aberdeen, to behold the wondrous growth and proportions attained by the tiny seed she there planted.

Like all movements suggestive of innovation, or radical change, the Woman's Missionary Society in North Mississippi took root slowly, and for several years after its organization at Columbus, April 24, 1879, its growth was very gradual, and little interest was manifested in the tiny shoot even by the Christian women of our church. One feature of its progress has been noteworthy, and to that I would call special attention. There has been a steady increase in its annual collections for fourteen years, with one single exception: The amount collected in 1893 fell short of the collections of the preceding year, $5.06; but the report for 1888 presented this wonderful statement: 1887, $1,219.06; 1888, $2,889.87—more than doubling its offering of the year before. This was a year of wonderful impetus and growth in our woman's missionary work in this Conference. God had just laid his hand upon two of our dearest and best, and when Addie Gordon and Lula Lipscomb went from our midst to foreign fields it stirred the hearts of our women. The work was real now! Were not two of our own hearts and homes there? Had they not given up all for love of the perishing heathen, and should we, could we, sit with folded hands at home? Let the record of 1887 and 1888 answer as to how the women of North Mississippi heeded this loud call from on high, and how devoted and true a band sprang forward to aid the work that year. The Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi has held thirteen annual meetings since organization. Beginning with five auxiliaries, we have increased to ninety-four adult and fifty-two juvenile societies, with a membership of three thousand two hundred and twenty-three. The first treasurer's report showed a yearly contribution of $353.67; our treasurer's last report gives this grand total for the year ending March, 1892—$3,867.67. We can not review these items of progress and look back at our small beginning without praising the Great Ruler of all things, who can, and does, use such weak and feeble instruments to develop his mighty plans.

The North Mississippi Woman's Missionary Society has done a noble part by the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, standing third in the list of Conference societies contributing to this grand enterprise. Besides the amount contributed to the building fund, we have a scholarship in this school, on which $1,675.14 has been paid, and which will be completed by June, 1893. This scholarship is named in honor of one of our noblest North Mississippi sisters, Miss Helen Findlay, of Greenville, who, dying August, 1878, left a bequest of one hundred dollars to the newly organized Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South—the first bequest received by that society.

In the fourteen years of its existence, the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi has remitted to our general treasurer, at Nashville, $21,691.96. This amount does not include the sums raised from year to year for general expenses, and known as the contingent fund, nor does it represent the money contributed to the Scarritt Bible and Training-school.

This short and imperfect review and summary of our work reveals, at least, the fact that the women of the North Mississippi Conference have had no inconsiderable part in this latest of missionary movements, woman's work for woman; that their representatives and money are witnessing for them to "the uttermost parts of the earth." This fact would of itself repay us for our labor, self-denial and prayers; but, indeed, and in truth, this seems the smallest work accomplished. Be present, if you could, from year to year at our praise-services and love feasts held at each annual meeting, and hear the loving and heartfelt testimony and praise that ascends to God from the Christian women assembled there, that they have ever been allowed and moved to join in this service; hear them testify that this woman's missionary work has been the "second touch of Christ upon their half-blinded spiritual eyes;" see their efficiency, their knowledge of the work and its needs; their tender love for their missionary representatives and for their heathen sisters, and you would agree that for this fourteen years' work for God they have already received "good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over." Add to this the large number of children, whose hearts and hands have been and are enlisted in this service for God and humanity; who are being trained to unselfishness and obedience to Christ's command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" observe these things, and the magnitude of the work may in some degree be estimated. The Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference is thoroughly organized, is in a sound and healthy condition, and has only to remember not to "be weary in well-doing," and keep the watchword, "Advance," as its motto, to be a mighty power for God both at home and abroad.

But one thing grieves our hearts: viz, the large number of Christian women in our Conference who have not yet enlisted in this work; who are allowing Satan to put ready excuses in their minds and hearts, and are thereby defrauding themselves of blessing and God, of rightful service. God speed the day when every woman in the M. E. Church, South, in North Mississippi shall be an active worker in this great movement.

"The work is thine, not ours, O Lord, it is thy race we run: Give light, and then shall all we do Be well and truly done."

MARY L. HARGROVE.

Sunday-School Work.

The Sunday-school work in this Conference is in a healthy and prosperous condition. Though it has not attained to the full measure of its mission, there is evidently substantial and constant progress. In 1870, when the Conference was organized, there were 200 Sunday-schools, with 9,184 officers, teachers and scholars; in 1891 there were 425 schools, with 22,897 officers, teachers and scholars—a gain of nearly 144 per cent. In twenty-one years, while the increase of the church membership in the same period was 89½ per cent. Not only has there been abundant growth, numerically, but there are evidences of improved sentiment and increasing interest for the cause, which are encouraging.

The schools are mostly kept up during the whole year. Hibernation is becoming the exception, and not the rule, even with those in the country churches. The International Lessons are invariably used, with an ample supply of our own graded lesson helps, and in many schools our catechisms are used in the juvenile classes. The church hymn book is commonly used in the song service. There is a growing disposition to have the Bible in hand in class recitations. Only a few schools have circulating libraries, but many of them take the Sunday-school Visitor. The Sunday-school Board makes liberal appropriations of pecuniary aid for the promotion of the work. This proves to be a potent means of stimulating schools already in existence as well as the organizing of new ones in poor or indifferent communities.

For several years past the Bishop has appointed, by request of the Conference, an agent to give special attention to the Sunday-school interest in connection with the college work. This proves to be a wise policy, whereby two most important and congenial agencies of church work are promoted.

In most of the districts there is held annually a District Sunday-school Conference, in accordance with the provisions for the same in the Discipline.

Sunday-school mass meetings have been held with good results in many places during this year under the direction of the Sunday-school agent, and others. There is a growing interest in the observance of Children's Day. Much more attention was given to it this year than previously.

Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

This youngest daughter of the church has attained a firm footing in the North Mississippi Conference, and is making most encouraging growth. In less than two years we have enrolled 29 adult societies. Every quarter records increased membership, and our women are beginning to enter more heartily into this work which so strongly demands our sympathy and support. It seems to us, who especially feel its burdens and responsibilities, that this society requires even more grace than does the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, for in that we only raise the money and have nothing to do with its expenditure, while in this we not only provide the money, but spend it as well. It requires a great deal of prayer and anxious thought to decide between applicants for parsonage aid, and it is always a pain to reject, or even to postpone, the claims of any circuit in need of help. It is our custom, in all cases, to select the neediest applicant, and, as our treasury is never so full that we can help more than one parsonage at a time, some must be disappointed.

In a little more than twelve months we have been enabled to assist four parsonages, and have several other applications on file awaiting their turn. This, besides the 50 per cent. of dues sent to general treasury, and a special donation to El Reno parsonage, Oklahoma Territory. We trust that all the women in our church may awake to their duty in this matter, and that the time may soon come when every church will have a comfortable home for its preacher.

The home mission feature of our work is a new development, and as we go, one step at a time, by faith and not by sight, we can not yet tell what possibilities are before us; but the reports on this line all indicate that our home workers are growing, not only in practical helpfulness, but also in spirituality. We have among our Conference officers a superintendent of religious literature, and we are trying this year to make a specialty of that department. We realize that we have much to learn, and that there is much work before us; but we believe this work is of God, and if we are obedient to his calls, he will give us necessary wisdom and open new paths for our feet.

Catarrh in the Head

Catarrh being a CONSTITUTIONAL disease, requires a CONSTITUTIONAL REMEDY like Hood's Sarsaparilla to cure it:

"Three years ago, as a result of catarrh, I entirely lost my hearing and was deaf for more than a year. I tried various things to cure it, but had physicians, but no improvement was apparent. I could distinguish no sound. I was intending putting myself under the care of a specialist, when some one suggested that Hood's Sarsaparilla might do me some good. I began taking it without the expectation of any lasting help. To my surprise and great joy I found when I had taken three bottles that my hearing was returning. I kept on till I had taken three more. It is now over a year and I can hear perfectly well. I am troubled but very little with the catarrh. I consider this a remarkable case, and recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all who have catarrh." HERMAN HICKS, 30 Charter Street, Rochester, N. Y.

Important Discoveries.

Four hundred years after Christopher Columbus discovered America, "We discovered that the Young People of 'The Sunny South' were searching for some medium published in their own Star Southland that would not only tell them all about Columbus' great discovery, but also about all other discoveries of special interest to them. We accordingly proceeded to publish our discovery in the form of a handsome monthly magazine, entitled 'SOUTHERN SUNBEAMS,' and containing from 60 to 100 pages of finely illustrated reading matter, consisting of short stories, also continued stories, new games, puzzles, out-door sports, and, in fact, everything for the amusement, instruction and interest of young people. During the past year we have further discovered that fully 25,000 of these young people have been sufficiently interested in SUNBEAMS to send us each $1.00 for their yearly subscription to it. Now we want to discover 25,000 more of the same sort, and as an inducement for you to assist us in our exploration, we propose offering you the following splendid premium:

If you will send us $1.00 we will not only send you SOUTHERN SUNBEAMS for one year, but we will also send you Washington Irving's history of 'The Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus,' which is a handsomely bound book of 735 pages, containing a complete account of the famous discoverer's life, and all of his voyages. Also illustrations of his fleet, which first came to America, viz: the 'Santa Maria,' 'Pinta' and 'Nina.' This book alone is worth more than the total amount of the subscription, and besides that you will have all the nice things we shall discover and publish in SUNBEAMS for one year. Send 10 cts. for a sample copy of SUNBEAMS, or, better still, send $1.00 and get the Magazine and Premium.

Thursday, December 1, 1892.

To the North Mississippi Conference Assembled in Session in Corinth.

Without any "palaver or taffy," the editors, publisher, clerks and printers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate make their bow to you and present this special edition as their greeting on your annual assembling. (Col. iv, 17.)

BRIEFS.

Our Thanksgiving service at Carondelet, last Thursday, was a good time. A large audience, fine singing, fervent praying, splendid sermon made up the service. The preacher, from the text, "The Lord reigneth," made a powerful and conclusive argument upon this thought—God rules the universe according to the principles of the atonement. Bro. Frank Parker held the attention for forty minutes. There was a new vision of God to many that day, and they closed the service by singing with gusto the old hymn,

"Come, let us anew our journey pursue."

We put this here for the benefit of city pastors:

If there are any men in the world who should labor to circulate church papers, and especially the church organ, those men are the pastors of large city churches. Many of them say that they haven't time to do this, when the truth is, they haven't time not to do it. Their congregations are subjected to so many diversions, dissipations, and temptations, and they themselves have so many delicate responsibilities to meet, that they can not afford to be without such help as a wise, strong, religious journal would afford. We are not writing in the interest of an individual or business enterprise. The city churches have suffered, and been weakened at many points, and we must do our part in trying to repair these wastes.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

By the general concurrence of opinion of every civilized and Christian community, there are few sources of crime and misery equal to the dram shop. The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source. There is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquor by retail.—U. S. Supreme Court, Nov. 10, 1890.

And yet our wise and humane and benevolent City Council repealed all the statutes restricting liquor selling and opened the way for any man to establish a saloon anywhere to sell liquor to anybody at any time. Such action should be visited by an indignant public with a punishment that will send the perpetrators of such an outrage back to where they can not insult decency and propriety by such wicked enactments. If the decent people of this city do not take this matter in hand, what may we not expect next? Nothing so outrageous as this has happened, and if the people let it alone, worse will come. Where is the Christian pulpit in this crisis? Now is the time to speak in tones of thunder!

At Ease.

The peace of God is the most enjoyable possession a man can have. There is no experience so precious as a consciousness of sin pardoned and soul cleansed. The rest of spirit which Christ bestows is akin to the rest of his own great nature. The great calm of the starry heavens is a symbol of the quietude of Godhood. Their ceaseless movement is also a type, to us, of his unresting activity. There is, then, a rest that is God-like, and there is a rest that is not God-like. Too many people in the church have this latter rest. They are "at ease in Zion." Life and grace are given to be enjoyed! Why should they have care and trouble? Why should they be solicitous for the welfare of others? Why should they spend sleepless nights and anxious days planning for the well-being of human souls? Have they not the love of God and the grace of Christ and the fellowship of the Spirit? Do they not "read their titles clear to mansions in the skies"? Are they not "children of God by faith in Jesus Christ" and heirs to the Father's magnificent possessions?

It may be so. It was so with one of old, and yet he was not at ease. Though he could say, "Christ liveth in me," yet hearing the piteous cry of unsaved men, in anguish of spirit, he exclaimed: "I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my brethren!" That cry for help stirred to tumult every emotion of his great soul and turned his whole life and thought and work into a ceaseless round of restless activity for the good of others! Wherever he went, upon whatever soil he trod, among whatever people he moved, he heard the same piteous cry for help. Everywhere he saw men burdened and staggering and sighing for succor and relief. Everywhere he heard the moan of want and the wail of sorrow and the shriek of despair. He saw his race away from God and out of harmony with His law and sinking beneath its load of sin. He heard it everywhere, that cry for help! And what could he do to remedy such universal want and woe and sin?

He threw himself into the work of relief and help with a faith and daring that made men think that he supposed himself invested with the power and resources sufficient to remedy the whole matter. Instead of stopping to give the pitiful excuse that so often rises to the lips of modern Christians—that one so insignificant can do nothing in so mighty an enterprise—he girded himself with an invincible courage, and with the sublimest confidence he engaged in the work of helping his helpless fellow-men out into the light of hope and up to the life of righteousness. In Christ he had peace and rest, in his fellow-beings he had sorrow and anguish of heart! When he looked Godward the ineffable smile of the Father flooded his whole spiritual being with ecstatic joy. When he looked upon the miseries of his fellow-men on account of sin, his agony of soul was measured by the depth and breadth of their woe. The smile of God and the miseries of man unfettered all his energies, and, deliberately placing them all under the control of the Divine Spirit, his life became one long marvel of devotion to the work of helping men out of their miseries and sins.

The case is the same to-day. There is the same old cry for help, intensified by the enormous burdens of modern life. The race is still "lying in the wicked one," and the moans of suffering and the wails of sorrow come up from every quarter. And yet hundreds and thousands of professed Christians live as if there was not a burden on any human soul nor a sigh coming out of any human heart. This is the most astonishing thing to contemplate: a disciple of Christ indifferent to the cry for help, turning a deaf ear to sorrow's appeals and a closed hand to the petition of want! "At ease in Zion," and unconsciously earning the dreadful woe denounced upon them for being in that condition! The world never stood in so much need of Christly sympathy and Christly help as to-day, and yet many Christians are at ease. How can such disciples look their Lord in the face, and say, "Lord, thou knowest I love thee"?

How many Christians in Louisiana and Mississippi can say truthfully, "I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my brethren?" How many love souls more than they love self? How many preachers are there ready, willing, anxious to go out where others have not gone, like Paul, and trust to God and tent-making for bread, while they reach down to the suffering masses to lift them up to light and hope and life? If the Christian people don't wake up to the obligations resting upon them, as the representatives of Christ in this time of abounding wickedness and widespread woe and want, in the day of judgment it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah than for them.

Christian men and women, get out of your lethargy before the "curse of Meroz" is visited upon you. Ah! it will be a sad, sad day when you hear the last words you will ever hear from your professed Master: "I never knew you. Depart from me."

Our Itinerary.

CHANGES SUGGESTED.

The above caption is over an article of the issue of Nov. 3, signed "A Member at Large," who invites discussion of the subject by the thinkers of the church, which in no way applies to me; and if I intrude upon the ground of the wise, in offering some objections to the article, I may be excused because of my admiration of our economy.

The first change suggested is to limit the power of the Bishop in appointing preachers to their work. This is a stroke, the result of which would be to obliterate both the episcopacy and presiding eldership from our church, which is a co-operative superintendency out of which our itinerancy comes, and by whom it is perpetuated. The necessity of these superintendents has long since passed out of its trial state. The wise oversight of the two together for just one hundred years has proven their necessity to our church for success, which all Christendom fails to give a parallel to. We can not do without them.

The second suggestion, against which I must demur, is that the question of selection of preachers be left to each congregation, upon a majority of which let the appointment follow. Our older Conferences have about an average of one hundred and fifty charges; about fifteen preachers well known over the Conference. Of course, the people, in petitioning for a preacher, will seek for the best as they know them; and one hundred and fifty charges, with four hundred and eighty churches belonging to them (as we now have in North Mississippi Conference), those petitions being for about fifteen preachers! Imagine the chagrin of one hundred and thirty-five preachers and the disappointment of as many charges! Would we not eminently need our present economy put in practice by a wise Bishop, and presiding elders to represent those charges? All of the appointments could be supplied with a preacher, and each preacher have a work, after but few short meetings of the Bishop and presiding elders, and in three months those disappointed charges would be so in love with their preachers they would say, "Our preachers are here providentially." Why is this? Because it is the duty of the presiding elder to travel over his district four times a year, to see that the preacher does his duty as directed by Discipline, to ascertain the adaptation of the preacher to the work and the harmony of the people with their preacher; he being interested for the work and preacher, occupying a position to view the work of each from a standpoint that enables him to represent the people and preachers as they could not otherwise be represented, which has resulted in more general satisfaction to both country and town churches, and given a continued pastorate no other church can boast of.

Furthermore, our system is most helpful to the young preacher. He does not have to run around and correspond with a great many churches to get to preach; but we send him out at once after he has come into Conference.

The third change is the time of service to be decided by the people. All these changes look to congregationalism, which indeed would be to become congregational, wiping out all the features which distinguish us from that form of government. "A Member at Large" says the "preacher needs a home, a library, an extensive acquaintance, and a general reputation for strength, godliness, and all the attributes of holiness and good character. These things come with permanency." I admit he needs a home, and the Methodist itinerant preacher has more homes than any other class of men living—thank God!—and good ones, too. Most of us have a parsonage furnished on our respective works, and in addition to these the homes of more good people are tendered to us than we can possibly occupy. I grant we need libraries, and most of us older preachers have many more books than our fathers had; yet I grant we need libraries. Who has a better opportunity for an extensive acquaintance than an itinerant preacher? Surely not one who is hedged in by one appointment for a limitless time? As for reputation, for strength, the itinerant preacher is constantly at the school of gymnastics (so to speak), where his faith, mind, integrity to God are tried; and I may modestly say, a class of more "strength" to draw men, to reach men, to enlighten men and to endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ is yet to be found. As for "godliness and all the attributes of holiness and good character," these have been their characteristics, in the main, and they have come without permanency in one locality. "A Member at Large" gives as an argument in favor of his position the following questions: "Who goes to New York without hearing her great divines? Who would ever hear them if one year they were in New York City, another in Albany, or Schenectady? It is possible they have grown up to greatness in New York; but New York never made them divines, or great divines. Their special talents, with close application, and the grace of God, which is greater, has made them great divines, if so they be. Their spending a lifetime in one congregation does not prove they can be heard by more people there than if they were to change every four years from one city to another, but the contrary. As an example, the apostles were traveling men from city to city of no mean order. Yet wonderful success. "A Member at Large" says: "Two generations have listened in one church to Palmer." With profound respect for the reputation of dear Dr. Palmer, that does not say if he had spent four years, each in eight cities he would not have charmed more by his preaching and given more people the benefit of his godly example than he has in New Orleans. Furthermore, there is but one Palmer, one Talmage now, and one Spurgeon just gone, whose place is not filled yet. We can not make such men as these a criterion for the government of any church. We must adopt methods to most speedily meet the wants of the largest number of perishing humanity, and that method, we believe, is to rotate talents or gifts. Four years' faithful work on a charge, as a rule, will reach most all that a preacher can reach. His successor, being of different style, will very soon reach those not affected by himself.

Let us not disturb our present system of appointing and changing preachers.

South Louisiana Missions.

MR. EDITOR: What a valuable budget of good things your issue of Nov. 17 contained! Contributions from so many of the brethren on so many different subjects gave it greater variety and added to its usual interest. Bro. F. N. Parker's contribution on "Domestic Missions" was particularly interesting to us. Having spent this year in this, perhaps, the greatest Catholic town in the State, and having visited different parts of the Opelousas district during the year, we think we have learned something of the deplorable condition of the masses, spiritually.

While the Louisiana Conference has against great odds, and under great difficulties, gradually grown, and might under the old regime continue to reach many under Protestant influence, and thus gain slowly, we think we should no longer delay a united effort to adopt a successful method, if possible, to reach the heathen at our doors. There are thousands of these people in our midst, who have not been, and evidently can not be, reached by our usual methods. Their parents before them would not attend our churches, neither will the present generation. Where is the remedy? As Bro. Parker said, "the field is as truly missionary as Mexico," and to reach these heathen, French-speaking missionaries are indispensable. But French-speaking missionaries will, in our judgment, accomplish nothing if the service is held in our churches. There must be a new departure. Public halls or tents must be used in town, and school-houses or tents in the country. The inveterate prejudice against our churches can only be removed by the sound conversion of the prejudiced. They must be reached by extraordinary means, if reached at all. If the heathen perish in Mexico, and elsewhere, they certainly perish here in our midst. If it be true that men must be born again, and live holy lives, keeping the commandments of God to be saved, thousands all around us are in the broad road that leads to hell. Shall we delay help indefinitely? Who has a plan or a proposition to offer? If holy, consecrated French-speaking men can be found, can we not find ministers and laymen enough in the New Orleans and Opelousas districts to sustain one in each district? How much would be required? Five hundred dollars for a single man. Could not fifty men be found who would pay $20 each, or one hundred men to pay $10 each, yearly? If some one else has a better plan, let him speak out.

H. ARMSTRONG.

Biblical Institutes.

I have been an interested reader of all the recent articles published in "our Advocate" on the above-mentioned subject. The one written by Bro. Franklin N. Parker fully sets forth its design and the much-desired good to be attained. Let it be definitely understood, however, that it is not a system for the instruction of the educated, exclusively, but an opportunity afforded the rank and file of our church membership, not necessarily Methodist, for studying the elements and principles of Scripture teaching; a time and place where, for two or three weeks, Christians of various evangelical denominations might gather, like the Bereans of old, and "search the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so."

The Seashore Camp Ground has been suggested as a convenient and desirable place for conducting a Biblical Institute—none better suited in this section for accommodating all who would attend. The time for such an instructive work would, beyond question, be immediately after the close of the annual camp meeting, when the hearts and minds of the majority would incline to study "along this line." Fanned by the refreshing zephyrs of the Mexican Gulf, and opportunity afforded for laying in its exhilarating waters, together with the advantages of health-giving artesian well water and congenial associations, what location more inviting to the tired student of our colleges and wearied layman of our towns and cities adjacent!

As a member of its Board of Trustees, and a tent owner, I deliberately place my name on record as favoring the movement for establishing a Biblical Institute and conducting same on the Seashore Camp Ground.

What the church of to-day needs, more than anything else, is closer and more intelligent Bible study—"the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Let us acquire soldierly skill in its use.

Thanksgiving at Millsaps College.

We had an interesting Thanksgiving service in our college chapel to-day. The sermon was preached by the Rev. A. F. Watkins, and was greatly enjoyed by the faculty and students. As Methodists in Mississippi, we have occasion for profound gratitude in the prosperity attending our new college. We have enrolled one hundred and thirty-six pupils, and others have pledged their purpose to enter soon. With very few exceptions, the conduct of the students is worthy of all praise. It is understood that no wrong-doing will be allowed here. We shall seek to have such a state of things that it will be universally regarded as a badge of honor for a young man to be connected with our student body.

It has been decided to have our special dedication service in connection with our commencement exercises next June.

Bishop Galloway will begin a series of lectures to the students very soon, and those who contemplate coming should enter as soon as possible.

Attention, Brethren!

Members of and visitors to the Louisiana Conference will please—

1. Buy tickets from the place of embarkation to Lake Charles, if possible. If not, buy to place of taking another road, and buy from that point to this.

2. Be sure and get a certificate wherever ticket is purchased; or you may fail to get the benefit of the reduction on returning.

3. Those coming on the Southern Pacific road will, on arrival, take the street car to L. Kaufman's store, within one block of the Methodist Church, and walk from thence to church.

4. Those coming by the Watkins road will take the dummy car to door of the church, where they will be met and conveyed to their homes.

5. Trains on the Southern Pacific road arrive at 4:30 P. M. and start 2 A. M. Those on the Watkins road arrive at 11:30 A. M. and 7 P. M.

Brethren coming on the Southern Pacific road had better come on the evening train, and thereby save hotel bills.

The usual reduction will be given by the roads on the certificate plan, and on that alone; therefore, the importance of procuring certificates.

The Watkins road kindly proposes one fare for round trip to parties purchasing tickets at stations from Alexandria southward.

Tickets will be on sale from the 10th to the 14th, inclusive.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

It affords us pleasure to publish this personal:

Married in Grenada, Miss., Nov. 22, 1892, by Rev. Thos. J. Newell, Rev. J. J. White, D.D., of the North Mississippi Conference, and Mrs. Margaret W. Markum.

The ADVOCATE sends its congratulations.

We have received the specimen number of the Memphis Christian Advocate and Western Methodist, J. W. Boswell, D.D., editor. This specimen is good. Dr. Boswell has had large experience in the editorial chair, and brings also earnestness and devotion, and we predict that his paper will take rank with the best of the Advocates. It is to be the organ of the Memphis Conference.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Orleans Sabbath-school Superintendents' and Teachers' Union will take place Tuesday, Dec. 6, at 7:30 P. M., in the Coliseum Place Baptist Church. The subject for discussion will be the matter of organizing "home classes" for the study of the Sabbath-school lessons. All are invited to attend.

During the remainder of the year 1892 Rev. J. L. Caldwell, D.D., will lecture on the International Sabbath-school Lessons every Friday, at 7:30 P. M., in the lecture room of the First Presbyterian Church.

Missionary Debt and the Mississippi Conference.

No recent reports from the district solicitors, and no large offerings from any of our brethren to show their gratitude to God and their desire to advance the kingdom of Christ on earth.

Dr. Lambuth writes me, under date of Nov. 14: "We are to day in receipt of telegram from Bishop Hendrix at Lynchburg, Va.: 'Twenty-five hundred dollars raised in a parlor meeting for payment of debt.' The enterprise has met with no reverse at any Conference yet. On the contrary, every one has provided for their proportion."

The money yet waits for the young man who will go as missionary to Japan. T. L. MELLE.

A Graduate's Recital.

On Saturday evening, Nov. 26, at eight o'clock, the two hundred and fourteenth Studio Recital of Pilscher's Studio of Music took place, the occasion being the first public vocal recital given by Miss Carrie T. Pilscher, of the graduation class of the season of 1892-1893. Miss Pilscher has a lovely soprano voice, and her singing of "I know that my Redeemer liveth," "O for the wings of a dove," "Roberto, O lucche adoro," "The quest" by Dr. Pilscher, "Valse song from Romeo and Juliet," "Et incarnatus from Dr. Pilscher's Second Mass," a difficult recitative and aria from Freischütz, and the dramatic and soul-inspiring "Incantatus," produced a magical effect on her listeners, who filled the studio parlors to overflowing. By the performance of her difficult programme Miss Pilscher added fresh laurels to the reputation of the studio.

COMMENDED BY THE HIGHEST AUTHORITY.

From Ex-President Hayes: "It is a valuable work. I have subscribed for two copies."

Dr. Elliott Coues, author of "Birds of the Northwest," says: "It is a really notable work."

Prof. C. J. Maynard, author of the "Birds of Eastern North America," says: "Contains the best pictures of the species which I have ever seen."

Dr. J. S. Newberry, President Academy of Science, says: "The work is accurately and tastefully prepared, and I take pleasure in recommending it as the most attractive popular exposition of ornithology yet given to the public."

From Prof. Wm. D. Hornaday, Taxidermist, U. S. National Museum: "I have carefully compared the figures in 'The Birds of North America' with those in Audubon's great work, and am free to say that they are more accurate in outline as well as more faithfully colored to nature."

Samples of plates and text sent to any address on receipt of twenty-five cents in postage stamps.

North Mississippi Conference.

Some Old-Time Exhorters.

North Mississippi had some mighty exhorters in the early days when Methodism was being planted and rooted in this territory. The present state and condition of the church here is due largely to their zeal and wide influence for good. Archibald Crockett and Reuben Ellis, both ordained preachers—Ellis a traveling preacher—will go down to history as great exhorters. Each had in him the fire and the fervor that stirred men's souls.

Bro. Crockett, a relative of "Devy Crockett," could tie on to any sort of a sermon, and in fifteen minutes have the duller audience stirred to the highest pitch of religious excitement. He was a man of deep piety, of fine character, of burning zeal and of red-hot glowing fervor in speech. How he stirred men and moved them to immediate action! "He was a flame of fire" everywhere he went. Exhortation was his gift. The pastor once preached a long and a strong sermon on infant baptism, and asked Bro. Crockett to conclude. He arose and began with the prophecy of Joel about God pouring out his Spirit on all flesh, and your sons and your daughters prophesying, and told how God had ordained strength out of the mouths of babes and sucklings; and soon the power of God fell on the people and the altar was crowded with mourners and a score or more of souls were happily converted. He knew God's Word and knew how to wield it for good.

Reuben Ellis was the better preacher of the two, but not nearly so gifted in exhortation, but still a man of uncommon gifts and of great power on all public occasions where exhortation was in order, as it always is in religious meetings.

"Uncle Johnnie Young," long a local preacher, but the last few years of his life a member of the Conference, was another exhorter whose influence for good was very extensive. He could not preach much, did not seem to understand the build and make-up of a sermon, but in exhortation he was a man of great influence and power, and his help was much sought after. He devoted the greater part of his long life to preaching to the negroes, among whom he was held in the highest honor and esteem. Many of them—perhaps many thousands, of them—will rise up in the great day and claim him as a spiritual father. His work was owned of God. He was supported and greatly encouraged in it by Bishop Laine, to whose sermons he preached for many years. "Uncle Johnnie," as he was called, was married five times; the last time, when he was eighty-six years old, to a worthy widow who was eighty-three.

Neither of them could hear thunder, but for all that they lived happily together for some years. Some vicious dogs tell about the dear old man and fore him up so badly that he died after a few days' intense suffering. The dear old man was quaint and very peculiar. In a crowded church, in the midst of a great religious excitement during dog days in August, he said: "Let us all pray. Jim, you pray, and Jack, while Jim prays you burn a rag." That was long ago, and in a plantation congregation.

Robert Thorp was another exhorter of wide reputation and of splendid influence wherever known. His gift was all along one line, and he knew it. He attended all the protracted and camp meetings far and near, and accomplished a vast amount of good by his labors in the pulpit and in the altar. His power over an audience was indeed wonderful, and seemed to be electrical, for it took effect as soon as he began to speak. The generation of exhorters seems now to be nearly extinct. The gift is largely lost, or God does not call men to this work as he once did, or, calling them, they do not answer. The Quarterly Conference of the Pontotoc circuit urged Bro. Thorp for a year or two to take license to preach, but he insisted that he was called of God to exhort, and not to preach. At last, however, he consented to try, and license was granted. His first appointment was ten miles west of his home, which was in the suburbs of the town of Pontotoc. The day came and Bro. Thorp mounted his horse and started across the flatwoods. He gave himself just time to ride to the church by the hour for preaching. He rode along, all alone and in a meditative mood. At last he pulled out his old-time London watch, and lo! it was five minutes to eleven. He began to look for the church, to which he had often been, but in place of a church n farm-house, that he did not recognize, stood near by. He rode up to the back gate, and hailed to inquire the way. A lady came to the door, and threw up her hands, and said: "Why, Mr. Thorp, what are you doing back here? What did you come home for?" "Why, Nancy, is that you? I thought I was at or near the church. Now I know that God did not call me to preach." The next day the old brother went to see how or where he made this blunder and turned back home. About five miles out a tree had fallen across the road, and the wagon had made a road around the roots of it, and the horses and cattle a path around the top of it, and so his horse had gone around one way and come back the other. The old man was so engaged in prayer or sermon that he did not notice what his horse had done, and did not know his own home when he came up on the wrong side of it. At the next quarterly meeting Bro. Thorp gave up his license to preach and continued to exhort as he lived.

These are a few of the exhorters who helped to open this wide field, and make it ready for the crop that now grows upon it.

Some Laymen.

Any history of Methodism in North Mississippi that leaves out of the count the influence of hundreds of godly and God-fearing laymen will be a failure, so far as the main facts and the real factors are concerned. The personal observation and knowledge of the present scribe is too limited to enter upon a full presentation of this theme and of these characters. Indeed, the field is so large, and the characters so numerous, that it would require a book to cover the one and to include the other. The list of names alone would fill column after column of the Advocate. This paper will contain the names of only a few of the laymen who wrought in this field, and these the names of men who labored in one small corner of the large vineyard. My personal recollections, back in the forties, are limited to the Pontotoc circuit. Later I have learned more of the laymen over a wider extent of territory. Bro. Webb, long a school teacher, and afterwards Secretary of State, an impetuous speaker, a fine teacher, a perfect Hercules in body and mind, exercised a fine influence in favor of Christianity, and in the councils of the church, over a wide section of country in North Mississippi. The same is said of Col. R. C. Clark, who yet abides on this side of the river. Col. Clark was not an educated man, but he was then, and is yet, a wise man, and a safe counselor in all the affairs of the church. Marion J. Davis, a steward, and Newton Davis, a class leader, a

Mr. Bolton, and Stephen Daggett, who was the United States land agent at Pontotoc when the Indians were leaving this country, were all prominent and influential men in the early church in this country. C. W. Martin, a merchant, and long a class leader and steward in the church, to whom I am under obligation for help when getting ready to join Conference, wielded a mighty influence for good wherever he was known. When his sight began to fail, one eye grew near-sighted and the other long-sighted, so that he never wore glasses, but rested his eyes by reading with one eye with the book or paper close to him, and with the other with the book as far from him as his arm would allow. My father, W. B. Porter, stood aside by these men. He was somewhat above the average run of our laymen of that day and time in point of intelligence and general reading; so I have been told. He was fond of reading good books, fond of controversy, particularly theological discussions, and I judge from the books he left, and the notes on the margins of them, and from manuscript notes left, that he was well up in the discussions of that day. He wrote a great deal, and in this case the inquiry, or habit, of the father is visited on the son. My father, though not licensed, was gifted in exhortation, and read one of Wesley's Sermons to the people when the preacher failed to come.

All these, and many hundreds more, were men of prayer, who prayed in their closets and families, and led the congregations in song and worship, often doing as much public work as many of the preachers do now. My father, Col. Clerk, Marion Davis, and many others, conducted funeral services when there was no preacher present. They exhorted and called mourners and carried on revivals of religion till the preacher came. They did a great work for God. My father was a consumptive and a very feeble man, and so was greatly hindered in the work. He died when he was twenty-eight years old, in January, 1847.

Stephen Daggett kept up family worship for forty years, and, though an intelligent man, and long recording steward, was never heard to pray in public, and never prayed audibly in his family. He gathered his family in the parlor, night and morning, read a portion of God's Holy Word, and then all knelt for a few minutes, when he would say, "Amen," and the family would disperse. This was family worship. He told me on his dying-bed that it had been the sorrow of his life that he could not frame the language of audible prayer. He was gifted with his pen, and his handwriting was a thing of beauty that we rarely ever see now. Down to his last day he wrote with a goose quill and made his own pen.

My father saw the humorous side of everything. God put him out that way. I used often to hear him laugh heartily about one quarterly meeting he attended. One of the stewards reported ten pounds of wool collected as quarters. The question arose as to what disposition should be made of that wool, and how it should be applied. My father made a motion to turn it over to Britton R. Webb, then recording steward, and require him to pay the market price for it, and divide the money between the preacher in charge and the presiding elder. This motion was supported by a speech on the size of Bro. Webb's feet, the breadth, depth and thickness of his understanding, the large part of him that was exposed to the cold ground, the great danger he was in of catching his death of cold and the immense amount of wool it required to keep his pedal extremities in good, warm socks. Webb wore, as well as I remember, No. 11 shoes. Col. Clark moved to turn the wool over to the preacher in charge, Bro. C. C. Glover, as I remember. This motion was supported by a humorous, if not able, speech on the size of Bro. Glover's feet—only two numbers less than Bro. Webb's. All the arguments that applied to Bro. Webb applied to Bro. Glover, with this additional argument against Bro. Webb and in favor of Bro. Glover: Bro. Webb was in the school-room nearly all winter by the fire, where he did not need socks, and Bro. Glover was on the circuit, where he was greatly exposed. Bro. Glover got the wool.

What has been said of these laymen in this small circle, as to their characters and influence for good, and their power in forming the conditions for future success, is true, to a greater or less extent, of every work and corner of this territory. This is only a bird's-eye view of the whole field.

Some Lay Women.

In the last day, when God makes up his jewels and makes out the final and eternal awards to his servants, and comes to the Methodist people and to those placed by his providence in North Mississippi, what an host of good women will come up from all over this country and claim a "right to the tree of life" in the name of Christ! They helped to plant the tree of Methodism in this country, and they nursed it with prayer and watered it with their tears. They brought up their children in the faith, fed the hungry, clothed the naked, visited the prisoner, cared for the sick and gave more than cups of cold water in the name of Christ. What mothers they were to the weary itinerant, and what friends to the infant church! The names of all of them will never be written in any single book, only in the "Lamb's Book of Life." They are all in the memory and heart of God. Few of them, comparatively, took any public part in the services of the church in the early days. It was not the fashion for women to do so then. They were the queens of home, the mothers and matrons of their children, and often the unseen power behind the throne in all the work of the church. In all matters of womanly modesty and of deep piety, in the inward adorning of the heart—the true glory of Christian womanhood—in those virtues and graces that commend the gospel of Christ, they were not one whit behind the women of this or of any other age. They helped to make the church whose history we read now, and whose larger and fuller blessings we enjoy. We owe them a debt that can never be paid in this world. In that day, in all the days of Methodism and of the Christian Church, there have been here and there, in almost every community, a few women who came to the front and took a prominent and active part in the public worship and affairs of the church. It is a matter of congratulation and of devout thankfulness to God that we have come to a time when our godly women have a larger field for usefulness in the work of the church. May God graciously guide them in it! I could call a long list of godly women who lived along in the forties and wielded a wide influence for good in North Mississippi. Very few of them remain.

My father, afterwards Mrs. Merrell, I knew when I was a small boy, and she was a potent power for good in a very large circle of country. She rode in a fine carriage and wore fine clothes, though they were perfectly plain. Her heart, her hand and her purse were always open to the poor and needy. Her carriage was often found at the doors of the humblest, poor people in her reach. She had no children and few cares, and so she spent her time going to big meetings, and in looking after widows and the sick and poor. She went about doing good.

A New Hampshire woman aged eighty years, when asked recently how she had kept herself so vigorous and healthy, replied, "I never allowing myself to fret over things I can not help; by taking a nap, and sometimes two, every day of my life; by never taking my washing, ironing and baking to bed with me; and by doing all the various wheels of a busy life with an implicit faith that there is a brain and a heart to this great universe, and that I could trust them both."

She prayed in public and labored at the altar in all the meetings she attended. Many were the souls she led to Christ. At the close of the war she found herself poor, but never grumbled or repined for one single moment, but took the change cheerfully and with thanks giving unto God. She often said to me: "Why, my son, I have grown in grace and in the knowledge and love of God much faster since the war than I did before the war. Really I did not know, till God took them all away, how much my negroes and my worldly cares were in my way in my race after glory." She was a great reader of good books, especially of theological books. When death came she was going, regularly, through Clark's Commentary for the seventh time. There were few of our very best preachers that knew more of God's Word and Methodist Arminian theology than she. Her fine library fell into the hands of her grand-nephew, Rev. S. D. Long, now of Fountain City, East Tennessee.

Miss Mary Cherry, now an old woman well-known for the summons home, a sister of Rev. S. M. Cherry, of the Tennessee Conference, in her palmy days was a great power among the Methodist people of North Mississippi. She was masculine in feature, form and mind, and in all the work she did for God and his church. What a leader she was of God's hosts in singing and in prayer at camp and protracted meetings! Her voice was stronger than the voice of anyone else, and she knew by memory all the old songs. Anywhere in a mile of a camp meeting on a still night it was common to hear some one say, "Well, I know Miss Mary Cherry is there." When she sang you heard every word of the hymn. There were no organs and no choir then. During the war she devoted herself to the sick and wounded soldiers, and she pushed her way through the Federal lines and procured from the American Bible Society tens of thousands of Bibles and Testaments and brought them out to be distributed among the soldiers of the Southern Army. Miss Mary Cherry did not seem to know what the word "fear" meant. She was now resting within the territory of this Conference.

Mrs. Mary Davis, wife of Gen. Reuben Davis, of Aberdeen, was known and her influence for good was felt all over North Mississippi, and in the regions beyond. Everywhere she went she was trying to do some good, to lead some soul to Christ, or to some timid Christian to full consecration or to sanctification. She was a very gifted woman and very peculiar in some of her ways. She wielded an accomplished and gifted pen, and wrote often for our church periodicals, and for some of the magazines. She was a class leader among the ladies of her church. Whenever she went to church at home, and she did, she always did, she stood and stood for a moment or two full-face to the congregation, no matter how large it was. When asked why she did this she said: "I am looking for the members of my class. I want them all in the house of God on time." Whether at home, or in the country, or on a visit, or with her husband while he was in Washington in Congress, she was always engaged in some soul-saving work, some good deed for some needy one. What a power she was in prayer, in public or in private, and especially at the bedside of the sick and the dying! She has long been in heaven.

GILKROY.

This sorrow builds the shining ladder up, Whose golden rounds are our calamities, Whereon our firm feet planting, nearer God The spirit climbs and hath its eyes unsealed. True is it that Death's face seems stern and cold When he is sent to summon those we love; But all God's angels come to us disguised: Sorrow and sickness, poverty and death, One after another lift their frowning masks, And we behold the seraph's face beneath. All radiant with the glory and the calm Of having looked upon the front of God.

—James Russell Lowell.

The Life in the Home.

The only way to make the world a better place to live in is for each individual to make himself a better person to live with. How to live with others is, therefore, the great question for the decision of every human being. In its answer is involved the solution of the problems which vex the social philosophers, and to enable them to settle it is the prime object of Christianity.

If we begin with the application of the rule to the simplest routine of daily existence, the extension of it into all the rules of life will become easier. The most trying place in which to start is the home, the family itself, and yet the home is the great school of manners, and for the education of the heart. The very certainty of responsive family affection may easily develop disregard for the restraints and requirements of the wholesome rule. It is using a dangerous license to assume that because this affection is natural and is tolerant, forgiving and charitable, it can not be abused, and that a carelessness in the treatment of others which would be intolerable and impossible elsewhere is permissible and defensible in the circle of the family.

If in the narrower relations of the family, of marriage and fraternity, people scrupulously and sensitively regard each other, they will acquire a habit which will enable them to live with all other people, however they may encounter them, and wherever.—Chautauquan.

Rest in God.

Human nature is restless. This restlessness is partially caused by sin, but it is also due to the greatness of human nature. Both what is worst in us and what is best in us are fruitful of unrest.

For our sin there is no refuge save the infinite mercy. For the immortal hunger of our hearts there is no satisfaction save the divine fulness. Our longings and aspirations become harmonious and steady only when divinely inspired. He is at rest who can say: "My soul waiteth upon God. My expectation is from him." He can also say: "He is my rock and my defense. I shall not be moved."

Circumstances are fluctuating, our nature is tumultuous and discordant, our fellow-men may deceive or disappoint us, those who are ever true may be removed from us; but God is changeless, he is infinitely loving, he is faithful, he is eternal. Confidence in the love, the wisdom and the fidelity of God will give us rest. Life's restless sea with all its roaring billows of uncertainty is held in the hollow of God's hand. The stormy waves are tranquil, but the ocean of life is lasting, and God holds it forever. There is always peace in its depths. The waves are only on the surface.—Northern Christian Advocate.

A New Hampshire woman aged eighty years, when asked recently how she had kept herself so vigorous and healthy, replied, "I never allowing myself to fret over things I can not help; by taking a nap, and sometimes two, every day of my life; by never taking my washing, ironing and baking to bed with me; and by doing all the various wheels of a busy life with an implicit faith that there is a brain and a heart to this great universe, and that I could trust them both."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Dec. 4, 1892.

By REV. WM. H. LAURENCE, D. D.

Work among the Gentiles.

Acts xiv, 8-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"In his name shall the Gentiles trust." (Matt. xii, 21)

Lycania, the district in which Lystra and Derbe were situated, was "bare and desolate." The two cities mentioned were small, "with a rude dialect and primitive superstition." The fact that no mention is made of a synagogue, or of any Jews, suggests that if any of the "house of Israel" were of Lystra, the number must have been very small. At some place where the crowds would gather Paul and Bernabas preached to them, and on such an occasion the leading incident of our lesson occurred.

SIMMONS-KILPATRICK.—At the Methodist Church, Verona, Miss., Nov. 16, 1892, by Rev. J. B. Stone, Mr. E. C. Simmons, of Magnolia Springs, Texas, to Miss Susie Kilpatrick, of Verona, Miss.

OBITUARIES.

JOHNSON.—Our friend, IRENE LOWERY JOHNSON, second daughter of Capt. J. W. and Mrs. Fannie Johnson, died at her home near Jackson, Miss., July 9, at the early age of fourteen. Almost featureless in form, a model in mirth, with a nature as merry as the sunbeam, she promised much for life, and life promised much for her. Just entering young womanhood, with superior native gifts, she had begun to show the grace of a cultivated mind and heart. She had just closed her first session at Whitworth College; but hardly had her holidays begun when typhoid fever set in which robbed the family of a jewel and society of a promised benefactress. She lived not for self, but for others. She had a warm and generous heart. Always ready to respond to any kindness shown her, and her self-denial for others was often spoken of, while her devotion to her parents was beautiful.

Other as a college girl, the president says: "She was a model girl; never gave us anything but pleasure during her stay with us." Mrs. Fitzhugh writes: "I can not recall a single harsh expression coming from her, or one disquieting act during the session spent with us. She was gentle and loving to everyone."

Our young friend early heeded the injunction, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." At the age of eleven she joined the Methodist Church, and, we believe, thus early "passed from death unto life." Her devotion to the church was striking in one so young. She loved the Sunday-school, and was a valued member of the Epworth League. A school-mate says: "I have never witnessed such a sweet Christian character in so young a person as I saw in Irene." She loved God and all his children; and so fulfilled the law.

"If life be not in length of days, In silvered locks and furrowed brow, But living to the Savior's praise, How few have lived so long as thou!" "Though earth may boast one gem the less, May not even heaven the richer be? And myriads on thy footsteps press To share thy blest eternity."

Rose Hill, Miss. Mrs. Geo. H. Thompson.

McLENDON.—Died, Oct. 20, WILLIAM ALEXANDER, only son of Alex. and Lizzie McLendon, aged three years. The house is lonely, and our hearts are sad for thy absence, sweet child.

"Little Menly suffered; but in all his sweet disposition of love was ever present. A few moments before he died he pressed over his arms around his mother's neck, looking in her eyes as though to say, 'Weep not, precious mama!' Then, unclasping them, his little dimpled hands clasped his father in a last embrace, and with that word, 'Papa,' trembling on his lips, his pure spirit winged its flight to God, out of the shadow of the sun before this world had made him a partner of sorrow and of sin. Weep not, dear loved ones; for the silence that falls upon sin and pain, is the deathless joy of an angel's strain. Aunt Lita, he loved you so. It was hard to give him up; but, oh! your little pet is waiting for you at the beautiful gate; and, sorrowing parents, you have a jewel in the Savior's crown; and, grandma and grandpa, your little Menly is only one more gem around the great white throne. He has gone where songs seraphim Now seem calling from the sky: He is up among the angels, But we will meet him by-and-by."

Cousin FLORENCE.

SWAYZE-FRANKS.—SWAYZE was born in Yazoo county, Miss., Jan. 8, 1840. When the late war broke out, he joined the army early in 1861. He was a brave, gallant soldier, a good officer. He was wounded on April 7, in Pickens county, Ala., in the last skirmish in this department. He was married to Miss Mary V. O'Reilly, Dec. 20, 1865, with whom he lived nearly twenty-seven years. He joined the M. E. Church, South, Oct. 4, 1877, and has been a faithful steward. He was remarkably kind to his pastor.

Bro. Swayze was a good, obedient son, a true friend, a liberal supporter of his church, a wise counselor, always successful in business. But the most beautiful part of his character was seen in his home life. He was one of the most kind, tender and affectionate husbands, devoted and generous to his three sons, faithful and true to his mother-in-law; could control everyone without appearing to do so.

He died Sept. 30, 1892, after a long illness, but without murmuring; and on Saturday, Oct. 1, we laid him away to rest. The services were attended by a very large gathering of relatives and friends.

D. C. LANFORD.

YARBROUGH.—Died Sept. 10, 1892, near Liverpool, La., EUDORA VIVIAN, little daughter of Thomas and Winnie Yarbrough, aged three years eleven months and fifteen days. "The sad messenger Death has entered and taken from this happy circle one of its rarest flowers, little Eudora, a sweet and promising child, loving and loved by all. She was, indeed, a bud plucked from earth to bloom in heaven. Her earthly pilgrimage was short; but she has been transplanted to a purer home, where she can bloom and shine forever in the arms of him who careth for the little lambs. Little Eudora will be missed at home—ah! sadly missed—but heaven will be sweeter. May God bless the parents, sisters and brothers and loved ones, and help them to realize that God, in his infinite mercy and goodness, worketh all things for the good of his children; and may he heal their wounded hearts, and bring them nearer that home where their little one is waiting, and where parting is no more! Her grandpa, JOHN YARBROUGH.

O'QUIN.—Rev. E. B. O'QUIN, son of T. J. and M. L. O'Quin, was born in Jefferson county, near Red Lick, Miss., April 3, 1870. Bro. O'Quin connected himself with the M. E. Church, South, at the age of fourteen, August, 1885, and was licensed to preach five months after—January, 1884, under the presiding eldership of W. L. C. Hunslett. Graduated at Emory College, June 6, 1892; returned home June 30, and died at home Sept. 7, 1892.

In the death of Bro. O'Quin the church sustains a great loss. He was getting ready to enter Conference this winter. He was a bright young man, and would have made a useful worker in the church. But God had a better place for him. He had lived as we had hoped for, he would have had to go through conflicts and trials; but now those are all over, and we feel assured that he is now hasting in the sunshine of God's glory.

Bro. O'Quin leaves an aged father and mother, four brothers and one sister to mourn his death. Weep no more, fond parents; thy son is not dead, but sleeping, and in the morning of the great resurrection he will arise from his sleep and be found singing with the angels around the throne of God. Let us all strive to meet him there! B. W. Lewis, Pastor.

BOYLS-STELLA.—BOYLS was born Dec. 31, 1890, and died Oct. 26, 1892.

The bitter cry of sorrow has been pressed to the lips of every member of that Christian family—father, mother and two little brothers. Gentle-spirited, lovely little Stella has been removed to the Father's house of many mansions. A shadow has fallen athwart her home; but, thank God! the sunshine eclipses the shadow. The blessed Savior, touched with a feeling of all our infirmities, does not allow the shadows long to remain. He knows just how to bestow comfort and peace to a saddened heart.

My beloved brother and sister, the Savior knoweth how to bind up a broken heart, and cause everything to work for good to them that love the Lord. Cheer up, bereaved ones; little Stella has been introduced into that mighty throng that stands around the throne of God, singing, "Glory, glory, glory be to God on high!" Be faithful, father, mother and little brothers. Jesus will take care of little Stella until you come. C. C. EVANS, P. C.

Home, Miss.

NEWSOM.—Little ANNIE GRACE, infant daughter of Bro. Chas. D. and Sister Annie McEachin Newsom, died in Sweetwater, Tex., Oct. 28, 1892. The parents were visiting Dr. McEachin, Sister Newsom's father, when the messenger of death called for their darling babe.

Little Annie was the joy of her home and the idol of her hopes, and when the opening bud was plucked, the cloud seemed to shut out the light-house on the shore of earthly ambition. But while earth has been made darker, heaven has been made brighter; and they place their confidence in him who said: "In my Father's house are many mansions. I go to prepare a place for you; and in that city, where 'they need no candle neither light of the sun,' they expect to meet Annie and never part again. C. L. BAOWING.

Sweetwater, Texas.

HORN-JOSEPH DAVIS.—eldest child of Mr. J. R. and Mrs. Anna Horn, was born Oct. 27, 1888, and died at his home on Cane River, near Natchitoches, La., on the morning of Oct. 27, 1892.

The traits of character which had manifested themselves under the wise training of his Christian parents, even at this early age gave promise of a beautiful manhood; but Divine Wisdom, which sees infinitely farther than human, chose to remove him to a higher home. The last night of his stay on earth was one of suffering, and though so young, he frequently called upon God for relief.

His death is a sincere blow to those who loved him, and their only source of comfort in this bitter hour is their hope of a happy reunion beyond the grave. R. H. WYNN.

BUSHNELL.—The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Bushnell was born July 13, 1892, and fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, Oct. 13, 1892. Just four months to the day, a mother's little jewel has been taken from this sinful world.

This bud was too pure for us; so Jesus has taken him home where the little one will never suffer any more. Never was a sweeter little babe! It was so beautiful, so sweet. But Jesus, who gave him, took him away.

Mourn not, dear loved ones; your babe has gone to heaven to live with his sister, and a beautiful little angel is he. Soon we will meet him at the pearly gates, where parting will be no more. His friend, DORIS FISHER.

Ville Platte, La.

A. C. Haffner, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracted a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

will be paid for a recipe enabling us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that the retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. At present the retail price is 20c.

This offer is open until January 1st, 1893. For particulars address the undersigned.

ACME BLACKING is made of pure alcohol, other liquid dressings are made of water. Water costs nothing. Alcohol is dear. Who can show us how to make it without alcohol so that we can make ACME BLACKING as cheap as water dressing, or put it in fancy packages like many of the water dressings, and then charge for the outside appearance instead of charging for the contents of the bottle?

WOLFF & RANDOLPH, Philadelphia.

PIK-RON

is the name of a paint of which a 25c. bottle is enough to make six scratched and dented cherry chairs look like newly finished mahogonies. It will do many other remarkable things which no other paint can do. All retailers sell it.

As Only Daughter of a Deceased Man
When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Heaps also cure all ailments, namely, at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1023 Race Street, Philadelphia, Pa., mailing this paper.

The tone of business in New Orleans has been more cheerful this week, and the general movement brisker not only here, but throughout the country. Larger supplies have rendered money slightly easier here as well as at other financial centres, though the demand has been good for the general purposes of trade, and the active speculation going on in cereals and cotton, especially at Liverpool, and particularly at New York and here. Local securities generally have shown more animation and some improvement in street railroad values. The improvement in the latter was attributed to the agreement of the Board of Audit and Exchange to meet here, where the exchanging of old Louisiana stamps for new clean ones has progressed satisfactorily and with celerity.—Times-Democrat.

Coughing is at once stopped by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Keep it always in the house.

This has been another remarkably eventful week in the world's cotton markets, and the efforts of the bulls and bears to control the situation have been gigantic, their manipulations of prices and their widely distributed published statements in circulars, cables and telegram, causing not only wide, but sometimes wild fluctuations. In fact, the extreme views of even prominent authorities have become so far apart on the size of the crop (ranging from below 6,000,000 bales to 7,500,000 bales), that the public have become very much puzzled, even as to an approximate idea of the situation, which, however, will hardly be soon arrived at unless there is some pronounced development more clearly indicating it.—Times-Democrat.

The reliable and enterprising firm of Franz & Opitz are now occupying their elegant new store, No. 17 Bourbon street, next door to D. H. Holmes. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature of South Carolina looking to the establishment of a home in Columbia for aged and disabled Confederate soldiers.

In the Georgia Legislature, on Nov. 24, a bill was introduced authorizing the governor and treasurer to issue State bonds to the amount of $368,000, to pay off the portion of the public debt maturing. The bill will undoubtedly pass.

The Methodist Episcopal College Presidents' Association has elected the following officers: President King of Cornell, Ia.; president, President T. P. Marsh, of Mount Union College, vice-president, and President Wilder, of the Illinois Wesleyan University, secretary—the three to form the Executive Committee.

Within the past few days New York whisky men have purchased from fifty to sixty thousand barrels of Kentucky whisky through Louisville brokers. It is said the purchasers think Congress will increase the tax on whisky from 90 cents to $1.50 a gallon, and thus they will be able to make a fortune on whisky bought under the 90-cent tax law.

The ninth Annual Convention of the Southern Homeopathic Medical Association, which met in Hot Springs, Ark., adjourned on Nov. 25, after electing officers for the ensuing year. Chicago was decided upon as the next place of meeting, to be held at the time of the meeting of the Medical Congress, which assembles in that city the last week in May, 1893.

The directors of the Young Men's Christian Association of Savannah are considering the question whether the pastor of the Savannah Swedeborgian Church can become an active member of the local branch of the Y. M. C. A. The Y. M. C. A.'s active membership, according to its rules, is to be composed of members in good standing of evangelist churches. This provision bars him out. The Swedeborgian clergymen intend to apply for membership to test the matter.

The Treasurer of the United States, H. E. Becker, has submitted to Secretary Charles Foster the annual report of the operations and condition of the treasury. The net ordinary revenues of the government for the fiscal year were $354,947,574 a decrease of $37,674,663, as compared with the year before. The net ordinary expenditures were $345,023,330, a decrease of $10,349,635. The surplus revenues were put down from $7,339,763 to $9,914,435, including the public debt. The total receipts for the year were $738,401,296, and the expenses $681,019,489.

Having in mind the possibility of an extra session of Congress, Democratic members who are arriving in Washington are beginning to discuss the organization of the next House of Representatives. It is generally believed that Mr. Crisp will be elected again, although quite a number of influential members are confident he will have decided opposition, and particularly from the members who are pronounced tariff reformers. Mr. Crisp is not an advanced tariff reformer, and the opinion prevails that it would be a step backward to again place him in the Speaker's chair.

The amount of cotton marketed last week shows up a little better altogether of last year and the year before than did the amounts marketed in the preceding weeks since the first of September. In the corresponding week of 1890, for example, the crop in which year rose to 8,650,000 bales, the quantity marketed was 347,217 bales; in the year 1891, when the crop rose to the unprecedented figure of 9,035,000 bales, the quantity marketed during the same week was 418,941 bales. In the week just ended, the movement amounted to 340,983 bales—78,000 bales less than last year, and 8,300 bales less than the year before.—Times-Democrat.

FOREIGN.

The International Monetary Conference opened in Brussels last week. The German Reichstag was opened on Nov. 23. The army bill was introduced by Chancellor von Caprivi, who made a most important speech upon the relations existing between France and Germany.

The Cabinet has decided that Parliament shall meet on Jan. 26. Mr. John Morley, Chief Secretary for Ireland, has taken to Dublin a draft of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule bill, which will be submitted to the Irish leaders.

A number of attacks on foreigners are reported from the interior of China and Japan, but no serious injury to life or limb. At Kien Chang, China, R. v. H. S. Phillips and wife, missionaries, had their house burned over their heads and were forced to appeal to the local magistrate for protection.

The House of Commons will present a unique spectacle at the opening of the session. As the Irish parties have decided to sit with the opposition, the anti-ministerial side of the House will be crowded to overflowing. The ministerial benches will be sparsely filled. Some Conservatives rely upon the moral effect of such a sight, but when the Irish members troop in to the government lobby to vote for Gladstone, the effect will be the other way.

The case of the French government against the Panama Canal Company was called in the Court of Appeal on Nov. 25. The defendants are: M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, the chairman of the Board of Directors; M. Charles de Lesseps, his son, vice-chairman; M. Marius Fontanes and Baron Cotta, directors of the company, and M. E. H. L. the well-known contractor. None of the defendants were present. The case was adjourned until Jan. 10, counsel for the defendants guaranteeing that they would then appear. The charges that appear in the indictment, which is a very voluminous document, are breach of trust and misappropriation of funds.

BOOKS.

OUR LITTLE MEN AND WOMEN FOR 1892. Cloth, $1.75; boards, $1.25. With colored frontispiece. Boston: D. Lothrop Company.

Too much can not be said in favor of the bound volume of Our Little Men and Women for 1892. It is seldom that so many bright and well-known writers and artists have united to produce such worth and beauty as this dainty little book represents. There are pretty poems and verses by real verse-makers, stories by story-tellers in sympathy with child-life, bright bits of travel, history and biography, as well as fragments of music here and there to enliven, all embellished with choice illustrations, make up a charming volume to entertain and instruct the real little men and women who are just beginning to read for themselves, and learning how to use their eyes.

THE PANSY FOR 1892. Edited by "Pansy." Cloth, $1.75; boards, $1.25. With colored frontispiece. Boston: D. Lothrop Company.

Charming alike in its pictures and text, the bound volume of The Pansy for 1892 is the peer of its predecessors and its contemporaries. The two leading stories, "Way Stations," by Pansy, and "Little Paul," by the Frisbie School, by Margaret Sidney, will not only interest boys and girls but the older people of the household, for these two writers are universal favorites. The English Literature papers are clear, concise and comprehensive. The American History papers will attract special attention. The Baby's Corner, by Mrs. C. M. Livingston, is dainty and sweet, and rounds out a volume that has something of interest for every one in the family, and for Sunday as well as week-day reading.

SELECT NOTES: A COMMENTARY ON THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSONS FOR 1893. Suggestions to Teachers and Library References. By Rev. F. N. Peloubet, D. D., and M. A. Peloubet. Price, cloth $1.25; interleaved edition, $2. French Morocco, limp, round corners, gilt, $2. Sent post on receipt of price. W. A. Wilde & Co., 25 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

The studies for 1893 for the first six months are taken from the books of Ezra, Haggai, Zechariah, Proverbs, Job, Ecclesiastes, Malachi. The last six months from the books of Acts, Romans, First and Second Corinthians, Ephesians, Colossians, First Peter, and Revelation. The volume contains Christmas, Easter, Temperance and Missionary lessons. Also colored maps, chronologies, two full page illustrations, together with numerous small maps and pictures drawn by Gallagher, Myrick and Beal, illustrating the Bible text. The publishers, in presenting the volume of Select Notes for 1893, are confident that their large experience enables them to offer a lesson help which, beyond all question, meets the needs of teachers and scholars alike. Explanatory, illustrative, doctrinal, practical.

A New Magazine.

Child's Garden, of Story, Song and Play, is to make its appearance with the holiday Christmas Number. It will be a beautifully illustrated paper for the youngest readers, and is composed and edited from the Kindergarten standpoint, to fit the need of the true school and cultured home, as perhaps no other child's magazine has ever aspired to.

Solentific child literature has never been attempted before, and mothers and teachers awake to the new educational thought will hail this magazine with delight. It is to be edited by Andrea Hater, one of the editors of the Kindergarten Magazine, and a well known writer of child literature. The best of writers will contribute. The subscription price is $1 per year. Send same to CHILD-GARDEN, Woman's Temple, Chicago.

Ribot, French Foreign Minister, recently communicated with Lord Roseberry, requesting a statement of the position of the present British Cabinet with reference to the rights of France in Newfoundland. Lord Roseberry, in his response, announced that the present government had adopted the policy of Lord Salisbury with reference to Newfoundland. Sir Charles Tupper, the Canadian High Commissioner, will depart for Canada, Dec. 3. He will take with him the completed commercial treaty between France and Canada. The arrangement includes a stipulation that Canada shall grant a subsidy for a steamship company between Canada and France.

Angilla, Miss.

We have had a gracious revival at Angilla. Bro. Joe J. Jones was with us nine days, preaching three sermons daily. Bro. Jones' preaching was plain and practical, pointed and powerful. He is a man whom the Lord appears to delight in honoring in the conversion of souls. Our church being small, the brethren erected a temporary tabernacle, and the largest congregations that ever assembled for religious service in this place waited daily on his ministry. The oldest settlers say that there never was such a general religious awakening in this community. Thirty accessions to the Methodist Church, thirteen to the other churches, and the entire membership greatly blessed. Bro. Jones was with me in June at Rolling Fork. His work at that place abides and will abide. The sure evidence of spiritual life, as manifested by the great interest taken in all departments of church work, and prohibition in Sharkey county, are largely due to his work among us at that time. Bro. Hawkins and I at Conference will report over a hundred accessions, and expect to report all collections paid in full. I had a very severe attack of malaria this Summer. For about two months I was unable to do any work. My people have been very kind to me during the entire year, but especially so during my illness. God bless them each and all! In the providence of the good Lord, I have been completely restored to health and strength, and feel more determined than ever to do his will. Praise God, from whom all blessings flow! FRANK M. KEEN.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1894.

WHOLE NO. 1894.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Bishop Galloway.

Though it has been more than six years since Dr. Galloway was elevated to the episcopacy, he has never held a session of the Louisiana Conference. We have known him favorably all these years, and yet we have never had the blessing of his presence as our president. In the name of the Louisiana Conference, we extend a hearty welcome to Bishop Galloway, and pray that his work among us and for us may be crowned with the divine blessing. The assistant editor furnishes the following sketch of the Bishop:

Rev. Charles Betts Galloway was born in Kosciusko, Miss., Sept. 1, 1849. While yet a child his father moved to Canton, Miss., where he spent his boyhood. He was converted and joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D. Very soon afterwards he felt called to the ministry, and gave himself up to that work. In the summer of 1868 he graduated at the University of Mississippi, and in a few weeks was licensed to preach. In December following he joined the Mississippi Conference, being but a little over nineteen years of age. Bishop Galloway was a brilliant preacher from the start, and rose rapidly in the estimation of his brethren. Within six years from his joining the Conference he was stationed at Jackson, the capital of the State, and the impress of his ministry is still felt. He was a member of the General Conference of 1882, being probably the youngest member of that body, and at its close was elected editor of this, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, to succeed Dr. Linus Parker, who was at that time elected to the episcopacy. During the same year his alma mater, the University of Mississippi, conferred the title of Doctor of Divinity upon him, and no man in the State has worn it more deservedly. At the expiration of four years—1886—he was elected one of the Bishops of the M. E. Church, South, at the age of thirty-seven. No man has been elected to that high office at so young an age; but time has proved the wisdom of the choice.

During the year just closing he was sent by our college of Bishops as fraternal messenger to the Irish Methodist Conference, and to the Wesleyan Conference, and no man who has crossed the waters in an ecclesiastical or other mission has won for himself more universal applause, or made for himself a name more far-reaching, than did Bishop Galloway. There is no need to speak of the Bishop as a preacher. His pulpit ministrations in the Mississippi Conference for just twenty-four years speak for themselves. His editorial career on this ADVOCATE, as well as his letters from England this year, his "Hand-book of Prohibition" and "Life of Bishop Linus Parker," show him to be a most ready, versatile and forceful writer. The Bishop is untiring in this kind of work, not only writing constantly for a large number of periodicals, but also has on the stocks one or two books, which will, doubtless, appear shortly. As a disputant, "more than one ecclesiastical bigot has been made to bite the ground in bitter agony." The prohibition sentiment in the State of Mississippi is largely due to his hold championship in years gone by. He is enthusiastic on the subject of education—Mississippi College, whose career is unparalleled, being not only evidence of this, but the crowning work of his life to date.

The Gamblers and the Grand Jury.

Some weeks ago we mentioned the fact that Judge Ferguson, of the Criminal Court of this city, had given the grand jury a special charge in relation to the gambling dens in operation here. The result was that some of the dens were closed up. It was hoped by many that the grand jury would follow with earnestness the course marked out by Judge Ferguson, and "make it so hot" for the professional gamblers as to cause them to retire from our midst. Those hopes "have faded like a wreath of mist at even." The grand jury made its final report to the court last week, and a remarkable document is that same report. Referring to this subject, the report says:

Acting upon that part of your charge to them, under date Sept. 22, regarding gambling houses, peremptory orders were on that day issued to the effect of police to have all gambling houses closed in this city, and subsequent reports from him are to the effect that all houses of this nature have been closed. The vice of gambling has been so openly paraded in our streets, that to have it suppressed immediately seemed to be an impossibility; but the grand jury think that, with the able assistance of the chief of police, they have, if only for a time, succeeded in, if not closing entirely all places of such character, at least a greater part of them.

The reader will see from this that the jury admit that the action taken in the premises had the effect of closing "a greater part" of the gambling houses. That is simply an admission that the closing of these places can be effected. Why, then, should this jury—after having shown to the world the possibility of executing the law against gambling—put in its report a plan for licensing gambling, and urge the adoption of it, in the very face of its own declaration that such a licensing would be unconstitutional? Hear what this jury says on the constitutionality of licensing gambling:

According to the State laws, to entertain for one minute the advisability of licensing or in any way countenancing such a law, would be unconstitutional, and, therefore, impossible, unless the law covering the same be revised at the next session of our Legislature.

Now, that sounds exactly right, and yet this wonderful jury proposes a plan of license. According to its own statement, it deliberately proposes to ignore the law and to act outside of the Constitution. Here is the proposition:

We would, therefore, suggest and earnestly request that the city authorities take this matter in hand and institute a system, somewhat, if not similar, at least in the same order, as that put in practice by our late mayor, Jos. A. Shakspeare. We mean a donation system, the collection and distribution of which shall be under the direction of the mayor, whereby the city would derive the benefit from donations demanded and received from these houses; said donations to be applied exclusively to increase the different allotments made to the charitable institutions of this city.

The deliberateness and cold bloodedness which will enable a jury to state the unconstitutionality of a scheme, and in the very next sentence advise its adoption, are enough to take the breath of an ordinary mortal! That men should recommend an unconstitutional scheme through ignorance, is conceivable; but that they should recommend it when they deliberately say in cold type that it is contrary to the Constitution, puts us agape! What is the meaning of such an unheard-of procedure?

They demonstrated that the gambling houses could be closed by closing them. They came into the court and made a report to that effect. They say to license them is unconstitutional. They propose to the City Council that it do that unconstitutional act! Well!

If the City Council could be insulted, it is certainly insulted now, and Judge Ferguson has had a backhanded slap in the face for his temerity in meddling with the gamblers. It does look like we are in a bad way. With the saloons, backed by the City Council, free to establish themselves anywhere, and the gamblers, under the protecting wing of the grand jury, ready to open up wherever they choose, it looks like we are "between the devil and the deep sea." We trust, however, that Judge Ferguson will not remit his efforts on this line. He has the sympathy and prayers of all good people while he is trying to rid us of these evils, and he will win in the end.

"For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win."
"He always wins who sides with God;
To him no chance is lost."

The Bible in the Schools.

For some time past I have had under consideration an idea born of the great need of religious instruction for the masses. In this age of the great advancement of the sciences, when the veriest school-boy has at his fingers' ends the problems that puzzled old and wise heads only a few years ago; when everything is taught that can be thought of for the advancement of the youth of our land, our children are in woeful ignorance of religious instruction. Many will not think with me when the great array of religious pamphlets, lesson books, easy Bible lessons, religious books for children are met with at every turn, and more numerous now than ever, because the facilities are so easy to produce them. With Sunday-school conventions everywhere, the good and wise so deeply interested for the welfare of the young, I yet insist that the woeful ignorance of religious instruction of our youth is something appalling. We have more day-schools now than we ever had before; but, alas! only one hour of religious instruction out of the entire week, and that for those only who attend Sunday-school; and thousands and thousands of children who are punctual at day-school never attend the Sunday-schools. Even if they did, the probability is that in one pitiful, distracted hour they could not acquire the necessary instruction; and here let me say that one of the greatest causes of non-attendance of the Sunday-schools by those who are always punctual at the day-school is the lack of what is termed by the humbler classes, "Sunday clothes." Many a little boy or girl can go half-clothed and barefoot to school; but where is there one who hesitates to go to Sabbath-school in such attire, where everyone strives to wear his or her best? How many children at twelve years old, and even older, who have been carefully taught and trained, who are made to know everything that children can know, have ever read the Bible, or have ever had even the greater portion expounded to them? Many intelligent children know nothing at all about it; and when maturer years are reached, and the education is finished (?), how little time in the hurry and bustle of life to read the Bible, much less to ponder over it! Once in a while a converted one will, or one that is studying for the ministry; but, oh! how small in proportion to thousands and hundreds of thousands that go down to the grave uneducated! We teach the little heathen children to read and write, and give them biblical instruction, that they may be converted to Christianity. That is all well. Then why should our own nearer and dearer ones not have some provision made for them? This is the reason why I write this letter. This is why I urge that you will take into consideration the condition of affairs as regards the religious instruction of our young people. Let the Bible be taught in our day schools, both public and private. Let competent teachers be employed to teach this branch of education, and not only competent, but prayerful religious people, who look not upon the Bible as only a history of the Jews, and a biography of a wonderful man, but one who can teach it with great reverence, and who has pondered and deeply studied it.

Bring the Bible into every-day life of our children until they grow familiar with it. The histories of the Greeks and Romans are carefully taught, and always have been; then why not the Old Testament, which is the best history of the Jews, that one-time grand race, from which our Savior sprung? Then let the New Testament be a blessed hand-book in our schools, for what Christian can live without it? The comfort and hope its soul inspiring passages confer upon the inquiring seeker after religious instruction! Let hand-books of the Bible be made, suiting the requirements of the scholar from the time he begins until he graduates.

Let learned people begin the task, and let not a word be changed or perverted, and we will see the dawn of a grander, nobler century than this nineteenth hundredth.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. T. L. Mellen, P. E.: "Another revival in the Meridian district. Enterprise and Stonewall, Rev. J. W. Chambers, P. C., assisted by Rev. R. F. Witt: 30 accessions, and much good otherwise done."

Rev. M. L. Burton, McComb City, Miss., Nov. 25: "We closed a meeting of two weeks here last Sunday, Nov. 20. Bro. Weems, of Brookhaven, did most of the preaching. While the meeting was not all that could be expected, yet much good was done. Twenty accessions to the church, making in all 75 to date. We hope to be ready in every respect for Conference."

Rev. A. D. Miller, Bowerton circuit, Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, Nov. 21: "Our fourth Quarterly Conference has come and gone, and with it came our much-esteemed residing elder, Rev. R. S. Woodward.

Bro. Woodward preached his three very fine sermons, which were greatly enjoyed by the large congregations in attendance. I am glad to say that Bro. Woodward's health is fine at this time, and the people of Bowerton circuit will be highly pleased if he is returned to the district for another year. Our circuit is getting on tolerably well. Finances behind; owing to hard times. Hope to make a tolerably good report. May God bless all the people!"

Rev. John W. Chambers, P. C., Enterprise and Stonewall circuit, Nov. 25: "We have just closed a grand meeting at Stonewall station. Rev. R. F. Witt did the preaching. We had 30 accessions and 80 conversions. We thank God and take courage. During the past four years 183 have been added to the church. We now have several applicants for membership. Two hundred have been added to the Sunday-school enrollment. Three thousand five hundred dollars have been added to the value of the church property. We now have a net gain in membership of 117. We close the pastoral term hopeful that this circuit is prepared to do better things in the future. We leave a comfortable parsonage and a very kind people. May God bless them!"

Rev. Jas. G. Cammack, Summit, Miss., Nov. 26: "We will close a meeting to-morrow at this place that has been in operation nearly three weeks. We have had a good meeting; much good has been done. The preaching has been loving, deep, and powerful. We feel that Summit is on the up grade. We have had quite a number of preachers with us during the meeting. Most of the preaching was done by Dr. West, of Wesson, and Dr. Cooper, of Hazlehurst. There were present, and preached some during the meeting, Revs. M. L. Burton, J. H. Woodward, A. B. Nicholson, R. S. Woodward, P. E., and Bro. Van Hook. There have been 10 accessions up to this writing. I expect some more to join to-night and to-morrow. Our Conference collections are not quite all up; but we believe they will be by Conference."

Rev. H. B. Vandenberg, P. C., Meadville, Miss.: "Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held Tuesday, Nov. 22. Rev. D. A. Little, P. E., was on hand and preached a sermon at eleven o'clock A. M., which will be long remembered by his hearers for pathos and edification. Finances very much behind, both as to Conference collections and salary of preacher in charge. The official brethren seem hopeful that they will be able to make up a part of the deficit before Annual Conference meets. The hearts of the preacher and his family were made happy yesterday (Nov. 24) by a pleasant and very agreeable surprise gotten up by the ladies of Meadville. About twelve o'clock A. M. about twenty ladies marched in at the front gate of the parsonage, and into the house to the pantry, laden down with good things to satisfy the inner man, both cooked and otherwise, and, taking possession for the time of the kitchen, soon had a Thanksgiving dinner to which all remained and partook of, and which will be long remembered by the preacher and his family. Nor was this all. The kind people had also manifested their esteem by presenting us with material for making the family comfortable in the way of wearing apparel. There are several features about this surprise that makes it doubly pleasing to us. One is: It was not confined to the members of the Methodist Church; but ladies of both Presbyterian and Baptist Churches contributed largely toward the success of the occasion, and were present with us, and helped to make it a very pleasant Thanksgiving Day to us. And it is indeed very gratifying to a poor itinerant in his first year to have these expressions of sympathy and good-will manifested in so unmistakable a manner. May the Giver of every good and perfect gift abundantly bless them all and repay them for their kindness."

Rev. T. B. Holloman, Canton, Miss., Nov. 18: "Again we are reminded that to make money is one thing, and to make a living another, and that 'robber certainly make themselves wings and are not forever.' How much the questions of money, basis, or free coinage of silver, exercised the wisdom of Solomon we know not; but one thing he learned in his day, and which continues to be the experience of the world even in this, the glorious nineteenth century Anno Domini, that nothing is more enticing and nothing more disappointing than the riches of this world. Since the opening of the cotton season we have had much cry of short crops in this section; in many instances as nearly complete failures as possible to conceive. Thoughtful, conservative farmers place the cotton crop at less than 50 per cent., and some as low as one-third in this county. Already the crop has been gathered.

A trip of ten miles in the country yesterday revealed to me the unmistakable truthfulness of the complaints. In this distance I looked upon, at least, three hundred acres of cotton fields, and, in my judgment, not five halves of cotton remains upon the whole to be gathered. Think of this, Mr. Editor—on the fifteenth day of November. In many instances I am told that the crop has been marketed, and the tenants moved to other places. Of course, there is great discontentment. The fields look black and bare. So those who sought riches are sadly disappointed. Learning wisdom from the severe experiences of 1891, our people planted more of food crops than usual, and we are not likely to suffer from hunger. Corn enough has been made, if husbanded, to feed the people, while potato and other crops, I am told, were never better. The frugal farmer can live and enter the Spring with hopes of recovering somewhat of his losses; but what will be the result to our mercantile population only the future can reveal. Of course, the church finances will suffer with all others, or more, as that is last of consideration by many. While the outlook is gloomy, if our people shall have learned more thoroughly the lesson of self-support, it will prove a blessing in disguise. . . . I am now nearing the close of a four years' pastorate at this place, and, while the work has not prospered in all things as I have desired, my successor will find many pleasant things to cheer him in his work among this people. I shall commit them to the care of another, with fervent prayer for his greatest success. Only the itinerant preacher can appreciate the feelings that arise upon the severing of friendships such as grow up between pastor and people. In my afflictions I have not been forgotten; they have visited and cared for me. And in my pulpit ministrations, whether it has been to persuade, rebuke, or exhort, I have received that support which has testified of the true spirit and sympathy of the people whom I have served. May He who has declared that "one sower and another reapeth," direct the appointment of one who shall accomplish great things for His church in this place."

REVIVAL AT SIKESTON, MO.

According to arrangement with Dr. Crow (our pastor at this place) while at Conference, I came here two weeks ago to-day, and joined the brethren in a meeting. The work has continued with increasing interest from the beginning, so that now we number about 100 conversions (reported), with 70 additions to our church, and the end is not yet. I go from here to Ocala to assist our dear Bro. Jernigan in a meeting. I leave Dr. Crow and his people happy. They will outshine the meeting, and it is hoped many others will be added to the Lord.

A Card.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me space in the dear ADVOCATE to express my sincere thanks to the members of the "Brotherhood" who have so promptly responded to the call made by the officers, and Bro. C. A. Powell, who has kindly interested himself in my behalf. My thanks are due to a number of others for valuable responses, and to the kind people of my dear husband's charge, whose attentions and acts of kindness to me will be cherished to my latest day.

Yours in Christian love,
MRS. L. W. WOOD.

Bishop Galloway spent several days of last week in the city. He preached Sunday, at eleven, in Ryrie Memorial, and in the evening in Louisiana Avenue, and both audiences were delighted.

The proceedings of the thirteenth Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference have been received. It is an interesting pamphlet, and all of our church women, and men too, ought to read it.

The way some churches treat their worn-out pastors is quite different from the Methodist usage. We read that Dr. W. M. Taylor's congregation have accepted his resignation, tendered on account of failing health, and have made him pastor emeritus with a salary of $5,000 a year for life.

We look with horror upon cannibalism as practiced among the heathen, and yet the churches in this country come very near practicing the same horrible thing. What is it but ecclesiastical cannibalism when three or four denominations try to live and thrive in a town that will and can only support one? They must eat up one another in order to get along at all.

In the "good old days," so much lauded, the preacher flourished on one hundred dollars a year, and from fifteen to twenty-five preaching appointments in a month. In these degenerate days, so much lamented, the preacher flourishes on from five to twenty-five hundred dollars a year, and two sermons and one prayer-meeting talk a week. No wonder the cry is made, "Oh, take us back to the good old days!"

MY BOY.

BY MARIA TAYLOR PIPKIN.

"Hath my boy a place to lay his head?
Is he living still, or is he dead?
In a lonely gulch, near some mountain way,
With only a pall of the shadows gray,
And, maybe, a snow-drift drifted o'er
The dear pale face I may see no more!"

"Where is my boy? In some haunt of sin?
Lured by the glittering whirlpool within,
Finding the eddy too strong to control,
And slowly sinking his precious soul,
To find in its depths a stone for his head,
And the slime of sin's sea for his last low bed?"

"Where is my boy? Oh, my Father, where Ever he is, let thy hand be there,
To lead him away from each tempting snare,
For the right make him all things bravely dare,
And all things wrong make him nobly forswear:
His neighbor's burdens cheerfully bear,
His best with his enemy kindly share;
From the sinking soul lift its load of care,
Crush the thorns that unwary feet might tear,
With tenderness true, with love that is rare;
Engirdling his life with praise and with prayer,
That, at last, a victor's crown he may wear."

The Work of the Pastor in the Sunday-School.

The Sunday-school is not an independent organization, but constitutes a part of the church just as the congregation does. This being the case, the pastor evidently has a place and a work in it—a work which no other can do, and which is far above that of the superintendent and teacher. Not in the school mainly, as we shall endeavor to show, but in the pulpit, at the homes of the people, and by a thorough study of the lesson during the week.

Not only should he keep fully abreast with the school, but far ahead of it, thus constituting what Lyons terms a "teacher-in-chief." During a recent Sunday-school convention, held in the city of Nashville, the thought was emphasized that the work of the pastor for the Sunday-school was mainly during the week and from the pulpit. In my opinion, the pastor should not teach unless it be in the way of reviewing or as teacher of a normal class. Such a class, organized for the purpose of supplying the places of absent teachers, would properly be taught by the pastor. But where no class exists—and I do not know of a school where it does, though I believe it would be highly advantageous—then, I repeat, the pastor has a work to do far more important than that of the mere teacher, and the pastor who ignores this work is strangely indifferent to his own duty and the interest of the church over which God hath made him overseer. Surely no pastor who is impressed with the divine commission of his work, and feels the worth of souls, can neglect this strong arm of the church. I have known pastors who rarely, if ever, attended the session of the Sunday-school, and I have wondered at their apathy. However much I may sometimes have longed for the quiet hour before preaching, I have always felt it my duty to attend the Sunday-school services. Still, I repeat that the paramount work of the pastor is outside of the Sunday-school. First, the preaching of the gospel is his pre-eminent work. All other services are subordinate to this. Preaching brings about visible results. Nearly all conversions, you will accede, occur at a service of preaching.

Now, the hope of the church, both numerically and spiritually, is the Sunday-school. You see the importance, then, of securing their attendance at church. This is a part of the pastor's work, and a most important part. This can be best accomplished by visiting them at their homes, by making friends with each one personally, and by special invitations to them; and, while in the home, speak some words of admonition to the parents on this subject. When children do not attend Sunday-school and church the fault is generally with the parents. Warn the father against staying at home to read the Sunday paper or write business letters, and the mother, specially during the heated term, against staying at home to freeze ice cream for dinner. Such an example is deadly in its influence upon the child. If the attendance of the Sunday-school upon the eleven o'clock service can be secured, half the battle is won. In many of our city churches the chief difficulty the pastor has in connection with his Sunday-school is in securing their attendance at church. Generally, I hear, as the congregations go to church, they meet the Sunday-school people going home. Bishop Keener is quoted as saying that if the Sunday-school interfered with the children coming to church services, when the Sunday-school ought to be done away with.

Obviously, then, if the pastor can solve this difficult problem, he has already done a great work. This accomplished, let him remember for his encouragement that children are extremely responsive to preaching, and so the truth. Those great men, Jonathan Edwards and John Wesley, testified to the responsiveness of childhood. The pastor ought to direct some portion of his remarks to them. They like to be remembered. He should also, at times, preach special sermons to them, and thus seed-thoughts will be dropped into their hearts which will germinate and ripen into a golden harvest. Let us remember that the children of our charges have souls that contain within them the "very germ of heaven itself." We should recognize in them vast spiritual faculties given for gradual enlargement—what Channing calls the unknown marble, capable of being transformed into majesty and grace. No pastor can afford to ignore the children of the Sunday-school without being recreant to him who said, "Feed my lambs."

If the great object of Sunday-school teaching is to bring the young to Christ, and into the church—and who will say otherwise?—then in this all-important work the pastor must co-operate by every means in his power; and that pastor is most successful who leads most of his Sunday-school to Christ.

Another great work in which we, as pastors, should engage is to cultivate the missionary spirit in our Sunday-school. The Discipline says: "Let every Sunday-school, as far as possible, be organized into a missionary society." First, we should be thoroughly informed ourselves as to missionary work. Pastors are sometimes strangely ignorant themselves. We should read up and get in full sympathy with missionary work, and then we will have no trouble in getting children to work, for they are responsive to every good work, and nothing interests them more than stories of missionaries and their adventures. So when the Sunday-school has been organized into a missionary society, supply them with missionary literature. Right here let me digress to say that no Sunday-school should be without its library of good books to counteract the effects of the pernicious literature that is flooding the country. There is no factor more powerful in forming character than the habit of reading. My wife and I inspect with rigid censorship every book that comes into our home. But to return: When Sunday-schools are too poor to have a library, the pastor can distribute missionary leaflets for the asking. I am never without them, both for my own children and the Sunday-school Missionary Society. I am convinced that ignorance and want of information concerning missionary work is more in the way of the pastor, and is the cause of more of the apathy that exists, than ought else.

If the pastor will see that the Sunday-school is supplied with missionary literature, he will find it a powerful factor for good. I speak advisedly and from my own experience as a pastor. Our Sunday-school Missionary Society at Hattiesburg is a thing of life and is a power in the church for training and educating our young people to give unto the Lord. No pastor can afford to be without a Sunday-school missionary society. If there is a brother minister who has not organized one, let him organize and begin on a new and higher plane.

One more thought: Would it not be a good work for the pastor to take the church register and find out the names of all who do not attend Sunday-school and hand those names to the superintendent or teachers to be interviewed by them; also the names of those who do not belong to any church and try to enroll them. This idea was brought out at the Sunday-school Convention, in Nashville, last year, and the statement made that by this plan twenty-five per cent. was ordinarily added to the Sunday-school rolls.

I have endeavored briefly to enumerate what I conceive to be some of the special duties of the pastor in connection with the Sunday-school. Certainly he stands committed to do all in his power to advance the great Sunday-school cause in his charge. And he can not make full proof of his ministry, nor do what God requires of him as an under-shepherd, unless he is in full sympathy with this department of the church. God helps us to be faithful, that when the Chief Shepherd shall appear we also shall appear in glory with him!

Hattiesburg, Miss. J. S. PARKER.

Conference Claimants.

I saw an article in the ADVOCATE, some time ago, in regard to the support of the Conference claimants. I took it to be an editorial. I struck me that it was in the right direction, but yet it reminds me of certain city fathers that met at their regular times in their grave, dignified capacity and passed resolutions every time they met that a certain canal ought to be made for the health of the city, but that did not build the canal. The fact is, that a thing ought to be, don't make it so. The trouble is, the sore only hurts those that have it, and the deceitfulness of the heart and selfishness together can starve out any Conference claimant. I have some experience along that line that I hope no other poor preacher will ever be called to meet. A few years ago I met with an accident from which I was confined to my house and bed under the treatment of doctors, day and night, for four months. My money gave out. My pastor, Dr. I. W. Cooper, came to see me most every day; saw my condition, and insisted that he would put a notice in the ADVOCATE of my condition; that I had hundreds of old friends that would be glad to help me. Seeing no light ahead, I consented, and, in a few days, letters came to me with money—altogether $102. A large part of it came through you, Mr. Editor, from unknown persons to me. Three preachers called the attention of their congregations to it, and a purse of money was raised and sent to me. Three others sent of their own means—one preacher's wife and one preacher's widow also—for which I shall ever feel grateful to them both in time and eternity. They lifted me over the worst and darkest period of my life. Little did they know the joy of my heart in that trying time. But while much is said in our church papers there will be no change until the Conference Board assesses more than they do. I see in our Conference last year for thirty-eight claimants thirty-five hundred dollars, while one station with six hundred and ninety-two members was assessed fifty dollars and paid thirty-two dollars and fifty cents. It has been six years since I gave up the pastorate. I received six hundred and thirty dollars, yet no way to make a dollar. It appears pretty tight after forty years in the ministry—part of those years less than one hundred dollars a year. My first year in the ministry we took into the church four hundred members. I got my hundred my second year on a circuit three hundred miles, round sixteen preaching places. I organized six churches, two of them new stations. I got up a camp meeting—grand success. The circuit was divided the next year; two preachers sent. I got seventy-three dollars' quarters. The third year I had twenty-six preaching places; organized six churches. Two preachers followed next year. I got on that circuit seventy-eight dollars' quarters; lost two horses. Now, I do not speak of this complacently, but I glory in it as the joy of my life. I am glad it is so, and now, while I am old, worn-out and sickly, sitting around my little plain hearthstone, I can say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name!" It will all work out right at last.

Woman's Work.

As the long evenings have come again, and days when many dare not venture out, we would do well to give our Woman's Missionary Advocate an honored place by the fireside. Hear what our editor says: "Everyone who speaks of our Woman's Missionary Advocate says it is constantly improving. Dr. Young J. Allen said in this office, the very day he arrived in Nashville from China, that he received ten or twelve woman's missionary periodicals from England and America, and the Woman's Missionary Advocate was the best among all his exchanges. This is high praise, and we appreciate the kindness of Dr. Allen in saying it, for many persons do not like to say such things until their friends have gone beyond the need of them. We do not spare any toll, nor do we hesitate to do anything possible for its improvement; but we must depend on the agents in auxiliaries and on individual friends to keep up the list of subscribers. Friends, lovers of our cause, are you willing for the Woman's Missionary Advocate to fall so far behind? Come to the help of our magazine now. As a crisis in the affairs of our Woman's Missionary Society seems impending, you will need the Advocate more than ever, and our work everywhere will need it. Secure a good list, and send them on at once. We are not idle, though waiting. We have other beautiful pictures with which to embellish and illustrate our magazine, and in no other periodical can you find any so attractive. They are printed on fine paper, and have been much admired by strangers."

Let us not forget that our editor reports quarterly a large balance, which goes to the regular fund of the society, as the paper belongs to it. Every subscriber, therefore, gives to the society, besides obtaining the paper.

Realizing the importance of thoughtful, as well as prayerful, preparation on the part of the presidents of auxiliaries, we inserted in our plan of work the following: "That we emphasize the necessity . . . of supplying the president with a copy of the Advocate, including the programme, so that the necessary arrangements can be made before the time of meeting." When the secretaries of auxiliaries receive the literature, they should, at once, attend to this duty.

The words of Mrs. Ansley in the Advocate are well worth repeating, some of which are: "Much of the dragging so generally deplored in auxiliary meetings is owing to a lack of thoughtful preparation on the part of presidents. They do not study to make the meetings interesting. Not being in touch with the missionary enterprises themselves, they are unable to inspire others with a sense of their importance. They imagine they have no gifts for talking, and are too old to learn parliamentary usage. For the good of the society, a more efficient president must be elected." If by earnest, persistent inquiry they had come to know the work, its various enterprises and urgent need, they would have been amazed at their fitness for official duties, and at the wonderful awakening in others. A large per cent. of our members give more thought to "Butterick's Fashion Book" than to the Woman's Missionary Advocate. These non-reading members love the work in a measure, and would not willfully neglect a thing vital to its interest; but, not thinking on this line, they do not feel the need of information. Our women need to consecrate their minds to the service of Christ. Attending the meetings, paying dues, offering prayers, are important essentials, but not all. Some may say they are convinced of the foregoing truths, but do not enjoy reading missionary literature. Make yourself read it, just as you did your Bible when you first started in Christian life, and, before you are aware of it, the dullness will pass away, and you will be exceedingly interested. Love for the world is the natural outgrowth of a mind stored with missionary facts. Knowledge is the mother of zeal."

If we would be wise, and also preserve our organizations from decay, we must not lose sight of individual responsibility and culture.

The financial outlook of our society is not encouraging. In the Advocate our general treasurer reports:

"Since the annual meeting at Lexington, Ky., $47,930.59 has been disbursed, and $29,130.92 has been received. In each quarter receipts have fallen short of the corresponding quarter of the preceding year. The receipts for 1891 dropped below the receipts for 1890, and the receipts for the first and second quarters of the present fiscal year are less than the receipts for the same quarters in 1891.

"These facts are significant, and show that gradually, but surely, our treasury is being emptied. We had at the close of the first quarter $38,500 less than we had at the beginning of this fiscal year. 'What will be the result if this depletion goes on? Do you know that it means no extension of work in any field? Do you realize that it means retrenchment in the work already begun?'"

"This is the present outlook, and the facts give us food for serious reflection and motives for fresh activity. So at ease are some of our home workers regarding the state of finances, and so satisfied are many of them that we have a large 'balance' on hand, that they overlook the grave conclusions that must inevitably result from this course of constant depletion in our treasury; and so strong are these convictions in the minds of some that one Conference secretary has instructed me to draw out of the treasury money that had been paid into it some time before for the missionary cause, and send it to the agent and treasurer of the training-school for a scholarship in that institution."

"The Week of Prayer and Thanksgiving is drawing near, and now let every member of our society, with hearts aglow with missionary zeal, make an extra effort to increase the collections for every mission field, as it is called up for discussion day after day. Think on these things, my sisters, and determine whether we shall fall behind or go forward for our Master. If each one will do her part, the result will be a great bound forward."

Mrs. E. D. JONES.

An Indian Burial with the Burial Service of the M. E. Church, South.

On Friday evening, Nov. 11, I was called upon to hold a burial service over an Indian—the first in this country to have a Christian burial. She was between sixty-five and seventy years old, having been married forty-six or forty-seven years, the husband still surviving.

I have buried those of my own people whose relatives and friends had hopes of a glorious meeting hereafter, and I have buried those over whom dark doubts hung, but never before have I been called upon to read our beautiful burial service over the body of a heathen. One son and daughter having joined the Methodist Church this year—the daughter at my meeting, the son under Bro. Cammack's preaching—this was probably the reason why I was called upon to hold the burial service. While she had manifested but little interest in religion, or the work that is being done for them, yet the heaven was surely working within her soul. She said to some one some time before she died, but during her last illness, that she wished that she had been baptized, and it may be that through the light which she had her soul is now at rest.

It was very sad, indeed, to see the deep sorrow of the husband, who had walked by her side for forty-six years; for I don't think that a man who has the superior light of the gospel could manifest much greater sorrow over the death of a companion than did this Indian.

While looking on and listening to their manifestations of sorrow, my heart was filled with a longing desire to lead them to the loving Savior, who said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And even now, as I write the command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," and the sad neglect on the part of those of whom the Savior said, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you," comes to mind, how have we obeyed the command? How have we proved our friendship to the Savior? By judicious management, and an earnest effort, let us keep our Savior's command, and prove our friendship to him by leading them to the cross.

W. J. DAWSON.

A Revival of Conference at Conference.

The annual sessions of our Conferences are near. Can we not get more out of these convocations than we have been getting? Can we not make them more fruitful of spiritual results? To many they are seasons which result in a dissipation of spiritual force. In Conferences as large as the two Georgia Conferences there is, of necessity, a large number who are not members of any board or committee. There must be intervals between the daily sittings of the Conference for committees and boards to do their work and for the Bishop and cabinet to make the appointments. What shall the unemployed do during these intervals? Let us have preaching, says one. Very well, but ought not the preaching to be adapted to the occasion, and have we always been wise in the adaptation? For one, I do not believe it is the best for us to try to run what are called "revival services" at Conference. We would save more souls if, at Conference, our preaching were directed to the quickening of the preachers and lay delegates, and to the application of the gospel to the characteristic phases of the work God has put into our hands.

I should have been saved one year of pain, mortification and almost fruitlessness in my ministry if I could have heard at Conference some such prince of pastors, as was William M. Crumley, preach an experimental sermon on pastoral visitation from Acts xv, 20. What might young preachers have learned from a sermon by James E. Evans on "How to Lead a Penitent to Christ?"

In these suggestions I do not mean to encourage a sort of lecturing the brethren at Conference—certainly no censorious critiquing, and, least of all, no practice of the censor morum by very young men. I want, for myself, to hear experimental preaching that will quicken my religious life and make me a wiser worker.

Maybe it would be a useful innovation if we could have an experience meeting once or twice during the session—not like that we have at the love-feast on Sunday morning, but a meeting where we could talk about the hard facts of our work and find from each other how to work through them. If we could get a meeting of this sort, full of downright honesty, frankness, and of the spirit of brotherly helpfulness, how it would help!

We don't want a preachers' institute, we want a Conference. No snapping, dogmatizing, but the warm, loving counseling of weary men who have tried to do something, have fallen below what they desired, and who want the sympathy and help of each other in finding out how to do better next year.

This seems to have been the Conference of Wesley's day. In the Minutes we find all sorts of matters called up. The few questions of our modern books of discipline bear small resemblance to the wide range of inquiries raised in one of John Wesley's direct, honest Conferences.

Out of such Conferences came bands of men to whom Christian living and soul-saving was a fine art. They came to have a very genius for piety and preaching. Withal they loved each other with pure hearts, fervently. The men of these Conferences grew tall and strong from the tropical atmosphere of the Conference. It is hard to grow in a frigid atmosphere of criticism and analysis anything except homiletic shrubbery. The giant growths of early Methodism fed on an atmosphere of love and faith which breathes in words like these of Charles Wesley's Conference hymn:

"And are we yet alive,
And see each other's face?
Glory and praise to Jesus give
For his redeeming grace.
What troubles have we seen?
What conflicts have we passed!
Fighting without and tears within Since we assembled last.
But out of all the Lord
Hath brought us by his love,
And still he doth his help afford
And hides our life above."

I believe there are all about in Georgia earnest men pressing toward the end of the year through untirable difficulties and discouragements, whose hearts pant for a Wesleyan Conference. Can we not have a little more conference at Madison and Columbus than we have some conference? Let us words to create the thing preaching—no lecturing of the Lord's laborers, no drawing and quarreling infidels and atheists, but some inspiring, instructive talking to the assembly of the prophets. There are many things we should confer about.—W. A. Candler, in Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Dec. 11, 1892.

By Rev. WM. H. LAPRADE, D.D.

The Apostolic Council.

Acts xv, 12-29.

TIME.—A. D. 50.
PLACE.—Jerusalem.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they." (Acts xv, 11.)

Upon their arrival from their missionary journey Paul and Barnabas related to the church at Antioch, from whence they had gone out, "all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles."

Not long after their return "certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren, 'Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye can not be saved.'" These "certain men" were members of the Christian Church who still clung to Jewish rites, and who wished these rites perpetuated in Christianity.

Much was involved in the discussion which followed, led by these men on the one side, and by Paul and Barnabas on the other. Not only the immediate issue at Antioch, but the whole matter of the relation of Christianity to Judaism was at stake, as well as the doctrine of "salvation by faith, and not by works of the law." So important was the question that the brethren at Antioch finally decided that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders, and secure a decision that would be final. The delegation went at once, was received at Jerusalem, and made known the results of the work among the Gentiles. Immediately a number of converted Pharisees, still clinging to old Jewish prejudices, arose, and pronounced in favor of circumcision and of obedience to the ceremonial laws of Moses.

The council of apostles and elders was then convened. After much discussion Peter rose up, and, alluding to his own experience with the house of Cornelius (See lesson of Oct. 23), pronounced against a return to Jewish rites and ceremonies.

Ver. 12. The two missionaries had already told of their journey and its result, but not formally, to the council. This they now did, with special reference to the fact that God honored their ministry, notwithstanding their entire disregard of the ceremonials of Jewish law.

Ver. 13-17. James, the brother of our Lord, stood at the head of the church at Jerusalem. He was a man of rather austere type, but so upright as to receive the title, "The Just." Referring to Peter by the Hebrew form of his name, Simeon, he declared that his statement agreed with prophecy. Quoting Amos ix, 11, 12 (from the Septuagint version), he applied the passage to the calling of the Gentiles, and their salvation through Christ.

Ver. 18. As this flocking of the Gentiles to Christ was foreknown and foretold, it was no surprise to God. As part of his plan it must be accepted.

Ver. 19. Inasmuch as God, who had called them to salvation through his Son, had left no instructions concerning these ceremonials, James thought that they should not burden them with these things. If he received them being uncircumcised, so should the church.

Ver. 20. For the sake of the Gentile converts, protecting them from temptations attached to idol worship, and associated with heathen feasts, they should, he thought, abstain from eating blood, or anything that had died from being strangled, or anything that had first been offered in sacrifice to idols. Besides, being so associated with evil as to be dangerous to the Gentile converts, these things were abhorred by the Jews, and the use of them would cause unnecessary strife. Fornication, a sin always and everywhere, was mentioned because it was common among the heathen.

Ver. 21. That is, the law is so generally known that everywhere the failure to observe these things would stir up strife.

Ver. 22-29. James' opinion was adopted as the verdict of the church, and two men were sent back with Paul and Barnabas: one of them, Silas, afterward became a missionary himself. Letters of instructions, so authenticated, were sent by them to all the churches among the Gentiles, embodying the decision reached, and so settling this vexing question forever.

The letter commended Paul and Barnabas because the men who had first sprung this matter at Antioch might seek to injure them.

This action on the part of the elders and apostles brought to the front the great truth that salvation comes through faith, and not by submitting to outward requirements of ceremonial law. It also broke down still further the "wall of partition" between Jew and Gentile. It also encouraged missionary work. Finally, it emphasized purity as a necessary characteristic of Christian life, whether in Jew or in Gentile.

Temperance Department.

CONDUCTED BY REV. JOHN T. SAWYER, D. D.

In a recent speech the Rev. Dr. Lotter, of Nashville, Tenn., said this:

It is almost needless for me to tell you more than merely to glance at the stupendous proportions of the liquor traffic, to see, from this point of view, the work before us. The State and National governments get $100,000,000 of revenue annually, from the liquor traffic in this country. We have 1,000,000 drunkards in the land; 100,000 of whom die annually, and thus the government gets $1,000 per head, per annum, for every drunkard that the saloon sends to a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's hell. The liquor traffic is a billion-dollar business. Our drunk bill is $1,000,000,000, to which may be added an expense account of $500,000,000 for crime, pauperism, insolvency, disease, violence and death; and the moneyed investment of the business sums up into the billions of dollars, of which it is hard to get an estimate. There are 24,000,000 drinkers, moderate and immoderate, beside the 1,000,000 drunkards, and there are millions who favor the whiskey business or who are indifferent to the claims of the great temperance cause. There are 250,000 licensed and unlicensed places in the United States where liquors are sold—three-fifths Democratic and two-fifths Republican—and every one of these saloons is a headquarters for one or the other of the old political parties.

On the other hand, we have in this country 21,000,000 of church members and 310,000 churches and Sunday-schools, besides schools, colleges, universities, religious societies, newspapers and periodicals innumerable, all back of temperance education and prohibitory legislation, to a greater or less extent. Besides this, much of the commercial and manufacturing element of the country is in our favor, and so are the laboring and agricultural interests of the land. What a responsibility lies upon the shoulders of these better elements of society! How much could the government in the protection of its great liquor proteges!
This is our great hope: by aggression, education and legislation Christianity will kill the saloon, or else the saloon will kill Christianity, in this country; for no country can ever be converted with an open and a protected saloon and a desecrated Sabbath. In this great matter God or the devil must get on top, and the Bible cries out vociferously,
"Come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord, against the mighty!" But let me repeat, and close with the repetition: The logic of the nineteenth century is that God will get on top, and the whiskey devil must go.

In 1890 the American people consumed 87,829,862 gallons of distilled liquors, 27,850,873 gallons of wine, and 855,992,335 gallons of malt liquors.
The grand total of our consumption was 971,272,770 gallons of liquor, or more than fifteen and one-half gallons on the average to man, woman and child. The government received on the above liquors, as taxes, a total of $123,000,000, or $24,000,000 more than the pension payments for that year, and $4,000,000 more than the pension payments for 1891. Only a very small portion of the money spent in drinks goes to the government. The chief profit is to the manufacturer and the vender. The government gets one dollar for each barrel of beer sold; but the 32 gallon barrel makes over 500 glasses, which at five cents a glass, brings twenty-five dollars. If the 30,000,000 barrels consumed last year had been all sold by the glass, the cost to the consumers would have been $750,000,000.
The share of the government being only $30,000,000, the drinker gave to the vender twenty-four dollars, while he gave the government only one dollar. The government gets ninety-nine cents on each gallon of whiskey sold; but the gallon makes one hundred and twenty-five ten-cent drinks to the consumer; so that in order that the poor drunkard may give ninety cents to the government, he must give the saloon keeper $12.50. While the government obtains its $123,000,000 from tax on liquors, the consumer must pay hardly less than $1,000,000,000 for his drinks, or more than eight times the total sum of our pensions.—
Evangelical Messenger.

From the Christian at Work:

There is explosive power enough inherent in the membership of the Christian churches in this country to-day to blow the rum business out of existence.
It can be done just as quickly as some millions of protesting Christian citizens can get their votes into a ballot box. Here is where the charge must be placed to do the work. Would that we could have a blast of this holy dynamite that would remove at once and forever from the pathway of men the fearful reef of the liquor traffic.
As surely as we believe that God is true and just, so surely do we believe that the church which he has established among men will yet awake to the full measure of its duty and responsibility with regard to the liquor traffic. We can not believe that the great mass of those who profess to love God and their fellow-men will always remain deaf to the piteous and agonizing cry going up from the multitude of innocent and helpless ones who are daily offered up in sacrifice to the Moloch of the liquor traffic. Some day the light will break upon the darkened eyes, some day the deaf ears will be unstopped, and the followers of Christ everywhere will see, hear and understand what a hideous and unspeakable monster they have been nourishing by their laws and customs all these long and awful years. May the Almighty Father hasten the coming of that decisive day!

I deliberately affirm that Herod, the historical ogre of the New Testament, is a philanthropist compared with the breweries and distilleries of Great Britain. And I say solemnly and deliberately that worship of the child Jesus in sincerity and truth is impossible to those who sit with folded hands, while the pestilential breath of this modern Herod poisons the children who Jesus loves.—Canon Wilberforce.

"Us Boys."—A temperance lecturer was preaching on his favorite theme.
"Now, boys, when I ask you a question you must not be afraid to speak up and answer me. When you look around and see all these fine houses, farms and cattle, do you ever think who owns them all now? Your fathers own them, do they not?" "Yes, sir!"
shouted a hundred voices. "Where will your fathers be in twenty years?"
"Dead!" shouted the boys. "That's right. And who will own this property then?" "Us boys!" shouted the urchins. "Right. Now tell me, did you ever in going along the street notice the drunkards lounging around the public house door, waiting for some one to treat them?" "Yes, sir; lots of them." "Well, where will they be in twenty years from now?" "Dead!"
exclaimed the boys. "And who will be the drunkards then?" "Us boys." Everybody was thunderstruck. It sounded awfully. It was awful, but it was true.—Sunday-School Chronicle.

From Northwestern Christian Advocate:

A special correspondent of the New York Tribune, who went to Hemstead, Pa., to investigate matters there, wrote to his journal: "There are saloons on or near almost every prominent corner in Hemstead—perhaps forty in all—and their owners are growing rich. One of the saloon keepers wears diamonds, is regarded as a high roller in one of Pittsburgh's expensive sporting clubs, and owns much property. He is a brawny fellow, and I asked him if he had ever worked in the mills. 'Not I,' said he; 'why should I? I have over 3,000 of Carnegie's men working for me.' His meaning was plain. The abolition of the saloon would not solve all the difficulties of the labor problem, as some people declare, but the problem never will be solved until the traffic is abolished. It is the chief obstacle in the way of working people.
More just strikes have been lost on account of liquor than from any other cause."

An eminent New York divine said in a sermon:

The saloons outnumber the churches by twenty to one, in the centres of population by sometimes forty to one.
Three hundred churches in New York are opened two hours a day, two days in the week; seven hundred saloons are open twelve hours a day, seven days in the week. The saloon is master of the city government, has control in nearly every State Legislature in America, owns the National Congress, body and soul, has its friends and champions in the Supreme Court."

These gentry (liquor dealers) spin net, neither do they sow, yet the blazard from their diamonds dazzles and their pocketbooks need hoops of steel to prevent their bursting. Thus the poor man buys first of all an inherently costly article, in the next place he drops a neat contribution into Uncle Sam's collection plate, then he helps to build up that potent factor in politics known as the liquor interest, and, lastly, he clothes the man at the corner in purple and fine linen, and sends him to Saratoga in the Summer.—Catholic Review.

We mean to conquer the saloon, and demand a method by which it can be conquered—a method whose success is the saloon's destruction. Prohibition is exactly that. High license is exactly not that. We will not go into battle with that kicking blunderbuss, which leaves the saloon stronger than ever, and does no execution except at the temperance end. Down with the saloon. And down with the high-license policy, which would allow it still to camp and intrench on our soil, and to go on in its destroying course.—The Soldier.

The number of saloons in New York and Brooklyn is eighty-six times that of the colleges of the country; the traffic of the former for the period of two years is equal to the value of the entire property of the latter, plant and endowment included, and the receipts of these saloons every five days equal the average of college property.—The Issue.

Grape juice has killed more than

I am not a license reformer; I am a license destroyer.—Sir Wilfrid Lawson.

Impossible to relieve poverty until we get rid of the curse of drink.—Lord Shaftesbury.

I oppose drink, because it opposes me. The work I try to do, it undoes.
—Bishop C. D. Foss.

The real evil in our community is the drinking of intoxicating liquor.—
Hon. O. H. Platt, U. S. Senator.

Drink befalls us, confounds us, shames us, and mocks us at every point; the public house holds its triumphant course.—London Times.

Public schools cost the people of the United States each $1.50 per naptha; but saloons cost $20.00 per capita. Yet some people say that prohibition is not so important as other financial questions.—The Issue.

Strong drink—by whatever name the demon is styled, in whatever way it presents itself—this prevents our success. Remove this one obstacle, and our course will be onward and our labors will be blessed.—John Bright.

Nine-tenths of our poverty, equality and crime spring from this poisonous taproot. Society, by its habits, outlooks, and laws has greased the slope down which these poor creatures slide to perdition.—Gen. Booth, of the Salvation Army.

Drink is the parent of crime. It would not be too much to say that if all drinking of fermented liquors could be done away, crime of every kind would fall to a fourth of its present amount, and the whole tone of moral feeling, and the lower orders might be indefinitely raised.—Charles Buxton,
M. P.

The great cause of social crime is drink. The great cause of poverty is drink. When I hear of a family broken up and the cause—drink. If I go to the gallows and ask its victim the cause, the answer—drink. Then I ask myself in perfect wonderment, Why do I not put a stop to this thing?—
Bishop John Ireland.

It is wonderful how quickly the trade adapts itself to circumstances. No matter how stringent the regulations are, the people get used to them, and find a way to get their beverages.
Nothing injures business so much as constant changes. So long as the principle of license is acknowledged, it is better to acquiesce in minor matters and let things take their course.—
Bischoff's Wine and Spirit Circular.

The liquor dealers, it is reported, spent two and a half million dollars in trying to defeat Gladstone's party in Great Britain, and his success was followed by a heavy decline in brewery stocks. The explanation of the latter fact is that 204 members of the new Parliament are pledged to local option, called there "the direct veto." This is the strongest ally temperance has ever made in Parliament—a net gain of 52.—The Issue.

Luther's Two Miracles.

On Aug. 5, 1530, an awful crisis of the Reformation, when the firmest seemed to swerve and the boldest to tremble, Luther thus wrote to Chancellor Bence: "I have recently witnessed two miracles. This is the first:
As I was at my window, I saw the stars and the sky, and that vast and glorious firmament in which the Lord has placed them. I could nowhere discover the columns on which the Master has supported his immense vault, and yet the heavens did not fall. And here is the second: I beheld thick clouds hanging above us like a vast sea. I could neither perceive ground on which they reposed, nor cords by which they were suspended; and yet they did not fall upon us, but sailed us rapidly and safely away."

These miracles, as Luther called them, filled him with unconquerable trust in God. Well they might.
So may they do us. We see them wrought before us every night and every day.

Reader, Luther's two miracles are visible. They have stood the sweep of centuries. They are God's matchless monuments. The heavens stand firm without a column on which to rest.
The thick clouds, which are God's chariots, hang above us like a vast sea.
Look up and behold the wonders, and Luther-like, be armed with an "unconquerable trust in God."—Christian Standard.

The Union Signal has this:

While a certain Englishman was in Egypt on business he was invited by the explanation that the governor's religion would not allow him to offer was an abstainer, he exclaimed, with surprise, "And he is a Christian!"

The delay in issuing the paper this week is caused by the failure to receive promptly the appointments of the North Mississippi Conference, although arrangements were made to have same telegraphed from Corinth immediately on their announcement.

Bishop Granbery.

Though Bishop Granbery has been in the episcopal office since May, 1882, his first official visit to our section of the church was not made until now. Wherever he has labored in his episcopal relations he has won the esteem of all. He is a wise and prudent administrator of the law of the church, a painstaking and careful president of an annual Conference, a judicious and sympathetic maker of appointments and a faithful and earnest preacher of a pure gospel. Bishop Granbery is just sixty-three years of age. At nineteen years of age he was graduated from Randolph-Macon College, and at once entered the ministry of our church. During the Civil War he was a chaplain in the Confederate Army, and was, on one occasion, severely wounded; the marks of which he carries yet. When the Vanderbilt University was started, Dr. Granbery was chosen to fill a chair in the theological department. In this capacity he served with pre-eminent ability and with great satisfaction for seven years. In 1882 he was elected Bishop, since which time he has given undoubted proof of his qualification for the arduous and delicate duties of that high position. We are sure that our Mississippi brethren will appreciate and enjoy the presidency of Bishop Granbery, and be edified by his pulpit ministrations. In the name of the Methodists of Mississippi, we extend to the Bishop a hearty welcome, and pray the divine blessing upon his labors among us.

Statistics for Mississippi Conference.

Please have them ready, and hand or send them to the secretary on Wednesday, Dec. 14. On the financial table, under the head, "Total from all sources," please insert the total amount raised by your people for all purposes, including the whole of the Sunday-school report and the amount raised for churches and parsonages.

By complying with this request you will help the secretary, and give us a uniformity in our reports.

Under the head of "Education" only report the amount collected on the Conference assessment for education.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

Enterprise, Miss., Dec. 2, 1892.

To the Members of the Louisiana Annual Conference.

It is the duty of each pastor to report to the Joint Board of Finance the condition of each Conference claimant in the hands of his charge.

Dear brethren, please attend to this duty conscientiously, carefully and promptly, and make your report in writing. By so doing you will confer a favor upon the Joint Board and give information which will enable them to distribute justly the funds entrusted to them.

North Mississippi Conference.

FIRST DAY.

The twenty-third Annual Session of the North Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church, South, convened in the beautiful new Methodist Church, Corinth, Miss., at nine o'clock, Wednesday morning, Nov. 30, 1892, Bishop J. C. Granbery, D. D., in the chair.

Promptly at the appointed hour the Bishop took the chair and opened the Conference by reading the latter part of the tenth chapter of the Gospel by Matthew, singing hymn 228, and prayer. Many a hearty amen was heard as the Bishop besieged a throne of grace for divine blessings during the session. After singing the hymn, "Come, thou Fount of every blessing," the Conference joined with Bro. T. C. Wier in prayer.

The roll of the Conference was called by Rev. J. S. Oakley, of Columbus, the former secretary, and a large number of ministers answered to their names, and quite a goodly sprinkling of laymen. More are expected to-morrow. Rev. J. S. Oakley, the faithful and efficient secretary for several years, was re-elected, and Bros. R. M. Evans, Thos. Cameron and T. W. Lewis were elected assistants. The bar of the Conference was fixed to include all forward of a line drawn from the rear facings of next to the last windows of the church.

The presiding elders then nominated the following standing committees, which was adopted. Except in the case of the Committees on Public Worship and Memoirs, we give only the name of the chairman of each committee. The full list will be found in the published Minutes, authorized by the Conference.

Public Worship—Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Rev. T. Y. Ramsey.

District Conference Records—Prof. H. A. Dean.

Books and Periodicals—Rev. Thos. Cameron.

Memoirs—Rev. J. D. Cameron, Amos Kendall, J. D. Newsum.

Temperance—Rev. B. F. Phillips.

Sabbath—Rev. J. A. Randolph.

Spiritual Interests of the Church—Rev. J. A. Bowen.

Conference Relations—Rev. J. F. Evans.

Bible Cause—Rev. N. G. Augustus.

The following visiting brethren were introduced to the Conference during the morning session: Rev. T. C. Brown, of the White River Conference; Rev. Mr. Craddock, of North Alabama; Rev. J. W. Cherry, and L. R. Amis, of Tennessee; Rev. B. F. Lewis, assistant editor of NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; Rev. J. W. Lowrance, Memphis Conference; Rev. D. L. Mitchel, business manager of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; Rev. E. L. B. McClelland, pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, city.

Reports were read from Barbee & Smith, agents of the Publishing House at Nashville; Rev. I. G. John, D. D., Missionary Treasurer; Rev. D. L. Mitchel, publisher NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; Rev. David Morton, Secretary Board of Church Extension.

Dr. Morton reported that during the year, through the agency of the Board of Church Extension, one church had been built in every eighteen hours.

Dr. John, in his report, requested that some one be appointed to solicit subscriptions for our missionary publications, and Bro. T. B. Clifford was appointed.

After the reading of these reports the Bishop called—

Ques. 20. "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?"

The names of the following brethren were called, their characters passed, and their names referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannated relation: S. B. Carson, J. H. Brooks, A. A. Houston, S. A. Ellis, W. R. Rainey, C. N. Terry, J. W. Bates.

The names of the following were called, their characters passed, and their names referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the supernumerary relation:

W. S. Harrison.

Under the same question the Bishop called the names of the following presiding elders, their characters passed, and each made a report of the work done on his district during the year:

H. C. Morehead, Sardis district; S. M. Thames, Winona district; W. T. J. Sullivan, Grenada district; T. C. Wier, Columbus district; R. A. Burroughs, Kosciusko district; J. B. Stone, Aberdeen district; W. S. Lagrone, Corinth district; J. W. Boswell, Holly Springs district; R. M. Standifer, Greenville district.

Ques. 1. "Who are admitted on trial?"

The following, having passed approved examinations, were duly admitted:

James T. Murrah, Columbus circuit; C. H. Pittman, Mashulaville circuit; Chas. P. Ames, Tibbee circuit; Wm. W. Mitchel, Aberdeen station; L. M. Broyle, Prairie circuit; Samuel B. Myers.

On motion, it was resolved that the officers of the Conference Board of Missions be requested to apportion to each district the amount asked of this Conference for the "missionary debt," and that the pastors be requested to raise the same by the latter part of March, and that each charge get proper credit in the statistical report next year for the amount raised.

After announcements, Conference adjourned with benediction until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock.

SECOND DAY.

The Conference was called to order at nine A. M., Bishop Granbery in the chair. The religious services were conducted by Rev. K. A. Jones. The minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved. The roll was called, and several who were absent on yesterday answered to their names. The calling of the roll was then dispensed with for the remainder of the session.

T. B. Holt, treasurer of the Board of Missions, was introduced to the Conference, conveyed the greetings of Dr. Barbee, Book Agent, and explained his absence. Dr. Parks, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, city; Dr. James H. Heard, of the North Alabama Conference, and Rev. A. F. Watkins, agent of Millsaps College, were introduced also.

A communication from the Board of Trustees of Malone Female College, Holly Springs, was presented to the Conference, and at their request referred to the Board of Education without reading. Reports were also received from the Visiting Committee and trustees of the Grenada Female College, Millsaps College and Vanderbilt University, and were referred to the Board of Education.

Dr. Murrah, president, and Bro. Watkins, agent of Millsaps College, each made short, pointed and well-timed addresses on Millsaps College. Dr. Boswell presented a memorial from the Holly Springs district, which, by request, was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals without reading.

The Bishop then resumed the call of the Minute questions.

Ques. 2. "Who remain on trial?"

Lee M. Lipscomb, Thomas B. Clifford, Wm. D. Burroughs, Wm. L. Graves, James A. Poe, Wm. A. Clark, John H. Rogers, James L. Bowling, James M. Davenport and Wm.

A. Bowlin having stood approved examinations before the committee, their characters were passed, and they were advanced to the class of the second year.

The characters of Stephen L. Boyd and Wm. F. Rogers were passed, and they continued in the class of the first year.

Rev. H. L. Vaughn—having died during the year, the name of Rev. T. B. Malone was substituted for his on the Committee of the First Year.

Ques. 7. "Who are deacons of one year?"

The names of C. W. Perkins, Geo. H. Lipscomb, R. O. Brown, J. C. Simms, W. T. Burt and H. C. Edmondson were called, and, they having stood approved examinations, their characters were passed, and they were advanced to the class of the fourth year.

The name of W. T. Barnett, whose case was at the last Conference referred to the presiding elder of the Sardis district, was called, and his presiding elder, H. C. Morehead, reported that the will of the Conference in this case had been carried out, and asked for a Committee of Trial. On motion, a committee of thirteen was appointed with Rev. Amos Kendall as chairman, R. M. Evans, secretary. John Ritchie was appointed by the Investigating Committee to represent the Conference, and M. D. Fly the accused.

Ques. 12. "What traveling preachers are elected elders?"

The names of H. P. Gibbs, H. P. Crowe, F. B. Hargrove, R. H. B. Gladney, W. H. Sanders and J. T. Howell were called, and, they having stood approved examinations, their characters were passed, and they were elected to the order of elder.

The characters of H. M. Young, J. W. Treadwell and B. B. Sullivan were passed, and they were continued in the class of the fourth year.

The credentials of J. P. Moore, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, were presented to the Conference, and he asked to be received in elder's orders. After a full and free discussion he was duly admitted, and his credentials recognized on condition that he comply with the disciplinary requirement.

The hour of adjournment having arrived, Conference was dismissed with benediction by Bishop Granbery.

THIRD DAY.

The Conference was called to order promptly at nine o'clock, Bishop Granbery in the chair. The religious exercises were conducted by Bro. J. D. Newsum. The minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

On motion, a committee on the Paine and Lane Institute was appointed, also a committee to investigate and report on the Epworth Leagues within the bounds of this Conference.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, We learn that it has grown to be a custom for the Boards of Trustees of some of our State educational institutions to make appropriations out of funds of said institutions for the encouragement of halls or dances; And, whereas, We are interested in the intellectual and spiritual welfare of our young men and women; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we think appropriations of educational funds to the purposes of dancing are wrong in principle and contrary to the teachings of evangelical churches in the State.

Resolved, That we would respectfully request the authorities of our State institutions not to make hall or dance appropriations of funds designed for educational purposes.

Resolved, That we would respectfully request the Boards of Trustees not to permit the grounds or buildings to be used for halls or dances.

The following brethren were introduced to the Conference during the session:

Rev. A. B. Stewart, of the Tennessee Conference; Rev. J. T. Sawyer, of the Louisiana Conference; Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of the Alabama Christian Advocate. Bro. Mitchel, publisher of the NEW ORLEANS

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, made a short, but forcible speech on the paper of which he is publisher, which met with many hearty amens from the Conference.

The Bishop then resumed the call of the Minute questions as follows:

Ques. 6. "Who are received by transfer from other Conferences?"

Julian C. Brown, from the White River Conference, and H. C. Parrott, from the Indian Mission Conference.

Ques. 8. "What traveling preachers are elected deacons?"

The following having stood approved examinations, their characters were passed and they were elected to the order of deacons:

B. P. Jacob, A. T. Buck, E. S. Lewis, J. W. Ramsey, R. A. Meek.

The Bishop then called before him these five brethren, together with J. P. Moore, who was on yesterday received from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and delivered the charge and administered the vows in a most practical and forcible manner. The Bishop opened his charge with this striking utterance:

Do you know, my young brethren, that a man, without being a hypocrite, may perform all the functions of the Christian ministry without vital godliness? This is not only a possibility, but there is a danger here, and it is needful for us to stop and look it in the face. The fundamental questions of the Christian ministry are vital piety, communion with God, a living faith, so that men may say, "I know," not because of your words, but because we have seen for ourselves. Faith in Christ—that is the foundation on which to build. It is the foundation of a perfect Christian character. We need a high standard, ideal. In Christ the glory of God is manifested to the world. In Christ we learn what perfection is in man. Study him. But the ministry need not only the knowledge of Christ—they need his Spirit. They need deep piety, so they can say, "Be ye followers of us." In order to attain unto this there must be intense desire expressed by our Lord in the utterance, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness." God can be satisfied with nothing less than entire consecration, nor can we. Consecration to God means consecration to his work. It is daily meat, daily food. A man who lacks enthusiasm, who is not ready to endure hardships as a good soldier, who refuses to do so, is unfit for the Christian ministry. A spasmodic glow is not to take the place of the painstaking, ordinary duties of a Christian minister. In that is found enthusiasm. We need good pastors. Many men who rank high as preachers, but fail to develop as pastors, the cabinet often finds great difficulty in stationing them. Pastors, not merely preachers, are needed. Keep out of debt.

After taking the disciplinary vows, these brethren were duly received into full connection with the Conference.

Ques. 10. "What local preachers are elected deacons?"

A. J. Braswell, E. McNabb, John A. Barentine, John H. Robbins, Columbus A. Hall.

Ques. 20. "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?"

The names of all the preachers in the Holly Springs, Sardis, Winona and Grenada districts were called, and their characters were passed.

The name of J. J. Wheat was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the supernumerary relation.

After announcements, Conference adjourned with benediction by Bishop Granbery.

FOURTH DAY.

The Conference was called to order at nine A. M. by Bishop Granbery, and the religious exercises were conducted by Rev. J. D. Cameron. The minutes of yesterday's session were approved.

Rev. Dr. Cobb, Southwest Missouri Conference, and Rev. Dr. Morrison, one of the secretaries of the Mission Board, were introduced to the Conference. Dr. Cobb referred, without reading, certain papers to the Special Committee on the Paine and Lane Institute.

The Committee on Conference Relations submitted Report No. 1, in which the following questions were answered:

Ques. 17. "Who are supernumerary?"

W. S. Harrison, D. F. Cogdell.

Ques. 18. "Who are supernumerary?"

S. B. Carson, J. H. Brooks, A. A. Houston, J. M. Hampton, S. A. Ellis, W. R. Rainey, J. W. Bates, C. N. Terry, J. J. Wheat.

Ques. 20. "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?"

The names of the preachers in the Columbus district were called, and their characters were passed.

Ques. 5. "Who are readmitted?" James A. Whiteburst.

On motion, the resolution offered on Wednesday, asking the Conference Board of Missions to apportion that part of the missionary debt falling to this Conference to the several charges, was reconsidered. Pending the final decision, Dr. Morrison made some remarks germane to the subject under consideration, after which it was resolved that, in lieu of the resolution of Wednesday, Dr. Morrison be requested to pursue his own method of raising the money. Thereupon Dr. Morrison proceeded to secure pledges to cover the amount asked, and secured over $2,000—the remainder of about $1,000 to be raised to-night.

The Committee on Bible Cause made its report, and Rev. J. W. McLaurin, district superintendent of the American Bible Society, addressed the Conference on this vitally important enterprise.

After announcements, Conference adjourned with benediction by Bishop Granbery.

FIFTH DAY—SUNDAY.

Sunday dawned murky; but it did not at all interfere with the religious services of the day. The love-feast at nine o'clock, conducted by Rev. J. H. Brooks, one of the oldest ministers in the Conference, closed with a general handshaking, brotherly embraces and shouts of glory. It was no sham. The Spirit was there.

At eleven o'clock Bishop Granbery preached an able and practical sermon from Romans 1, 11, 12: "For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end that ye may be established," etc. He stressed two points: First, Paul desired to visit Rome; not that he might see its magnificence, but that he might do good to the brethren there. Second, The comfort of mutual faith. The Conference saw what the Bishop might have done had he had the physical strength. At the close of this service he ordained nine young men to the order of deacon.

The afternoon session of the Conference was called to order at three o'clock by the Bishop, who called—

Ques. 19. "What preachers have died during the past year?"

J. T. Lowry and H. L. Vaughn.

The memoir of Bro. Lowry was read by Bro. J. D. Newsum, and that of Bro. Vaughn by Bro. J. D. Cameron. Quite a number of touching tributes were made to these brethren.

At the close of this service the Bishop ordained to the order of elder the six brethren who had been elected to that order by the Conference, and Rev. J. P. Moore, whose ordination papers had been recognized by the Conference, took our ordination vows without the reimposition of hands.

The night service was conducted by Dr. Murrah, who preached one of his characteristically good sermons, at the conclusion of which Dr. Sullivan administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Thus ended the day at the Methodist Church. All the churches in town were filled by the visiting brethren, and the Lord was with them all.

SIXTH DAY.

Conference was called to order at nine o'clock by Bishop Granberry. The religious services were conducted by Rev. Amos Kendall. The minutes of Saturday's session and of the memorial service, Sunday afternoon, were read and approved. The Bishop called again—

Ques. 6. "Who are received by transfer from other Conferences?"

E. B. Craddock, from the North Alabama Conference, and R. I. Allen, from the Los Angeles Conference, both in elders' orders.

The Bishop then announced that he had ordained the following persons on yesterday, and in announcing the names called the following questions:

Ques. 9. "What traveling preachers are ordained deacons?"

B. P. Jacob, A. T. Buck, E. S. Lewis, J. W. Ramsey, R. A. Meek.

Ques. 11. "What local preachers are ordained deacons?"

A. J. Braswell, E. H. McNabb, Jno. H. Rogers, C. A. Hall.

Ques. 13. "What traveling preachers are ordained elders?"

H. P. Crowe, T. B. Hargrove, R. H. B. Gladney, W. H. Sanders, J. T. Howell, H. P. Gibbs.

Ques. 20. "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?"

The Committee of Thirteen, in the case of W. T. Barnett, reported that they found him guilty of immorality as to specification two of the charge; but, owing to mitigating circumstances, suspending him from the functions of the ministry and from membership in the Methodist Church until the next session of this Annual Conference. Thereupon the Bishop pronounced him suspended in accordance with the report of the Committee of Trial.

The names of the preachers in the Kosciusko district were called, and their characters were passed. The name of R. C. Calloway was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for superannuation. A communication from Rev. A. D. Miller, of the Mississippi Conference, in reference to the mission to the Indians in the State, was read and referred to the Board of Missions.

Ques. 20 was resumed, and the characters of all the preachers in the Aberdeen, Corinth and Greenville districts were passed.

Ques. 16. "Who are located this year?"

E. S. Lewis, at his own request.

The Special Committee on Paine and Lane Institute made its report, and Rev. Dr. Cobb, its representative at this Conference, made an address on the subject, at the conclusion of which a little over forty dollars were raised for it.

The Committee on Education made its report, and Dr. Murrell and Dr. Newell, with others, addressed the Conference in the interests, respectively, of Millsaps College and Grenada College Institute.

The treasurer of the Board of Education reported that the following amounts had been raised the present year for educational purposes: Millsaps College, $333.75; Grenada College Institute, $592.30; Paine and Lane Institute, $83.50—total, $1,009.55.

On motion, a Committee of Five were appointed to organize an association to aid in the education of young men preparing for the ministry. It was further moved that when the Conference adjourn, it adjourn to meet at two o'clock.

It was further ordered that the minutes of this Conference be published in pamphlet form, and provision was made for the same.

The Committee on Conference Relations reported the name of R. C. Calloway, and, on motion, the report was adopted.

After hearing notices, Conference adjourned with the benediction.

SIXTH DAY—EVENING SESSION.

We are sorry we can not give in detail the proceedings of the evening session. The time was chiefly taken up with reports of committees.

The following are the statistics:

Local preachers, 151; members, 41,901; infants baptized, 706; adults baptized, 1,684; Sunday-schools, 430; members and teachers, 2,330; Sunday-school scholars, 19,940. Collected for superannuates, widows and orphans, $2,234.50. Collected for missions: foreign missions, $9,035.85; domestic missions, $1,812.45. Collected for church extension, $1,531.65, and $120 at the anniversary. Number of church edifices, 484 5-6; value, $474,687. Number of parsonages, 110; value, $105,525. Grenada College Institute—value, $30,000.

During the year there have been 4,044 additions to the church, 2,681 of whom were on profession of faith. There has been a net gain in membership of 871. The pastors report 3,313 conversions during the year.

[We made what we thought a certain arrangement by which to secure the appointments of the North Mississippi Conference for this issue, but, after waiting thirty-six hours, we are compelled to go to press without them.—EDITOR.]

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

Connectional men were "thick" for a while. Nearly everything (?) was represented.

The report on temperance was strong, and struck at one of our great dangers just now. May it arouse suspicion and make us alert.

There have been 2,681 additions to the church this year on profession of faith within this Conference. One charge reported a net gain of over one hundred.

Dr. Sawyer, of New Orleans, delivered a fine address on church extension, Friday night, and, while he did not realize the full amount asked for, he greatly edified his audience.

Bro. H. M. Young reported that at Blackland station, Corinth district, his Sabbath-school was larger than his church membership. We wish every pastor could have made such a report.

We enjoyed most heartily the hospitality of Dr. Warriner and his elegant family. No guest had a more charming host or hostess than we. We will long remember them, and pray Heaven's richest blessings upon them.

We call special attention to the resolution in reference to the appropriation of State educational funds for balls, dances, etc., unanimously passed by the Conference. It will be found early in the third day's proceedings. Let all read, ponder, act.

Mrs. Snell, national evangelist of the W. C. T. U., delivered a fine gospel temperance address (sermon) at the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Thursday evening. The house was crowded to overflowing, and the address (sermon) was greatly enjoyed by many.

At the Missionary Anniversary Dr. Morrison's address would be hard to excel. Shouts from both men and women were heard from all parts of the house. Three thousand five hundred and forty-three dollars was raised in cash and subscriptions to pay the missionary debt.

The Conference was made sad by the death of the child of Bro. J. E. Buok and the father of Bro. J. W. Dorman, both of which occurred during the session of the Conference. May the Father give to them and theirs the comfort and consolation they have been prosching to others.

The Spirit was present indeed when Bro. J. H. Brooks closed his talk at this, his fifty-second, Conference, and, leaning upon his staff, turned to the Bishop, and said, "Now, Bishop, if you please, let Bro. Malone sing a song while the brethren come and tell Uncle Joe good-by. I don't know that they will ever see me again."

The Methodist Church at Corinth raised this year over six thousand dollars. To show for it, they have as handsome a brick church as there is in the State, with gallery, stained glass windows, pastor's study, etc. In the face of this heavy drain, they were only a little behind in finances, and that for the first time in years.

Dr. Sawyer, of New Orleans, ably represented the Board of Church Extension on Friday night, and kindly handed us the following figures: Amount raised on assessments, $1,534.40; on anniversary, $120—total, $1,654.40. Our Louisiana has made a lasting impression on his congregation at the Baptist Church, Sunday morning.

Louisiana Conference Notices.

The class of the fourth year will be examined at church of Lake Charles, on Tuesday, Dec. 13, at 7 o'clock P. M. THE COMMITTEE.

The class for admission to the Louisiana Annual Conference will meet at the Methodist Church in Lake Charles, La., Tuesday evening, Dec. 13, at 7 o'clock. J. M. BEARD, Chair'n.

The members of the class of the first year in the Louisiana Conference will meet the committee in the Methodist Church in Lake Charles, on Tuesday, Dec. 13, at nine A. M. J. M. BROWN, Ch'n.

"Halt a Moment."

Let every member of the Louisiana Conference, who intends bringing his wife to Conference, notify me immediately, that homes may be provided for them.

Let every presiding elder inform me at once—

1. Who will come as applicants for admission.

2. For ordination.

3. As lay delegates.

Alied to these things at once, brethren. THOS. J. UPTON.

Is undoubtedly a disease of the blood, and as such only a reliable blood purifier can effect a perfect cure. Hood's Serraparilla is the best blood purifier, and it has cured many very severe cases of catarrh. Try it.

Rates to Louisiana Conference.

The Southern Pacific Company will sell tickets over their road to delegates and others desiring to attend the Annual Conference, at Lake Charles, at one fare and a third for the round trip, on the certificate plan. Parties buying tickets will pay one full fare and take agent's receipt on certificate, which, when signed by the secretary of the Conference, will entitle the holder to one-third fare rate returning. Tickets will be available Dec. 12-14, and good to return on until Dec. 22, inclusive. Agents at all the main stations on their road will be instructed accordingly. Trains leaving New Orleans depot at 8:15 A. M. and their passengers at Lake Charles at 4:50 P. M., same day.

To prevent the hardening of the subcutaneous tissues of the scalp and the obliteration of the hair follicles, which cause baldness, use Hall's Hair Renewer.

Attention, Brethren!

Members of and visitors to the Louisiana Conference will please—

1. Buy tickets from the place of embarkation to Lake Charles, if possible. If not, buy to place of taking another road, and buy from that point to this.

2. Be sure and get a certificate wherever ticket is purchased, or you may fail to get the benefit of the reduction on returning.

3. Those coming on the Southern Pacific road will, on arrival, take the street car to L. Kaufman's store, within one block of the Methodist Church, and walk from thence to church.

4. Those coming by the Watkins road will take the dummy car to door of the church, where they will be met and conveyed to their homes.

5. Trains on the Southern Pacific road arrive at 4:50 P. M. and start 2 A. M. Those on the Watkins road arrive at 11:30 A. M. and 7 P. M.

Brethren coming on the Southern Pacific road had better come on the evening train, and thereby save hotel bills.

The usual reduction will be given by the roads on the certificate plan, and on that alone; therefore, the importance of procuring certificates.

The Watkins road kindly propose one fare for round trip to parties purchasing tickets at stations from Alexandria southward.

Tickets will be on sale from the 10th to the 14th, inclusive. THOS. J. UPTON.

Concerning our "Problem of Methodism," Rev. T. W. Lewis, of the North Mississippi Conference, writes in the Memphis Christian Advocate:

In the last issue of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE Dr. Carter writes an editorial on the above-named subject. It is not to Dr. Boland's book that he refers, but to another matter of very great importance. He says, "The Problem of Methodism is, How to improve our circuits and missions, that have made an advancement for many years." There is no doubt about the importance of this subject. The great Mississippi Delta has suffered much because inefficient men have been put in charge of new and unorganized fields. The inefficiency of these brethren may have grown out of their want of experience; but it is a fact that until we put men of experience and preaching ability and, at least, a fair amount of education into this field, the results were not even commensurate with the outlay, small as it was. Some of our missions have been missions ever since I joined the Conference, and unless the policy of the Conference is changed they will continue to be missions. As a remedy for this evil, suppose we raise twice as much for home missions as we do at present, and let our strongest men get hold of these poor circuits and missions for a few years.

HOME LIFE.

She seemed an angel to our infant eyes! Once, when the glorifying moon revealed her who at evening by our pillow kneel—Soft-voiced and golden-haired, from holy skies Flown to her loves on wings of Paradise—We looked to see the pinions half concealed. The Tuscan vines and olives will not yield Her back to me, who loved her in this wise. And since have little known her, but have grown To see another mother, tenderly Watch over sleeping children of my own. Porchance the years have changed her, yet alone

This picture lingers; still she seems to me The fair young angel of my infancy.

—Stedman.

A Tragedian's Rendition of the Lord's Prayer.

In the early and palmy days of his theatrical career, Booth and several friends had been invited to dine with an old gentleman in Baltimore, of distinguished kindness, urbanity, and piety. The host, though disapproving of theatres and theatre-going, had heard so much of Booth's remarkable powers, that curiosity to see the man had overcome all scruples and prejudices. After the entertainment was over, lamps lighted, and the company re-seated in the drawing-room, some one requested Booth, as a particular favor, and one which all present would, doubtless, appreciate, to read aloud the Lord's Prayer.

Booth expressed his willingness, and all eyes were turned expectantly upon him. Slowly and reverently he rose from his chair. It was wonderful to watch the emotions that convulsed his countenance. He became deadly pale, and his eyes, turning tremulously upwards, were suffused with tears. As yet he had not spoken. The silence could be felt. It had become absolutely painful, until at last the spell was broken, as if by an electric shock. With rich-toned voice, from white lips, he syllabled forth, "Our Father, which art in heaven," etc., with a pathos and solemnity that thrilled all hearts. He finished. The silence continued. Not a voice was heard nor muscle moved in the rapid audience, until from a remote corner of the room a subdued sob was heard, and the old gentleman (their host) stepped forward, with streaming eyes and tottering frame, and seized Booth by the hand. "Sir," said he, in broken accents, "you afford me a pleasure for which my whole future will feel grateful. I am an old man, and every day from my boyhood to the present time I thought I had repeated the Lord's Prayer; but I have never heard it before—never."

"You are right," replied Booth. "To read that prayer as it should be read, has caused me the severest study and labor for thirty years; and I am yet far from being satisfied with my rendering of that wonderful production. Hardly one person in ten thousand comprehends how much beauty, tenderness, and grandeur can be condensed in a space so small, and in words so simple. That prayer itself illustrates the truth of the Bible, and stamps upon it the seal of divinity."

So great was the effect produced, that the conversation was sustained but a short time longer in subdued monosyllables, and almost ceased; and soon after, at an early hour, the company broke up and returned to their several homes, with thoughtful faces and full hearts.—Exchange.

Christ's Captivity of the World's Thought.

Let us take one of Christ's great creative and formative thoughts—his thought of the rights and value of the individual. The history of the race before Christ came and outside the range of his thought to-day is a picture of the exaltation of the few at the cost and degradation of the many. Kings looked upon their subjects as so much private property. No one of the splendid religions even of antiquity concerned itself about the common people. The good things of this life were parcelled out among the king on the throne, the noble in the castle, and the priest in the cloister. Even in the high civilization of Greece and Rome charity and philanthropy were unknown. These are too mild and effeminate terms to be born of the colossal and rough-hewn nature of that old world. Even where on rare occasions nowadays, the heart of the world man comes into play, in it you see the monster and the tyrant. Its very affection bears the mark of oppression and no glove is thick enough to conceal the iron hand beneath it. Men had long accustomed themselves to think that God only saw those who were on top until Jesus came and overturned the social philosophy and economy of 4,000 years. He taught that every man was the offspring of God and gifted in his very nature with equal and inalienable rights. He substituted for Jewish nationalism, and race, and class distinction, human brotherhood. The key-note of his teaching was the imperial dignity of the individual, the inherent right and priceless value of the single human soul. No teacher ever individualized man as Christ did. Man was no longer to lose himself in the state as classical antiquity taught him to do, but to stand out and to stand up in his separate personality and individual rights and value. States and their institutions were only valuable so far as they built manhood.

This thought of Christ is the dominating force of our modern civilization. Transforming first the currents of the individual life, it spreads until it so far affects public sentiment as to find expression in declarations of rights and constitutions of governments. Out of this thought come all our liberties, charities, humanities and philanthropies. It is not too much to say that Christ has created the three great worlds which stand for the highest and best things in our civilization, viz.: Humanity, liberty, and philanthropy.—Rev. Dr. Geo. W. Miller, Kansas City.

A Mother's Gratitude.

Sixty years ago an English mother wrote in a letter to a friend: "It was too damp to go out this evening, so I staid at home with Stanley's Notes of Arnold's Sermons. I have often said before, but I must say it once again. What a feeling of gratitude it gives me toward the man who makes such thoughts pass through my child's mind!"

There are few Arnolds, as there are few Arthur Stanleys, but there are many earnest teachers who are trying in day schools and Sunday-schools to make good thoughts pass through a child's mind. This is a great privilege. Let all who enjoy it be earnest, faithful, and let parents help them in all possible ways. Pastors and teachers need all the support and aid that grateful parents can give them.

But what of the man who makes a bad thought pass through the mind of a child? A book, a newspaper, a tract, a leaflet, a picture may do that fearful work. Let parents use all sleepless watchfulness here. The bad thought may not pass through the mind; it may lodge there. The result may be a bad life.

Old Age.

Rowland Hill, himself a very old man, says that he heard of one who was asked what age he was. He answered, "The right side of eighty." "I thought you were more than eighty," said the inquirer. "Yes, I am beyond it," he replied; "and that is the right side, for I am nearer to my eternal rest."

A man once said to Dr. Roe, "You are whitening fast." The doctor answered him in a sermon which he preached immediately after: "There is a wee white flower which cometh up through the earth at this season of the year. Sometimes it comes up through the snow and frost; but we are all glad to see the snow-drops, because it proclaims that the winter is over, and that summer is at hand. A friend reminded me last night that I was whitening fast. But heed not that, brother; it is to me a proof that my winter will soon be over—that I shall have done presently with the cold east winds and the frosts of the earth, and that my summer—my eternal summer—is at hand."

To a humble Christian it was remarked, "I fear you are near another world." "Fear it, sir!" he replied, "I know I am; but, blessed be the Lord, I do not fear it—I hope it!"

The Apostle Paul was an old man, but, happily for him, he was no apostate, and so he could say, "I know in whom I have believed, and that he will keep that which I have committed to him to that day, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

But for old age to be happy it must be a time of acceptance. Old age fought against it, miserable, old age accepted it calm and peaceful. Enamored wrinkles dare not smile, the honest wrinkles may even laugh. To be living in a mistake is to be living in a false position, and in all false positions there is weakness and discomfort and misery.

Read for Personal Profit.

Do not read the Bible for others, for class or congregation, but for yourself. Bring all its rays to a focus on your own heart. While you are reading, often ask that some verse or verses may start out from the printed page as God's message to yourself. And never close the book until you feel that you are carrying away your portion of meat from that hand which satisfieth the desire of every living thing. It is well, sometimes, to stop reading, and seriously ask, What does the Holy Spirit mean to me to learn by this; what bearing should this have on my life; how can I work this into the fabric of my character?

Above all, turn from the printed page to prayer. If a cluster of heavenly fruit hangs within reach, gather it. If a promise lies upon the page as a bank check, cash it. If a prayer is recorded, appropriate it, and launch it as a feathered arrow from the bow of your desire. If an example of holiness gleams before you, ask God to do as much for you. If a truth is revealed in all its intrinsic splendor, entreat that its brilliance may ever irradiate the hemispheres of yourself like a star. Entwine the clinging creepers of holy desire about the lattice-work of Scripture. So shall you come to say with the Psalmist, "Oh, how love I thy law; it is my meditation all the day!"—Rev. F. B. Meyer.

Who Manages the World?

When Bulstrode Whitlocke, the English statesman, was embarking for Sweden in 1633, to negotiate a treaty with Queen Christina, it is said he was so greatly distressed as he rested at Harwich that night, while reflecting on the distracted state of affairs in England, that he could not sleep. In his restless sleep his secretary said to him:

"Pray, sir, may I ask you a question?"

"Certainly," was the reply of the ambassador.

"Pray, sir, don't you think God governed the world very well all the time before you came into it?"

"Unquestionably," was the answer.

"And, sir, don't you think he will govern it just as well when you are out of it?"

"Certainly," said Whitlocke.

"Then, sir, don't you think you can trust him to take care of it over night, and that it will be safe in his care while you go to sleep?"

The question answered itself. The anxious statesman cast his burden on the Lord, and laid himself down and slept. And if we consider who manages this world, we, too, may dismiss our fears and rest upon his arm.—Selected.

A Whole Bible.

"We believe the whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation; all we understand, and all we do not."

A Christian standing on this ground is pretty safe when the mutterings and thunderings of unbelief sweep over his path. The two lids of that precious volume hold the talisman of his strength, and he can not allow the winds of unbelief to blow one page from between their covers. He will proudly, at God's command, at the last day, state that this book contained his creed, contained his prayers, contained his songs of rejoicing. It was the man of his counsel, and the guide of his youth. It was a lamp to his feet, a light through this world of darkness and danger and sin. A very pleasant guide in all trouble, pointing the way out through all difficulties, and continually emitting new consolations, new joys, new life, as showing the only source of all health and comfort in sorrow and affliction.—Christ—Selected.

The oft-raised question as to Queen Victoria's surname is thus answered by a recent writer: "She is, of course, a Guelph by ancestral lineage, which is traced by the genealogists from the Empress St. Cunegonde, consort to the Emperor St. Henry II. A. D. 1024. Both are canonized saints and both were solemnly crowned at Rome by Pope Benedict VIII. But all this relates merely to the pedigree of Princess Alexandra Victoria prior to her marriage in 1840 to Prince Albert of Saxony-Coburg-Gotha. This prince was of the ancient house of Saxony, whose family name is, and has during more than four centuries been, Wettin. Obviously, therefore, the Guelph princess became upon her marriage Mrs. Wettin."

Progress is our being's motto and hope. Gaining and losing in this world, rising and falling, enjoying and suffering are but the incidents of life. Learning, aspiration, progress, is the life of life. Onward, then, pilgrims, to eternity.—Dr. Dewey.

Without memory, the judgment must be unemployed, and ignorance must be the consequence. Memory is one of the greatest gifts of nature.—Montaigne.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

MOTHER.

In all the world—go where you will—You'll never find another Who'll cling to you through good or ill. And love you like a mother.

In all the world—where'er you roam—With sister, wife or brother, You'll never know so sweet a home As that one made by—mother.

In all the world—the wealth commands For you the work of others—You'll never find a pair of hands To toil for you like—mother's.

In all the world—though friends sincere Are more to you than brothers, You never for a moment hear A voice as kind as—mother's.

In all the world—although you break The tender hearts of others, There is no heart that can ache For you as much as—mother's.

In all the world—though you create A pleasure for another, You can give to none a joy so great As you can give to—mother.

In all the world—where you in bliss May soon forget another, There is no one whom you will miss When she is gone, like—mother.

AS FAR AS CHICAGO.

Late arrival of Bishop Key's letter of credit detained us in Nashville until Friday, June 17. Though this meant "no stop over among the Rockies," it gave opportunity to collect thoughts and say "good-by" to friends. Of both, Yoshioka had formed many during his stay at Vanderbilt. We got a cheap rate to Chicago on account of the National Democratic Convention, which was gathering there. In leaving Nashville, also, there is tugging up hill and through boulders. The national cemetery, where are buried 25,000 Federal soldiers who fell upon the fields of Nashville and Murfreesboro, was passed, and it was time to rest. The train went out of Tennessee into Kentucky, where were born both Jeff Davis and Abe Lincoln. Nothing was seen of the blue grass, with its fine homes, for we were asleep, and there were far to the last in the valleys of the Licking and Kentucky. Mammoth Cave, with its 200 miles of galleries, was also to the east in the center of the State. I awoke for a few minutes just after midnight in time to see the train cross the Ohio and move by Evansville. The most seen of that flourishing Indiana town was a large saw-mill upon the river bank. Its electric lights annihilated the midnight and made me wonder if its wheels could be buzz on Sundays. Coal and iron are in this region.

During the morning a rainbow spanned the grain field in the prairie, promising well to the traveler. "Chicago" is the talk as people get on at Terre Haute and other places. Even the limestone seen along the way in Indiana and Illinois is used in the ornamental fronts of the great buildings of that city. After the train had reached the corporate limits, it rolled past many a broad and busy mart before it made a final stop.

If the young reader becomes interested in the places mentioned on the way enough to read about them in his geography or encyclopedia, my writing will do good. This kind of reading is called parallel reading, and much of it is required in some college literature courses.)

MR. EDITOR: This is my second letter to the Advocate. I am a little girl ten years old. My papa takes the Advocate, and I take the Little Worker. I like it so much. We have no missionary society here. When we lived in Mississippi I belonged to the Land of Hope. When I wrote to the Advocate before my mama was very sick, and I asked all of the Christian people to pray for her to get well, and now she is well, and we thank God every day, and think of the kind friends who prayed so hard for her. Can any of the little cousins tell me what is meant in Luke xxi, 35, by "Heaven and earth shall pass away"? I earned money enough yesterday to pay my subscription to the Little Worker. Now, Mr. Editor, don't you think that is pretty good for a little girl ten years old?

Facts about Flags.

To "strike the flag" is to lower the national colors in token of submission.

Flags are used as the symbol of rank and command, the officers using them being called flag officers. Such flags are square, to distinguish them from other banners.

A "flag of truce" is a white flag displayed to an enemy to indicate a desire for a parley or consultation.

The white flag is a sign of peace. After a battle parties from both sides often go out to a field to rescue the wounded or bury the dead under the protection of a white flag.

The red flag is a sign of defiance, and is often used by revolutionists. In our service it is a mark of danger, and shows a vessel to be receiving or discharging her powder.

The black flag is a sign of prayer. The yellow flag shows a vessel to be in quarantine, or is the sign of a contagious disease. A flag at half-mast means mourning. Fishing and other vessels return with a flag at half-mast to announce the loss or death of some of them.

Dipping the flag is lowering it slightly and then holding it again, to salute a vessel or fort.

If the President of the United States goes abroad, the American flag is carried in the bow of his barge or hoisted at the main of the vessel on board of which he is.—Selected.

I wonder many times that ever a child of God should have a sad heart, considering what the Lord is preparing for him.—Samuel Rutherford.

SCIENTIFIC.

Interesting Facts about Light and Sound.

BY REV. R. W. LOWRIE, D. D.

Light, falling on any ordinary substance, produces a sound. Throw a beam of it on a glass vessel full of lampblack, and sound may be detected. Or, pass the light through a prism and form a rainbow; as the rainbow falls on the glass vessel, a distinct sound will be heard. Some of the colors give no sound, so that as the various components of a ray of light fall in quick succession on the receiver, pauses in the sound will be perceived. Red and blue light makes a louder sound than green. Fill the glass vessel with red worsted, and throw the green light from a prism on it, and the noise is very loud. "Aud, so, one by one, we penetrate the mysteries of nature."

Stand at one end of a stone or brick wall, and have some one strike the other end with a hammer. You will detect two distinct sounds from each blow of the hammer. One comes to your ear through the medium of the air; the other, through the wall itself. From particle to particle, whether of air, stone or any other substance, the impulses of sound travel, and so it is that you hear two strokes instead of one. The discovery of the fact that the fall of light creates sound is new; the double sounds from brick or stone is old, and anyone can test it for himself.

Water conveys sound about four times as fast as air; wood, eight or ten times as fast; iron, fifteen times. Take a tuning-fork, strike it, and then rest it first in water, then on wood and then on a piece of iron, and notice how differently these substances augment the sound, and you have a very pretty and pleasant experiment.

Explosive a fire-cracker in an empty barrel, and it sounds about as loud as a gun; fire a gun off on the top of a mountain, where the air is very thin, and it will sound about as loud as a fire-cracker. Sound travels at the rate of about 1,100 feet every second. Fire a gun, and anyone at a distance will see the flash before he hears the sound; light goes faster than sound, you see.

I stood, the other day, on the platform of a railroad station in the country. As the ears got near they whistled, also while going by, and again while going on past us. I noticed a singular thing, and that was, that four hundred yards off, the whistle sounded one note higher, each way. That is, at the station it was "B"; four hundred yards before it got there it was "C"; and after falling, directly opposite the station, to "B"; when the train got four or five hundred yards away again, the sound went up to "C" again. It was owing to the pulsations of sound being crowded together on the ear by the swiftness of the train. Directly opposite to us, they were not crowded on the ear.—Exchange.

ELECTRICITY FOR THE FARMER.—That there is a possibility of the application of electric force becoming a great benefit to the farmer is pointed out by a writer in the Engineering Magazine. He estimates that 90 per cent. of the roads in the United States could be equipped with the necessary tracks, poles, and wires at a cost of $3,500 per mile, and doubtless the time is not far off when it can be done for a considerably less amount. This writer says that the heaviest transportation charges which the farmer is compelled to pay are due to his horses, his road wagons and the dirt roads, and that when he shall drive electric wagons on the highways he will soon learn also that the heavier part of his farm labor can be more expeditiously and cheaply performed by electric power than by horse power. It is suggested as one very important result of such changed conditions that they would have an effect upon the movement of population. Many of the causes which induce population to drift to the cities would be removed, and the country would be regarded as an ideal place for the rearing and training of children. There is nothing fanciful in this, and undoubtedly its practical realization is only a matter of time, not universally, perhaps, but in the more prosperous and progressive sections of the country. To the extent which the application of electrical force may be found practicable and profitable in connection with the agricultural interests it will undoubtedly be employed in due time.—Omaha Aea.

TRANSPIRATION IN PLANTS.—The knowledge of transpiration in plants is still very defective. It has recently been ascertained that the transpirational activity is most vigorous in the early stages of a flower, while it still possesses soft tissues only, that transpiration diminishes with growth, and that there is very little transpiration after the bud is half-grown. Later on, when the flower opens, there is again an increase in transpiration, and this increase is continuous until the death of the flower. The flower early reaches the end of its term of existence—about the time of opening—from that time forward decay in all the tissues commences, and the water in the cells is in a less stable state of combination. Indeed, from that time forward the term transpiration might almost be changed for evaporation. A flower, therefore, really fades more from the drying out of moisture than from any act of vital power, which we understand by the term transpiration. To sum up, transpiration is very active in the young bud, increasing gradually until it ceases to swell, then again becoming active, reaching its greatest activity just as it is about to open. From that time forward transpiration is practically evaporation, and continues in full activity until the whole flower dries up.—Independent.

RECENT APPLICATIONS OF PAPER.—The year 1891 was certainly one of those in which new industrial applications of paper were most numerous. The idea of using paper in place of stone in the construction of houses is already old; but paper to take the place of glass in windows, of clay in flower-pots, of iron in railway rails, wagon-wheels and horseshoes, of porcelain in laboratory ware, of wood in barrels, it having already taken the place of that material in small boats, paper in pulleys, are applications as novel as bold. The manufacture of window-panes of paper was first tried in the United States. The panes have the appearance of milky glass, and the property of intercepting the light-rays while letting the heat-rays through, which makes them suitable for green-houses. It is estimated that a paper window-pane thirty-four by thirty-three centimeters in dimensions in a wooden sash with iron appliances, will cost about eighty-five cents, and last on the average four years.—Popular Science Monthly.

The veterinary surgeon has called in electricity to his aid in order to establish the state of a horse's foot. One pole of a battery is placed in contact with the inside hoof, the other in contact with the iron shoe. If the hoof has been pierced with a nail to the quick, the horse will feel the electric current and become irritated; in other cases, the current can not pass through the hoof.

Macbeth's "pearl top" and "pearl glass" lamp-chimneys are made of tough glass that costs four times as much as common glass; and the work on them costs a good deal more than the work on common chimneys, just as the work on a dress is proportioned to cost of stuff.

The dealer is right in saying he can't afford to sell them at the prices of common-glass chimneys.

And what will become of his chimney trade if his chimneys never break? He is apt to be wrong there. He can afford to charge a fair price and give new chimneys for all that break in use.

Have a talk with him.

Many a life has been lost because of the taste of cod-liver oil.

If Scott's Emulsion did nothing more than take that taste away, it would save the lives of some at least of those that put off too long the means of recovery.

It does more. It is half-digested already. It slips through the stomach as if by stealth. It goes to make strength when cod-liver oil would be a burden.

GOFF.—Sister MARTHA R. GOFF was born April 28, 1834; joined the church in 1852; was married to Bro. Goff in 1856, and died a happy, glorious death, after long and very painful suffering with cancer, Oct. 20, 1892, being at the time of her death fifty-eight years five months and twenty-two days old.

Sister Goff was one of the best Christian women I ever met. She was a faithful, devoted wife; a tender, loving mother; a consecrated, zealous member of the church—one of the pillars; a good neighbor, ever ready to administer to the wants of the poor and afflicted, and a devoted Christian in the fullest sense of the term. But she has gone to her eternal reward. Our loss is her eternal gain. She was ready, willing and waiting for the summons, "Come up higher."

Oh, how we will miss her in the church, in the community, at her home! She was a power for good in the church, and, therefore, her death will be a great loss to the church. But no one will feel the loss so much as her only surviving son and his family, and her niece, Miss Sallie Cason, who had lived with her for several years, and seemed to be as much devoted to her as if she had been her own mother. No one can take the place of mother.

May God abundantly bless her dear son and the family, and may a double portion of her faith and zeal for and in the blessed Christ rest upon him! May he go even beyond her in consecration to the service of our Divine Master, if possible; and may he be and his family so live that they may meet in heaven!

Sister Goff was a devoted friend to her pastor, and especially to the writer. Her life, devotion, faith, patience, and happy experience, even up to the hour of death, has been an inspiration to my faith in our holy Christianity. The world has been made better by her having lived in it.

Farewell, dear sister, but not forever. We will meet you by and by. May God bless her loved ones and relatives, and save them in heaven! Her pastor, A. D. MILLER.

THORN.—Mrs. SARAH LAVINA THORN was born in Georgia, Dec. 15, 1817, and died at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. H. L. Newcomb, Pilcher's Point, East Carroll parish, La., on Oct. 31, 1892. She was sick only a few days, but the summons found her ready, as she is said to have "died in the triumph of faith."

Rev. R. S. Lebold, of Lake Providence, officiated at her funeral, and laid her to rest near the residence of her son-in-law.

She leaves two sons and three daughters. She had been a member of the Southern Methodist Church for twenty-six years, her membership at the time of her death being at Louisiana Avenue Church. Before joining the Methodist Church she had been a communicant of the Episcopal Church. She was a genuine and thoroughly consistent Christian. Though of a very quiet, retiring and sensitive nature, always shrinking from public prominence, her daily walk was such as to convince her relatives and friends that she was indeed a child of God, having her life "hid with Christ in God."

Sister Thorn was very affectionate and tender-hearted, even the domestic animals sharing in her kindly attentions and interest. It is said of her that "she lived for her family."

A most loving mother and grandmother, her children and grandchildren call her "blessed," and no one can forget her steady devotion to them and her unwearied care for their well-being. She did her part well, and in her own sweet, unobtrusive and loving way accomplished her life-work. Failing asleep in Jesus, after a long course of faithful usefulness to others, she has entered upon her reward in the land of the forever saved. May those left behind, and for whom she unselfishly lived follow her as she followed Christ, and so come at last to meet her again in the glory-world!

JNO. T. SAWYER.

FLANNIKEN.—Mrs. S. ELIZABETH FLANNIKEN was born in East Feliciana parish, La., June 13, 1842, and died July 14, 1892, at her home very near the place where she breathed her first life.

When quite young she married Mr. T. B. Morgan, whom death soon claimed as a victim, leaving her a widow with two little boys to battle with the storms of life. The smallest boy died young; the other grew to manhood, married, died and left two little boys to their grandmother's care. While Mrs. Morgan's children were quite small, she married Mr. S. J. Flanniken, of which union six boys and two daughters were born, all of whom survive her to mourn their irreparable loss. She was, indeed, a devoted wife and mother. Unlike many mothers, she seemed to think and feel that home, with care of its loving inmates, was her province. She mourned the loss of her husband. Mr. Flanniken was called from earth away not quite thirteen months previous to her demise.

Mrs. Flanniken joined the Baptist Church, Oct. 11, 1859, and lived a consistent member to the time of her death. Her sweet, jovial Christian character is worthy of imitation. She bore the intense sufferings of her last illness with Christian fortitude. While breathing almost the last, with a pleasant smile she waved her hand, as if to say to loved sorrowing ones, "All is well with me!" therefore, dear ones, anshrine in your hearts love, and rever the beautiful memory of dear mama and grandma, and prepare to meet her in that blessed abode where parting never comes, and sin and sorrow are unknown. A RELATIVE.

BRUNER.—The following resolutions were read before the Plaquemine Bruce Sunday-school, Oct. 9, 1892:

We, your committee appointed by the superintendent of the Plaquemine Bruce Methodist Sunday-school to draft resolutions as a memorial tribute to the memory and death of little MAUD, daughter of Mr. Joseph and Mrs. Allie Bruner, who was a member of our Sunday-school from almost the tender years of infancy to the last Sabbath spent upon earth, beg leave to report as follows: That we have retrospected her faithfulness to her Sabbath-school, as well as every other duty of childhood, and have noted the fact that our little Maud exemplified the sweetness of a pure and gentle little Christian—for such she became and attached herself to the church—and ever lived a worthy example of promptness in attendance upon her Sunday-school and in a commitment to memory every part of each lesson. Little Maud was a perfect model of womanly deportment when ever and wherever she was called to communicate with other children of her rank.

Resolved, That, as a Sunday-school, we lament and bewail the departure of Maud Bruner, which took place Sept. 28, 1892; that we miss her every Sunday morning, as her accustomed seat forever vacated, and her sweet voice stifled and hushed by the relentless hand of death.

Resolved, That, while we mourn after her, we bow in submission to her early removal from us, since "God doeth all things well."

Resolved, That we think of dear little Maud as not dead, but sleeping, to awake to eternal life on the blessed morn of the resurrection of the just; that even now, on this glorious Sabbath, her soul sings with the angels in the better world.

Resolved, That the family are hereby assured of our tenderest sympathy in this bereavement, and our constant prayers to God for sustaining grace upon each heart of the broken family circle, and that we all live so as to meet the dear little saint in heaven.

Resolved, That a copy of this paper be furnished the family, and that a copy be furnished the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, for publication.

Mrs. MARY HARMAN, For Committee.

KENDRICK.—Miss MAGGIE O. KENDRICK, daughter of John H. and Julia C. Kendrick, was born in Copiah county, Miss., Sept. 20, 1877; joined the church at about ten years old, or about 1887, and died after about three weeks' severe suffering of typhoid pneumonia, Oct. 29, 1892, being at the time of her death twenty-five years one month and nine days old.

Miss Maggie was a loving, obedient daughter, a tender, affectionate sister, a devoted friend, a consistent member of the church, and, we trust, a true Christian. She left testimony to that effect before she died; so we feel sure that our loss is her eternal gain. We shall miss her in her home, in the community, in the church, in the school-room—everywhere. But we know where to find her—just over on the other side in the sweet by-and-by. Farewell, Miss Maggie, for a little while; we will soon follow on. May the God of all grace abundantly bless and sustain the bereaved parents, brothers and sisters, and help them to so live as to meet her where parting will be felt and feared no more! is the prayer of their pastor, A. D. MILLER.

ROTH.—On Sunday, Oct. 30, 1892, the McNutt Methodist Sunday-school appointed a committee who drafted the following resolutions:

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to remove from our midst to heaven little EARNST ROTH, who was a member of our Sunday-school; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we, in humility, submit to the will of God, we can but feel that our Sunday-school has lost one of its brightest little members, though circumstances were such that she could not attend regularly; yet our loss sustained can not soon be recovered, and, too, it is her eternal gain.

Resolved, That we extend to the heart-stricken family our deepest sympathies in this, their darkest hour, and try to incite them to the fact that she is at rest, and it will not be long until they can meet her where parting is no more.

Resolved, That, as a tribute to her memory, these resolutions be spread upon a page in the record of this Sunday-school, a copy be furnished the bereaved family, and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and each of the two county papers for publication.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption. When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now resides in this country free of all complaint of two years to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1093 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

ACME BLACKING is cheaper at 20 cents a bottle than any other Dressing at 5 cents.

A LITTLE GOES A LONG WAYS because shoes once blackened with it can be kept clean by washing them with water. People in moderate circumstances find it profitable to buy it at 20c. a bottle, because what they spend for Blacking they save in shoe leather.

It is the cheapest blacking considering its quality, and yet we want to sell it cheaper if it can be done. We will pay $10,000 Reward for a receipt that will enable us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. This offer is open until Jan. 1st, 1893.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE in New Orleans, 28 CAMP STREET 30

There were three crows sat on a tree,
As black as any crows could be.
"Alas!" said one, "would I were white Instead of being black as night."
"Such foolish wishing," said his friends,
"In disappointment often ends."
But now, forsooth, to make you white,
We'll wash you well with some GOLD DUST,
And when you're white, we fondly trust
That while you wonder at the feat,
Your happiness will be complete.

Behold him now as white as snow!
Wonder of wonders! saith the crow,
"If GOLD DUST POWDER makes black white,
'Twill surely all the world delight;
And mistress, mother, nurse and maid
Will find themselves henceforth well paid
In using this great help for all,
The household's needs—both great and small;
For dishes, kettles, pots and pans,
For paint, and floors, and milkmen's cans—
It surely will great comfort bring,
And clean each dirty place or thing;
For what will make a black crow white,
Will make whate'er is dingy bright."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

History of the Mississippi Conference.

BY REV. C. G. ANDREWS, D. D.

The Mississippi Territory, so called in Methodist history, embraced originally the States of Alabama and Mississippi, which was supplied with the gospel by presiding elders from districts from the Western, then from the Tennessee Conferences.

The General Conference of 1812 authorized the Bishops, if they thought it to be necessary, to organize another Annual Conference lower down on the Mississippi river. The Bishops deemed it necessary, and appointed the Mississippi Conference to be held in Spring Hill Church, Jefferson county, Miss., on Nov. 1, 1813. Predatory bands of hostile Indians made traveling through the territory to be exceedingly dangerous. Bishop Ashbury, in his journal, Oct. 3, 1813, records: "The Tennessee Conference was not willing to let the Bishops go to the Mississippi Conference."

THE FIRST SESSION

Accordingly had to be held without a Bishop. The Conference met on Nov. 1, 1813, in the Spring Hill Church. Samuel Sellers was elected president, and Williams Winans was chosen secretary. The other members were Miles Harper, Richmond Nolley, Lewis Hobbs, John S. Ford, John Phillips, John Shrock, Thomas Griffin, John I. E. Byrd. The numbers in society were 1,536 white members and 432 colored members.

The first session of the Conference presided over by a Bishop was held at William Foster's, on Pine Ridge, seven miles north of Natchez, Oct. 10, 1816. John Menefee was secretary. The appointments for this session were as follows:

Mississippi District.—Thomas Griffin, presiding elder; Natchez and Claiborne, John Menefee; Wilkinson, John Lane; Amite, Thomas Owens; Pearl River, Peter James; Tombigbee, Eliza Lott.

Louisiana District.—Ashley Hewitt, presiding elder; Attakapas, Thomas Nixon; Rapides, Alexander Fleming; Washita, Ashley Hewitt.

WHAT HATH GOD WROUGHT?

From this little band and their successors the gospel was to be supplied to the entire Southwest. As their numbers increased, they pushed their way into the regions beyond. As the territory was occupied, new Conferences were set apart according to the manner of Methodists. The Alabama Conference was set off in 1831, and appointed to meet in Tuscaloosa, Nov. 27, 1832. The Texas Conference was established in 1839, and appointed to meet on Dec. 28, 1840. The Louisiana Conference was authorized in 1846, and met in Opelousa, Jan. 6, 1847. So that in the territory once claimed of divine right by the Mississippi Conference there now exists eleven organized Annual Conferences; two in Mississippi, two in Alabama, one in Louisiana, and six in Texas. The original ten traveling preachers have swelled into 1,400, and the membership of 1,536 now numbers 318,052.

The Conference, as it now exists, embraces about half of the State of Mississippi and several parishes in Louisiana. It contains 164 traveling preachers, 185 local preachers, and 38,029 members.

EDUCATIONAL ENTERPRISES.

The Mississippi Conference claims to have had the first female college in the entire Methodist connection in the Elizabeth Academy, in Adams county, where many Mississippi matrons received their education.

The Sharon Female College long flourished under the auspices of the Conference.

Whitworth Female College, originally the gift of Rev. Martin J. Whitworth, and conducted to marvelous success by the Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., still exists a monument to management and to love of learning.

Port Gibson Female College has for many years furnished the higher education for young ladies.

East Mississippi Female College, located at Meridian, the extreme eastern portion of the State, still offers approved culture and thorough training.

Edward McGehee College for Girls—formerly Woodville Female Seminary, but changed to its present title in honor of its princely founder—has done and is still doing a noble work in educating the youth of the land.

Centenary College, named from the centennial year of Methodism, was founded in Rankin county, Miss., in 1839; was removed to Jackson, La., in 1845, where it still exists, with ample buildings and an endowment approximating $100,000.

Millsaps College—the product of the munificent gift of $50,000 from Reuben Webster Millsaps, and a like sum from the Methodists of Mississippi—has sprung into a phenomenal existence during the present year, with adequate appurtenances and a student body numerous and promising.

FINANCES THEN AND NOW.

The sum of $400,064 drawn from the Book Concern from the chartered fund, from mite subscriptions and from Conference collections, was reported to the session of 1816. This sum was appropriated among the Bishops and the ministers according to their necessities, the highest appropriation being $61. The exactness of these pioneers, and their appreciation of small things, is shown in appropriating $1,561 of the general fund to a laborer who had received from his circuit $98.43.

The nearest approach to missionary operation was the appropriation of a $100 balance "to the Tennessee and the Missouri Conferences, to assist in making up the deficient salaries of their preachers," and at the session of 1813 "a surplus of $30 was voted to William Winans, to enable him to fill the Orleans station."

For the year ending Dec. 14, 1891, the Mississippi Conference reported the following average salary to the preachers, $531.57; for the Bishops' fund, $1,641.65; Conference claimants, $4,241.05; foreign missions, $7,090.55; domestic missions, $3,077.05; church extension, $2,141.70; education, $1,231.59.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

No mention is made of Sunday-schools in the records accessible, though it was not long, doubtless, before Sunday-schools were established by the followers of John Wesley, who himself was the originator of Sunday-schools. For last year the Conference reported 398 Sunday-schools, 2,212 officers and teachers, and 17,051 scholars.

CHURCH BUILDINGS AND PARSONAGES.

A parsonage was unknown in the Mississippi Territory for many years after it began to be traveled by the faithful itinerant. The first Conference sessions were composed entirely of unmarried men, who had no need of homes. The churches for a long time, particularly in the country places, were very crude structures, often of pine logs, with split logs for pews.

The last session reports the number of churches to be 425, and their value $429,705; the number of parsonages to be 95, and their value $94,650.

REPRESENTATIVE MEN.

The Mississippi Conference has made an honorable record for herself among all Methodist peoples, because of the men of mark whom she produced. With no purpose to deprecate the many who are worthy of honorable mention, these names are given:

William Winans, the great Methodist commoner, whose deliverance in the General Conference always commanded reverent attention and carried conviction.

Benjamin M. Drake, whose pure life and noble bearing constituted him the Chevalier Bayard among Methodist preachers, sans peur et sans reproche.

William Hamilton Watkins, the polished Christian gentleman, the courteous college president, the eminent divine.

Richard Abbey, whose prolific pen produced more books and articles for the periodicals than any preacher of his age.

John G. Jones, the historian of the Conference, from whose writings many of the facts of this article are taken.

Charles K. Marshall, whose gift of winning speech was not surpassed in any age.

Charles B. Galloway, elected Bishop at an earlier age than any other man in Northern or Southern Methodism, yet vindicating the wisdom of the election by golden opinions won on both sides of the ocean.

Of laymen there could not be a worthier spokesman produced in any land than Edward McGehee, the purest type of a Southern gentleman, the prince in his bearing, cultured in his tastes, munificent in his gifts, a leader among men, a devout servant of God.

The Educational Institutions of the Mississippi Conference.

BY REV. A. F. WATKINS.

The pioneer settlers of the territory now occupied by the State of Mississippi were not of that adventurous, and often lawless, class that usually settles a new country. They were, in many cases, men of fortune, who came from one of the older Southern States, bringing with them their families and property to build new homes and work out new fortunes in the great Southwest. Many of them were educated men, and the work of felling the forests was scarcely begun before provision for the education of their children began to be made, and it is a fact significant of the influence of early settlers that the educational enterprise which to-day characterizes our people is but the perpetuation of the spirit of enlightened interest in this cause which animated the hearts of our forefathers. It is also pleasant to note the fact that as soon as local self-government was granted to the people of the territory, the cause of higher education claimed their attention, and the first act of incorporation passed by the territorial legislature was one chartering a college for boys, and that the year succeeding the admission of our State into the Union saw the establishment of the first female college in the South. Both of these institutions were located at Washington, Adams county.

The former, Jefferson College, is still in operation, and is said to be, perhaps, the oldest existing college in the entire South, outside of Virginia and North Carolina. The latter, the Elizabeth Female Academy, was the property of the M. E. Church, and its presidential chair was, at different times, occupied by such men as Rev. Jno. C. Burruss, Rev. B. M. Drake, and others of like character. The institution achieved a great reputation, and, though modestly called an "academy," it was, from the thoroughness of its equipment, the range of its course of instruction, and the number of pupils in attendance, worthy of being called a college. Its honored career was continued to 1844, when, after twenty-five years of usefulness to the Church and State, it was abandoned.

These two colleges may be taken as representatives of the two educational forces of our civilization—the State and the Church. From the former, as a starting-point, it would be interesting to note the growth of the educational impulse which has given us our well-organized public schools, our State University, our Agricultural and Mechanical College, and our Industrial Institute and College. Beginning with the latter, it would be pleasant to mark the educational activity shown by the different churches, and to examine the institutions which they have established. But the limits of this paper confine us to a survey of the work done by the Methodists in the southern half of the State.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

At a convention of the members of the Mississippi Conference, held in Jackson on the seventh of August, 1839, it was determined to establish a college to be located as near the center of the Conference as practicable, and at the ensuing Conference session Dr. C. K. Marshall was made canvassing agent, and a committee appointed to decide upon a suitable location. In a few months Dr. Marshall reported scholarship subscriptions to the amount of $76,000, and some donations in land, and in 1841 Centenary College was located at Brandon Springs, twelve miles east of Jackson. Dr. Thos. C. Thornton was elected president, and in the Fall of 1841 the first session opened with an attendance of 60. In 1842 a medical department had been organized and a law department projected, and the attendance was 175. Dr. Thornton resigned in 1844, and was succeeded by Hon. David O. Shattuck as president pro tem. The session of 1844-45 opened well, but a growing conviction of the unwisdom of the location at Brandon Springs caused the removal in 1845 to Jackson, La. Here the college entered upon an era of increased prosperity. Magnificent buildings were erected, an extensive campus beautified, and thorough equipment in instructors and apparatus provided. This continued until the disasters of the Civil War caused a suspension of work. After the war the faculty was reorganized and the work resumed, and from this time the college, with varying fortunes and under many disadvantages, has continued its operations under the administration of such men as Dr. W. H. Watkins, Dr. C. G. Andrews, Rev. D. M. Rush, Dr. T. A. S. Adams, and Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, who took charge of the institution in 1888, and under whose efficient management a new endowment fund is being raised, and an average annual enrollment of about 100 students secured. This venerable institution was for many years our only school of the prophets, and the pride of our Methodism in the Southwest.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Port Gibson Female College was organized in 1843, though it was not incorporated until 1854. The buildings are of brick, and occupy an entire square, which is adorned with beautiful oaks. The patronage of the college has never been very large, but amply sufficient to demonstrate the value of the institution to the church. It is located in the midst of a fertile and healthful section of the State, and its faculty is faithful and competent. Rev. B. Jones, Prof. R. S. Ricketts, Rev. J. A. B. Jones, Rev. T. C. Bradford, Rev. E. H. Moulter, and Rev. B. F. Jones, the present incumbent, have occupied its presidential chair. The institution is in every way worthy of the liberal patronage of our people, and is remarkable for having enjoyed a longer uninterrupted term of service than any other female college in the State.

COLLEGE AND ACADEMY IN SHARON.

In 1837 there was founded in Sharon, Madison county, a rather strangely organized institution called the "College and Academy in Sharon." The college was for boys and the academy for girls, and both were the property of four denominations, each being represented in the faculty by one of its ministers. In 1843 the academy was deeded to the M. E. Church, and reorganized under the name of the "Sharon Female College." Rev. E. S. Robinson being placed at the head of affairs. Under President Robinson and his immediate successors the institution attained very considerable prosperity, especially under the able administration of Rev. Pleasant J. Eckles, who had charge from 1845 to 1854. In the meanwhile the college for boys had not prospered, and seems to have been abandoned; but in 1851 Madison College was established in Sharon, and Dr. Thornton and Rev. J. M. Pugh placed in charge of it. This college entered at once upon a career of great prosperity. During its period of greatest success, which coincided with that of the most marked prosperity of the Sharon Female College, the average attendance was 150, most of whom were in the college classes. This prosperity continued until the coming of the war, when both schools were forced to suspend. After the war the colleges were reorganized—the female college in 1868, with Rev. H. F. Johnson as president, and the male college in 1867, under the presidency of Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt. But the institutions languished, and the attempt to recall the prosperity of the past was in vain. In 1867 Dr. Johnson resigned to take charge of Whitworth Female College, and Dr. Hunnicutt succeeded him, while Prof. Pugh became the head of Madison College, and in 1872 both colleges ceased to exist. They were great schools in their palmy days, and hold an honored place in the history of Methodist education in Mississippi.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.

As we have seen, Rev. H. F. Johnson was, in 1867, called from Madison College to the presidency of Whitworth Female College, located at Brookhaven. This celebrated institution was founded in 1859 by Rev. M. J. Whitworth, incorporated in 1860, and in the Spring of that year opened with Rev. J. P. Lee as president. In 1861 Mr. Lee resigned and went North, and in April, 1862, he was succeeded by Rev. E. L. Croshy, who died in the course of a few months, and the buildings were used as a hospital until the close of the war. Rev. Geo. F. Thompson was president from 1865 to 1867. Dr. Johnson's administration was one of unexampled success. The patronage increased, the boarding pupils numbering at one time over 200; a debt was paid, and brick and frame buildings amounting in value to $45,000 were erected and generously deeded to the church, and the institution gained recognition as one of the finest female colleges in the South. In 1886 the great preacher and model college president died, and Prof. L. T. Fitzhugh, a prominent Methodist layman and an experienced educator, was elected president. Under President Fitzhugh the college has continued to prosper. The annual attendance averages 200, the faculty is full and carefully selected, the musical department has been extensively and thoroughly organized, and the number of music pupils is very large. The alumni of this great college number nearly 400, and among them are to be found many of the most prominent women of Mississippi and Louisiana. No sketch of Whitworth would be complete that did not mention the name of one who has for twenty years been identified with the educational work of Methodism in Mississippi, and who, since 1873, has been an honored member of the faculty of this institution. Reference is made, of course, to that modest and gifted Christian gentleman, Prof. R. S. Ricketts, whose career as a teacher has been one of unusual success, and who, for many years, was the trusted and valued co-laborer of Dr. Johnson.

WOODVILLE FEMALE ACADEMY.

The Woodville Female Academy was founded in 1860 by the liberality of Hon. Edward McGehee, who donated the valuable and extensive grounds, and at his own cost erected a commodious building. The war interrupted the work of preparation, and it was not until 1865 that, with Rev. W. T. Sullivan as president, the opening session began. Although the first sessions were promising, the institution has never attained the measure of prosperity that was expected for it. In 1870 Dr. Sullivan resigned, and for twenty years its existence was precarious. Rev. H. W. Featherston was elected president in 1890, and the name was changed to the "Edward McGehee College." Under its present management the college has prospered more than before, and the wisdom of locating and the necessity for supporting a Methodist college in this section of the State becomes more and more evident. Edward McGehee College is a worthy member of that quartet of sisters to whom the Methodists of South Mississippi look for the education of their daughters—a quartet including the institutions at Port Gibson, Brookhaven, Woodville and Meridian.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

The East Mississippi Female College, located at Meridian, was founded in 1871. The first president, Prof. S. P. Rice, was succeeded after one year by Rev. Jas. W. Adkisson, who, for ten years, wisely and successfully managed the affairs of the college. In 1884 Rev. A. D. McVoy became president, and in 1888 Rev. R. M. Saunders, who had charge of the institution for two years. Since 1890 the college has been under the presidency of Prof. C. W. Anderson, an accomplished layman, in whom experience has added wisdom to the enthusiasm of the horn teacher. His course of study is high and thorough, and his corps of teachers competent and conscientious. A new brick building was erected in 1890, which adds very considerably to the capacity and value of the property. The number of boarding pupils has never been large, but the local patronage is very good, and the fact that this is the only Methodist female college in this part of the State would seem to justify the opinion that a thorough cultivation of the field tributary to the school will eventually secure the patronage the institution so richly deserves.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

We come now to notice the last educational venture of the Methodists of Mississippi. Millsaps College, located at Jackson, was incorporated in 1890. It owes its existence to the munificence of Maj. R. W. Millsaps and the zeal of Bishop C. B. Galloway. It is the child of "the people called Methodists" in Mississippi, for under the influence of Major Millsaps' liberality and Bishop Galloway's zeal the whole church has become enlisted. The handsome brick and frame buildings that adorn the campus were erected by the citizens of Jackson. The endowment fund of $100,000 is nearly in hand, and, in addition, there are several thousand dollars in endowed scholarships. With Rev. W. B. Murrah, D. D., as president, and a carefully selected faculty, the college opened on Sept. 20, 1892, under the most favorable auspices. The outlook for the college is very bright. Within a little more than thirty days from the opening there were 131 students enrolled, and appearances justify the expectation of 160 matriculants before the session closes. The college owns ninety acres of land within one-half mile of the corporate limits of the city, and the location is healthful, conspicuous and beautiful.

In concluding this casual and incomplete survey of the educational institutions of the Mississippi Conference, acknowledgments must be made and thanks rendered to Dr. Edward Mayes, from whose able papers on the educational history of Mississippi much of the foregoing has been drawn.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Dec. 18, 1892.

By REV. WM. H. LAIRD, D. D.

Review.

Acts ix, 1-xxv, 29.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." (Acts iv, 26.)

The history of the church, from the conversion of Saul of Tarsus until the Apostolic Council at Jerusalem, covers a period of about thirteen years. If we suppose that the Council was held in A. D. 50, which is the date agreed upon by most writers on New Testament chronology.

In reviewing the lessons in the order of their coming, we can touch only the leading points of each.

I.
(a) God chooses his own workmen. (b) The mightiest intellect, united to the most ardent zeal and the cleanest morality, does not suffice for true Christian work. Saul must be "born again" before he could do Christ's work.

II.
(a) Life and death are in God's hands. (b) Good works, if unselfish, are pleasing to God and to man. (c) Service to the bodies of men, rendered in Christ's name, commends Christianity to the world.

III.
(a) A very great man, who is also very good man, may be, by bad education, a very narrow man. (b) The spirit of Christianity is broad; Christ died for all men. (c) Christ's ambassadors are to proclaim the gospel all, regardless of race or color.

IV.
(a) An honest, earnest prayer life, heeded by our Lord. (b) The children are "witnesses of all that make for salvation." (c) When the gospel is preached and believed, the Holy Ghost sets his seal upon the preacher and people.

V.
(a) Persecution may scatter true men, but never causes them to forsake the truth, or to cease to proclaim it. (b) Unordained men and women are also teachers of truth, witnessing for Christ. (c) The church needs instruction as well as exhortation. (d) True religion is helpful to those in distress.

VI.
(a) The world is, in spirit, antagonistic to Christ. (b) God is not unmindful of the troubles of men.

VII.
(a) Missionary work is by the appointment and under the guidance of the Holy Ghost. (b) Our greatest and best men are needed for that work. (c) The church should send those who are called of God for that work. (d) Opposition and success may be expected. Both are promised.

VIII.
(a) Knowledge of the language of Scripture does not imply knowledge of its real meaning. (b) The death and resurrection of Jesus are the great historic facts of the world. (c) Forgiveness of sin is "through Christ." (d) Continuance in the grace of God is necessary to full and final salvation.

IX.
(a) Devotion to special religious forms does not mean devotion to God. (b) Confirmed bigotry blinds to truth. (c) The opposition of even good people, who may be misled, is sometimes to be expected. All good people are not wise people. (d) If driven from one place, the Christian must go to another, but must keep on witnessing.

X.
(a) Public opinion is fickle, and is no test of success, nor of merit. (b) No true man will accept an unmerited honor. (c) While nature does not teach moral law, nor declare the doctrines of grace, it does proclaim the existence and providence of God. (d) Sanctified common sense is a great force in the work of the church. (e) However persecuted, the Christian must not cease to testify.

XI.
(a) External forms are not essential to salvation. (b) Purity is an essential feature of true piety. (c) It is wise and right to condemn husy-bodies and to commend good men and women. (d) Repentance, faith, obedience—these are necessary to salvation.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Central Church, Meridian.

BY L. F. BROWN.

Twenty-seven years ago, less forty days, Central, or First, Church held its first Quarterly Conference.

The sainted Bishop McTear once said: "The surplus bridge timber in our early Methodist meeting-house belfry would, if properly sawed, almost erect a modern Methodist Church." The immense hewn logs in the old church, which once sat upon a distant hill, and during the pastorate of O. P. Thomas was hauled to the present site, evidences the strength of the assertion.

Out of the entire first Quarterly Conference, held Jan. 15, 1866, including three preachers, but one of them and a single layman are to-day upon earth. O. P. Thomas, the surviving preacher (now in Texas), left impressions of aggressive, faithful work that will outlive his children's children. Dr. L. Gould, the layman (also in Texas), all along the early history of the church is recorded as a conservative, safe balance wheel. Ten preachers have each in turn served the charge, viz.: O. P. Thomas, W. E. Mabry, Josiah Barker, J. A. Ellis, J. T. Heard, R. J. Jones, E. H. Moulter, R. D. Norworthy, W. C. Black and C. G. Andrews.

Eight presiding elders have manned the district, viz.: S. H. Cox, J. T. Heard, W. B. Hines, J. A. Ellis, R. J. Jones, J. A. Godfrey, R. D. Norworthy and T. L. Mellen.

Additions to church-building, erection of parsonage and East Mississippi Female College, and their demands, elicited the best energies of the various preachers and presiding elders. During the pastorate of W. C. Black, in 1886, the original building was torn down, and, with improvements, put up in "West End." A handsome brick edifice stands to-day in its place and compares with any in our Conference. West End Church has, from its beginning, made its mark under the following preachers: B. S. Rayner, Robt. Selby, J. D. Crymes and N. B. Harmon, and has now a membership of two hundred and forty.

In 1890 Central Church hive again swarmed, and "East End Church," under the pastorate of H. C. Brown, sprang quickly into life. A beautiful modern church was built, and has a membership of one hundred and forty-six. Suddenly attacked by a gripe and stricken with nervous prostration early in 1892, during his second term, this young brother was compelled to rest (we trust and believe will, like Paul, come back into the work in December with renewed health, strength and increased spirituality), and N. M. Clark was made preacher in charge for the unexpired term.

The fourth year of C. G. Andrews at Central Church will end in a few weeks, with a membership still left of five hundred and eighty.

The lot for a "South Side" Church has been secured, cash and subscriptions taken, and early in the new Conference year Methodist songs of Zion will be heard down there under our own roof.

The prayers, life and labors of all the list of preachers have not been in vain. All have sown, all have watered and all have done some of the reaping.

Our cosmopolitan railroad city, with its 12,000 inhabitants, is not without its Methodist imprint. Perhaps, the following short index would give the true key to our Methodist loyalty, disciplinary respect and spiritual status.

Teachers and officers in the three large Sunday-schools can not attend a theater, circus, ball, dance, play progressive euchre, drink wine or do any of those things opposed to the genius of Christianity as taught by the Methodist Church. A violation forfeits the position, and, as far as known, not a single exception has been made to the rule.

In the persistent liquor fight which has thus far, step by step, been an acknowledged victory to the God side—four out of sixteen saloons being left, and their license being under the old law, the last one of which expires April 1—out of a combined membership of nearly 1,000 but five names are on a petition to sell vinous, malt or spirituous liquors even by wholesale.

Asking God's blessing upon each preacher now living who has served us, we are ready to receive, stand by, support and uphold the incoming pastor whether he be an Amos fresh from the rural districts or a Paul from the city.

Methodism in Jackson.

BY REV. B. F. LEWIS.

Just when the first Methodist sermon was preached in Jackson is not known. In 1836 Rev. John G. Jones was on the Choctaw district, Mississippi Conference, and was surprised to find that there was no church or organization of any denomination in the State capital, and no preaching of any kind except an occasional sermon from a transient minister. He proposed to Rev. Thomas Ford to be employed as a missionary at that place. Mr. Ford accepted the appointment with the understanding that he could give but two Sabbaths a month to the city. The only available place for preaching was a small two-story brick building used for a State House. Here the first battle for Methodism was fought. Soon a congregation was gathered and an organization effected. Among the first to unite with this infant church was a gentleman and his wife, who deserve mention—Finncane by name. They soon became zealous in the work, and their home the home of the Methodist itinerant. The next year, 1837, the congregation began erecting a church-building, which was completed in time to hold a convention in it in 1839 for the purpose of arranging for the centennial of the birth of Wesleyan Methodism. This church was used as a house of worship until '88, when it was torn down to give place to the handsome brick structure now occupied by the congregation of the First Methodist Church.

One of the special features of the work of Methodism in Jackson up to the war was the large and intelligent colored congregation under its auspices. In 1853 the Methodists numbered one hundred and seventy-eight white and two hundred and thirty-eight colored members.

For these colored brethren a good house of worship was provided, and some of the leading members among the whites acted as class leaders and Sunday-school teachers. Among the ministers who have served the church we notice the names of Preston Cooper, Dr. Haden Leavel, J. L. Forsythe, Whitfield Harrington, and we may be permitted to mention the name of one living, Dr. J. B. Walker. Dr. Leavel's ministry has been spoken of as eminently successful. He had large gifts as a revivalist and added many to the church.

About the year 1834 Bishop Galloway undertook mission work in what was known as West Jackson. There were a number of people in that part of the city who never attended church, and the prospect was that the number would largely increase with the rapidly increasing population; so, with the aid of that consecrated layman, J. T. H. Laird, whose name will ever be linked with that of West Jackson Methodism, the work was undertaken. The first services were held in a fire-engine house, but as soon as it was seen that the efforts would be successful, a suitable lot was purchased and an elegant church-building was erected. The congregation to-day ranks with the mother church in point of wealth, intelligence and membership.

The latter part of this year, 1892, Millsaps College was formally opened with a president and four additional professors, and a student body of over one hundred and thirty. That the northern portion of Jackson is rapidly building up and Methodism has now turned her missionary eye in that direction, a church-building in the vicinity of Millsaps College will, in the very near future, be a necessity.

The following are the statistics reported to the last Annual Conference: Members, 616; in the Sabbath-school, 366; collections for all purposes, $5,654.73. The church property is valued at $29,500, exclusive of Millsaps College. By the close of this Conference year fully one hundred members will have been added to the two Methodist Churches.

Methodism in Vicksburg.

BY REV. W. B. LEWIS.

The city of Vicksburg was planned by the Rev. Newell Vick, a local preacher of the M. E. Church, about the year 1818. He died before his plan was executed; but his descendants laid out the town, and named it to perpetuate his memory. The Rev. John Lane, a member of the Mississippi Conference, who married the eldest daughter of Mr. Vick, assisted in this work. Thus we have Vicksburg, a city that was founded by Methodist people and Methodist preachers. We would naturally expect it to be a city of righteousness, and that Methodism would always be a prominent factor in the religious life of the town; but the inheritance has been marred. Situated on the Mississippi river, with a large foreign population, many of whom are not in sympathy with our civilization, the better class of our people find it difficult to maintain their institutions, civil and religious, with any degree of prosperity. Methodism has kept abreast with other Protestant denominations in the city, but she has been surpassed by the Roman Catholic Church. She has borne a faithful testimony against the prevalent vices and organized forces of sin that have entered into the life of our people, and she is still doing valiant service in the cause of Christ. Many of the descendants of the original founders of the city are now prominent in the membership and efficient working force of the Methodist Church here and elsewhere.

In the year 1884 the Sunday-school of this church appointed two teachers for each of the four wards of the city to canvass for new pupils. Mrs. McCutchen and Miss Mattie Hardy were appointed for the fourth ward, which is in the southern part of the city. Here they found many children who were not attending any Sunday-school, and some of them were so situated that they could not attend any of the up-town churches. Seventeen of this class were found in one large tenement-house—the old Marine Hospital. They proposed to organize a mission Sunday-school for their benefit. A room was secured and the school organized, the parent church furnishing teachers and literature. The school prospered, and the South Vicksburg Church, of which the Rev. Ira B. Robertson is now pastor, is the outcome of the enterprise. This church, after carefully pruning and revising the membership and church register, has over 130 members. It is situated in a growing part of the city, but the house is unfortunately located. If it could be brought up on Washington street, the future of this congregation would be greatly enhanced. This is a change that ought to be made, and the Board of Church Extension ought to lend a helping hand in the work.

Last year a Sunday-school was organized in the northern part of the city. It outgrew the small room in which it was held, and a chapel for its use was proposed. Mr. N. J. Vick, a descendant of the late Rev. Newell Vick, and a worthy member of the Crawford Street Church, made the enterprise possible by promptly giving $100 to it. The chapel has been built this year, and it remains to be seen what the result of the enterprise will be.

At present we have in this city, including both charges, near 600 members. About 55 of these have been received during this year. Including the three Sunday-schools, we have about 360 Sunday-school pupils. Our church property is valued at over $30,000. Last year Methodism in Vicksburg contributed to the various church enterprises near $4,000.

Natchez.

Compiled by Rev. B. F. Lewis from "Methodism in Natchez," by Rev. W. C. Black, D. D.

The introduction of Methodism into Natchez was almost coetaneous with the establishment of the authority of the United States government in this region. The Spanish troops were withdrawn in 1798, and in August of that year Winthrop Sargent, the first territorial governor of Mississippi, arrived, and began his administration. Immediately Bishop Asbury resolved to occupy this newly opened field, and selected Rev. Tobias Gibson, of South Carolina, twenty-eight years of age, and in the eighth year of his ministry, to be the first representative of our church, not only in the vicinity of Natchez, but in this State. He immediately set out upon his perilous journey, and, after traveling a most circuitous route, reached Natchez, where he immediately entered upon his ministry. He preached in almost every settlement in the territory, preaching almost every day in school houses, private dwellings, on flat-boats, in the woods—anywhere he could get an audience. At the end of his first year he had gathered together 60 members; at the end of the second, 80; by the end of the third, 100. He organized the churches at Natchez, Washington and Kingston, among others.

In 1802 Natchez was in the Kentucky district of the Western Conference. The Conference included nearly all the United States west of the Alleghany Mountains, and the Kentucky district included, besides Mississippi, nearly all of Kentucky and Tennessee, and the region north of the Ohio river.

In 1807 the Natchez Church first came into possession of a house of worship. The lot was purchased from Wm. Barland for the sum of $250, and extended from east to west through the square bounded by Main, Union, Franklin and Locust streets. The first building was of brick, located on the end of the square fronting Locust street, and was called Cokesbury Chapel. In 1849 Cokesbury Chapel fell down, and a temporary structure was fitted up, which served as a preaching-place four years. During this interval of twelve years the Natchez Church was filled by such men as Miles Harper, John Johnson, and Wm. Winans.

In 1822 Natchez and Washington were constituted a circuit, and John C. Burruss was appointed pastor. In 1823 the Mississippi Conference was first held in Natchez, with Bishop George presiding. In 1826 Natchez was made a station, with Peyton S. Greaves as pastor. This was the first station in the Methodist Church in the South-west. There were only 80 members on the church roll at the close of this year. In 1836 the Sabbath-school was organized into a missionary society. It has never disbanded, and, according to Bishop Wilson, it is the oldest society of its kind in the Southern Methodist Church. In 1836 the first official organ of the Mississippi Conference ever had was published in Natchez. It was edited by John Newland Maffit, and was called The Christian Herald.

In 1850, under the pastorate of Rev. Levi Pearce, who died this year in Jackson, La., a very important enterprise was initiated, viz.: the building of a parsonage. The lot was donated by Peter Little, and a sum of money was raised to erect an elegant two-story brick building on Broadway street. The membership at the close of this year was 252. In the Sabbath-school there were 200 scholars, and 29 officers and teachers. This was the largest Sabbath-school in the Conference.

In 1856 the lot on which the present church stands was purchased for the sum of $1,100. Nine years later the old church on Union street was sold for $9,000; but, because of adverse circumstances, only $6,000 were realized. The parsonage was also sold for $3,000. In '69, under the pastorate of Rev. W. H. Watkins, the present house of worship was projected, and during the latter part of '72 the congregation began using the basement for their services. The present building has cost between $25,000 and $30,000.

Seven years later Miss Amelia Tooley donated the house and lot now used for a parsonage to the church, on condition that an annuity of $180 be paid her during life. This building has quite recently been completely renovated, and now faces Union instead of Orleans street, as formerly.

Two remarkable revivals are recorded in connection with this church. One under the ministry of Rev. Levi Pearce. Upon the adjournment of Conference in 1850, Rev. Pearce was appointed to succeed Rev. J. L. Forsythe. Bro. Forsythe remained two weeks, or more, after Conference to aid in a revival. It resulted in about 100 conversions. The other was under the ministry of Rev. A. T. M. Fly, in 1855. It lasted three weeks, and resulted in the conversion and addition to the church of 129 persons. During the year he received into the church 165—the largest number of additions that had ever been added to the church in that place.

Natchez Church has given license to preach to the following active members of the Mississippi Conference: Benjamin Jones, C. D. Cecil, J. P. Drake, and T. L. Mellen.

In 1881, under the ministry of Rev. W. C. Black, Wesley Chapel was projected. Rev. T. L. Mellen entered heartily into the enterprise, and on the seventeenth of June, 1883, the building now used as a church, on Cemetery street, was formally dedicated. It cost $1,540, exclusive of the lot, and at its dedication had enrolled about 100 in the Sabbath-school, and the same number in the church.

From the latest statistics Methodism in Natchez consists of two church-buildings—each a station—a membership of 623; 299 Sabbath-school scholars, and church property valued at between $30,000 and $40,000.

Methodism in Woodville.

Compiled from an article by Rev. H. W. Featherston.

It is presumable that either in 1799 or 1800 Rev. Tobias Gibson, the heroic apostle of Mississippi Methodism, preached and organized "societies" in the vicinity of Fort Adams, Pinckneyville and Centerville, Wilkinson county, and that he continued his ministrations until October, 1802, when Rev. Moses Floyd was sent to assist him. In the Spring of 1803 R. v. Lorenzo Dow—that wonderful man of God, whom no Conference boundaries could circumscribe—led by some mysterious, but, doubtless, providential impulse, came into this "Natchez circuit," and labored with the preachers in charge until the last of June. The earliest positive record of preaching in Wilkinson county was by Lorenzo Dow on this visit.

At the session of the Western Conference, held Oct. 2, 1806, the Wilkinson circuit was formed, with Rev. Caleb W. Cloud as preacher in charge. While the town of Woodville was not then in existence, the territory which the Woodville station now includes was embraced in these earlier pastoral charges, hearing different names at different stages of the church's development. At first it was in the "Natchez mission," whose area far exceeded that of the State of Mississippi; afterwards it was in the "Wilkinson circuit," whose territory stretched from Adams county to the Gulf of Mexico, and from the Mississippi to the Bogie Chitto rivers.

As the Mississippi Conference was organized Nov. 1, 1813, we have for thirteen succeeding years a Wilkinson circuit, Mississippi district, Mississippi Conference. In 1827 the Wilkinson circuit appears in the Washington district, and in 1832 in the New Orleans district.

In 1824 Edward McGehee, John S. Lewis and others built a church in Woodville on a lot given by John S. Lewis. The church, somewhat enlarged by the addition of a Sunday-school room in the rear, and improved by sundry changes made at various times, still stands, adorned with beautiful memories, and hallowed by heroic events—the worshiping-place of Woodville Methodists. The State of Mississippi contains no spot more sacred than this church lot.

In December, 1835, the Mississippi Conference met in Woodville. Bishop Soule presided. Elijah Steel was admitted on trial, and Woodville station was formed, with Wm. Winans as preacher in charge and B. M. Drake as presiding elder. For nearly seventy years Woodville has been a station, filled by some of the most illustrious preachers in Southern Methodism, among them B. M. Drake, Wm. Winans, C. K. Marshall, Elijah Steel, Enoch M. Marvin, and others.

Three times prior to the war did the Mississippi Conference meet in Woodville, and the memories of those gatherings still linger. Two revivals are spoken of: one by John Newland Maffit, away back in the fifties, and the other by J. J. Wheat, J. A. B. Jones and T. W. Brown two decades later. Through all these past years the Methodist Church in Woodville has flourished, being to-day larger and more prosperous than any other.

Canton Church.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

MR. EDITOR: My apology for the following communication is a special request from your worthy assistant:

From all the data that we can obtain, the first Methodist preaching that was done in the vicinity of the present town of Canton was in 1828. At that time the presiding elder's district was known as the Mississippi district, and extended from Natchez to the Choctaw Nation, embracing a section more than one hundred miles square. Who the elder and the preacher at that time were we have not been able to ascertain. The first definite record we have begins with 1829, when J. I. E. Byrd and John Cotton appear as preachers on the Madison circuit. From 1828 to 1864 the district in which this work was situated appears under the names of Bayou Piere, Yazoo, Vicksburg and Sharon—now the Jackson.

The town of Canton was laid out and first sale of lots occurred in 1833. True to her history, Methodism was there at the beginning, and the first sermon preached in the new village of Canton was in 1833, by Rev. Isaac Wells, a Methodist preacher. Whence he came and whither he went, we can not learn.

In 1836 the church was organized in Canton with eight members, among whom appears the name of our late honored Bro. Jno. T. Cameron, long time recording secretary of the Mississippi Conference.

Up to 1839 preaching was done in the court-house, a log building about twenty feet square. At this time there was a move to build a church, which was to be used by all denominations, the Presbyterians claiming two Sabbaths in the month, the other denominations dividing the remaining time.

Up to 1843 Methodism was a weak branch in the community. During this year Rev. C. K. Marshall conducted a meeting in the town, which resulted in the addition of many members which gave to our church a hold and prestige which it has never lost. One immediate result of this revival was the resolution to build a Methodist Church, which was completed in September of 1848, and dedicated by Rev. Joseph B. Walker, who also conducted a meeting, which resulted in much additional strength to the church. These two revivals are yet spoken of by the older members of the church. In 1849 Canton became the leading appointment of a new circuit, which bore its name until 1860, when it was erected into a station, which it has continued up to date.

In the list of those who have served the church at this place appears the names of George C. Light, Jas. Walton, Forsythe, Montgomery and Linfield. Among the living prior to 1870 are J. A. B. Jones, C. F. Evans and C. G. Andrews. Since that time the history is too well known to consume your space to relate.

While the Methodist ecclesiastical life of Canton has not been in many respects different from that of other churches, she claims one distinguishing honor above her sisters, and that is, the mother home of her honored son, Bishop C. B. Galloway.

Like the fabled lioness who responded when taunted that she had but one, "Yes, but he is a lion," so Canton, while her contribution to the ministerial ranks has been but one in these many, many years, yet "he is a Bishop."

Scraps of Church History.

BY REV. J. D. NEWSON.

I.

About the year 1814, Capt. Chambers landed from a flatboat at the (then) village of Baton Rouge in search of lands in Louisiana on which to might settle his three sons and five daughter, back in the interior, fourteen miles east of the (now) city of Baton Rouge. On the banks of the Amite river he built him a home and reared his family. He soon felt the great inconvenience of no church privileges. Services were occasionally held in private homes by Methodist preachers penetrating to that (then) remote region. The Captain determined to build a church where his family might worship with such of his neighbors as might choose to join them. In times of freshets timber was floated out from the great oppress breaks of the swamp, and upon the saw-plot, with whip-saw by hand, the planks were made which formed its walls, its floor, seats and pulpit. Here the old Captain's children and many of his grandchildren joined the church. I have heard two of his grandsons preach from that old pulpit.

This church was dedicated with the name of Salem. I saw it first, at least, sixty years ago; it was then stained with mildew and age. I am sure it was the first Methodist Church built in the State of Louisiana. It was called "Old Salem" before the foundation of any such church was laid in the city of Baton Rouge. Many revivals of religion were had here, and early and long in its history a deep and wide influence went out from it. The time came when the changes in the neighborhood made it almost inaccessible, when its friends—some of them the grandchildren of the patriarch who first projected the enterprise—removed to a more eligible site. Here Old Salem stood until the vandal hands of an invading foe tore it down to make kindling for their camp fires.

This Capt. Chambers won his title in the Revolutionary War in the struggle of our fathers for independence. Years ago one grandson died in the Louisiana Conference, having done much faithful work as an itinerant preacher. Another grandson, a preacher, still survives, without transferring, a member of the North Mississippi Conference, and for more than forty years has filled the place of a regular traveling preacher.

II.

Quite early in this century, in Wilkinson county, Miss., some eight or ten miles southeast of Woodville, a log church was built. I was told by a lady, whose grandchildren were then playing about the room, that she attended a service there when she was too young to appreciate preaching, and sat upon the sleepers before any floor was laid in it, or any seats were built. This conversation occurred thirty-nine years ago. This church took the name of Bethel. In time the old log-bait temple was substituted by a neat frame building which, perhaps, would have done credit to any country community of that day and time. This frame building passed out of date and was replaced by a neat brick edifice, which still stands a monument to the taste and religious enterprise of the time. During the time of the frame building a camp meeting was instituted here. In 1843, for some cause or other, the camp meeting failed. For ten years the tents went into decay, and some of them into hopeless wrocks. In 1853 the writer was in charge of Wilkinson circuit, with Rev. B. M. Drake, D. D., for presiding elder. That year Dr. Drake conceived the enterprise of reviving the old Bethel Camp Meeting. With much riding, visiting and talking it was a success. With such men enlisted as Judge Edward McGee, Robt. Richardson, I heard Stocket, Rev. Wm. James, of precious memory, and others, there was not much chance to fall when the movement was once set a-going. These camp meetings were the annual rally for a vast region around, extending from Baton Rouge, La., to Natchez, Miss., and beyond, and from the Mississippi river back eastward into the interior. Annual revivals attended these meetings. Here men and women were converted who, dispersing over the country, carried a religious influence far and wide. Men were converted at old Bethel who entered the various callings of life. Some entered the ministry, and have done large work for the Lord; some went into law; some into medicine, some to farming; others became mechanics; taking their religion with them into these honorable and honest callings in life.

The work of those camp meetings is telling in their effects upon the history of the land to-day.

Before the war this camp ground again went down. Recently an effort has been made to re-establish it. I would to God it might be as great a power for good as in the days of its earlier history!

Thursday, December 15, 1892.

We give greeting to our Mississippi brethren in Conference assembled in Natchez. Born on the soil of the Mississippi Conference, and educated in her good domain, and living since manhood under the shadow cast westward by her rising glory, and being for six years and more the editor of her church organ, we feel a special pride in all her achievements in the gospel arena, and present her this special edition of the "OLD NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," hoping it may interest and refresh the minds and hearts of all the brethren. We acknowledge special obligations to Bro. B. F. Lewis, who suggested and carried forward this project to its successful issue. May the Lord bless all the brethren and make their work in Conference a special blessing to our church in Mississippi!

BRIEFS.

Bishop Newman, of the M. E. Church, said in the Missionary Committee that "it would be well to make Ames Church, in New Orleans, a colored church, and it would develop grandly." That is precisely what we said in these columns three years ago! Bishop Newman is right about that church.

Bishop Walden, of the M. E. Church, thinks that one dollar spent in mission work among the French Canadians in New England will accomplish more than five dollars will among the French in New Orleans. The Missionary Committee appropriated $1,200 for the French work in Louisiana. We have not yet been able to secure anything from our Board to help us in Louisiana, but we live in hope. We think we can get something if we ever get rid of "the debt."

The daily papers have discussed the "Kane ordinance" quite extensively. This ordinance allows anybody to set up a saloon anywhere. The opinion that the repeal of such an iniquitous law will be unconstitutional is held for no other reason than that those who hold that opinion wish to do so. The Delta well says:

All courts of every State have recognized the right of the State or county or city to control the liquor traffic, or suppress it entirely if deemed advisable. It is a question of the morals and health of a community, and above all laws and constitutions. It is rather late in the world's history to begin to deny that right to the people. The repeal of the ordinance which required the consent of the neighborhood to the establishment of a bar room was an outrage, and a new ordinance should be placed upon the books at once. Let the Council do its duty and the matter of constitutionality be left to the courts. Re-establish the rights of citizens to say whether a saloon shall be started in their vicinity, and let the citizens have the chance for a decision on their rights.

We have heard lots of lawyers in this State talk of the obnoxious rights of lotteries, but the Supreme Court of the United States laid down the broad doctrine that a gambling institution can have no vested rights. The right is vested always in the people to protect themselves and can never be legislated or decided away by their lawmakers. The liquor traffic comes under the same rule.

Again and again have the courts throughout this country held and promulgated the doctrine that the saloon has, and can have, no vested rights. So much for the unconstitutionality of the repeal of this abominable "Kane ordinance."

Mississippi Conference.

Biographical Sketches.

REV. CHARLES GREEN ANDREWS, D. D., Secretary of the Conference.

The Rev. Charles Green Andrews, D. D., the efficient secretary of the Mississippi Conference for twenty-six years, was born in Madison county, Miss., June 4, 1833. In 1857 he was converted under the ministry of Rev. H. H. Montgomery, and shortly thereafter was given authority to preach. Coming from a family of fortune and the highest social distinction, he was liberally educated, and on his admission to the Conference, at Woodville, in 1858, at once took rank among the most capable and successful men of the body. Tall of stature, erect as a soldier, dignified in bearing, and of handsome form and features, his commanding appearance would attract attention in an assembly of thousands. Laborious as a minister, faithful and tender as a pastor, courageous in the advocacy of right, conscientious in the discharge of every duty and singularly pure in life, no man among us is more sincerely honored or more perfectly trusted. He has represented his Conference in five General Conferences, several times chairman of his delegation; was a member of the Ecumenical Conference in London in 1881; was eleven years president of Centenary College, his alma mater, and was one year elected president of the Conference in the absence of a Bishop. He has just closed a successful quadrennium as pastor of the First Church, Meridian, and evidences the same eagerness for spiritual service as in the early days of his consecrated ministry. It is the earnest prayer of his brethren, who delight to honor him, that "length of days" may be given to lead the hosts of God to yet greater victory. Dr. Andrews wields a polished pen, and it is matter of regret that his contributions do not oftener grace the columns of our periodical literature.

REV. P. A. JOHNSTON, Presiding Elder of the Woodville District.

Rev. Pinckney A. Johnston was born near Cayuga, Hinds county, Miss., July 24, 1859, where he spent most, if not quite, all his boyhood. He was converted and joined the Cayuga Church under the ministry of Rev. H. J. Harris in August, 1858, and was licensed to preach in Jackson, La., in 1859; Rev. J. A. B. Jones, preacher in charge, and Rev. Barnabas Pipkin, presiding elder. He was educated at Centenary College, Jackson, La., having completed the sophomore course at the breaking out of the war, when the college closed its doors. In the Fall of 1861 he joined the Mississippi Conference, which met in Canton, Miss., and was appointed to Fort Adams; but in April following was appointed chaplain in the army, serving in that position until the war closed. In 1880 Bro. Johnston was appointed agent for Whitworth College, and served Centenary in the same capacity in 1888. His ministry has been eminently useful and successful. He sought not the easy places, but those where he could do the most for his Lord. About one thousand souls have joined the church under his ministry. We may be excused for quoting from a private letter received some time since:

I have lived on small salaries, kept out of debt, educated my children, and can say that the life of an itinerant Methodist preacher is, after all, a most happy and satisfactory one.

REV. R. S. WOODWARD, Presiding Elder of the Brookhaven District.

Rev. R. S. Woodward was born in Marengo county, Ala., Dec. 19, 1833, and was the youngest of eight children. His father, Rev. R. S. Woodward, was a local preacher in the Methodist Church after the old English type, having been indoctrinated in Wesleyan Methodism from his infancy. His mother was trained under the rigid discipline of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, but upon her marriage united with the Methodist Church with her husband. Thus a model Christian home was provided with a healthy atmosphere, and it is not surprising that in youth Bro. Woodward's heart was often strangely warmed. He was made conscious of his acceptance with God, Sept. 19, 1849, while kneeling at the altar in the old Bethel Church, Clarke county, Ala. From that moment he felt called to the ministry. On Nov. 4, 1854, he was licensed to preach and was admitted into the Alabama Conference the December following. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Pierce in 1856, and elder by Bishop Paine, 1858. In 1874 he was transferred to the Mississippi Conference and stationed in Brandon. Since that time he has filled some of our most prominent appointments, having been appointed upon two distinct occasions presiding elder. He is now serving his second year on the Brookhaven district.

REV. E. H. MOUNGER, Presiding Elder of the Jackson District.

The Rev. Edwin H. Mouser is a native of Jasper county, Miss., and is the son of the late Judge Mouser, long distinguished in the judicial history of this State. He was converted and joined the church under the ministry of Rev. C. T. French, and in 1860, under the pastorate of Rev. J. W. McNeil, was licensed to preach. Bro. Mouser graduated from Centenary College, having made a fine record as a student, and was received on trial in the Mississippi Conference, at Natchez, in December, 1860. In the beginning of his ministry two years were spent in teaching at Enon, Perry county, and later he was connected with Whitworth Female College as professor, and with Port Gibson Female College as president, but all the while having a pastoral charge. Refined in feeling, modest in manner, cultured in mind and heart, gentle in spirit and consecrated in life, he has the graces of a gentleman and the virtues of a Christian pastor. His reading is extensive and accurate, and his scholarship of a high order, especially in New Testament Greek. No man among us is hardly so well posted in the current history of Church and State, or so thoroughly acquainted with the best literature of the day. He is now fifty-three years of age, and promises long and valued service to the church.

REV. T. L. MELLEN, Presiding Elder of the Meridian District.

Rev. Thomas L. Mellen was born in Natchez, Miss., June 10, 1849, and in the same city was converted in 1867 under the ministry of the late Dr. W. E. M. Linfield. Immediately after conversion he felt a call to the ministry, but was induced to enter the legal profession, which he prosecuted with ability and success until the Summer of 1882. At that time he was licensed to preach, and in December, 1883, was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference. As a local preacher he supplied the Natchez City Mission, and was mainly instrumental in building Wesley Chapel and organizing that important church. While engaged in the practice of law, he was district attorney for two years, and represented his native county for two terms in the Legislature. As a minister he is known for his great zeal, his ardent attachment to the doctrines and discipline of his church, his large capacity for labor, his careful attention to the details of every work, his missionary enthusiasm, his spirit of self-denial, and his courage and aggressiveness in the discharge of duty. He is the author of an excellent volume entitled, "Life and Labors of W. H. Watkins." Bro. Mellen is closing his third year as presiding elder of the Meridian district.

REV. C. M'DONALD, Presiding Elder of the Brandon District.

Rev. C. McDonald was born in Covington county, Miss., Oct. 21, 1836. He was converted at Mount Olive Church, in Covington county, July 12, 1857, under the ministry of Rev. Mr. Fullenwider, a Presbyterian minister, and in a few days felt called to the ministry. He did not join the church, however, until September of that year, and on Oct. 10 was licensed to preach at Mutual Rights Church, Scott county, by Rev. P. H. Napier. He received his education principally at Bennettsville Academy, South Carolina, and at Laurinburg High School, Richmond county, North Carolina. In 1858 he united with the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, and when that Conference formally united with the Mississippi Conference of the M. E. Church, South, at Crystal Springs, in 1871, he became a member of our church and Conference. His appointments have been chiefly within the Brandon district until 1888, when he was made presiding elder of the Woodville district, which he served acceptably for three years. He is now serving his first year on the Brandon district. Bro. McDonald has been a loyal, faithful pastor and has done valiant service for his Lord and Master.

REV. JOHN A. ELLIS, Presiding Elder of the Seashore District.

Rev. John A. Ellis was born in Rutherford county, Tenn., on April 27, 1830. When about seventeen years of age he was converted and joined the Methodist Church at Huntsville, Ala., under the ministry of Rev. Adam S. Riggs. He almost immediately felt called to the ministry, but did not make application for license to preach until 1849, when he was licensed by Rev. C. B. Ferris, in Rutherford county, Tenn. In October, of the same year, the Tennessee Conference met in Shelbyville, at which time Bro. Ellis was formally received on trial and appointed to the Rock Creek circuit. He rose rapidly in the estimation of his brethren and soon filled some of their most important charges. At the opening of the late war he was appointed chaplain in the Confederate States Army, which position he retained until peace was declared in 1865. In 1862 he was transferred to the Mississippi Conference, and has been honored by his brethren with the very best of appointments, having served as presiding elder fifteen years. He is now serving his first year on the Seashore district. Bro. Ellis is a man of few words, but wise counsel, and the appreciation of his brethren has been manifested by the trusts reposed in him.

REV. D. A. LITTLE, Presiding Elder of the Vicksburg District.

Rev. Duncan A. Little was born in Newton county, Miss., Oct. 10, 1845. He was converted in childhood, but received clearer and more satisfactory assurance, October, 1870, at a camp meeting in Wayne county, conducted by Rev. James Shanks. Soon after that meeting he felt a distinct divine call to the ministry, and in October, 1872, was licensed to preach. In December, 1873, he was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference, since when he has been in active, itinerant work, giving eleven years of service to the presiding eldership. He was educated at Rose Hill Academy, Jasper county, and has the reputation of being a diligent student. During the late war he was a brave soldier and lost an arm in the battle of Atlanta. He is a man of one work. Wise in counsel, prudent in speech, devout in spirit, broad in sympathy, charitable in judgment, and with a large fund of sanctified common sense, he has special fitness for the office in which so many years have been spent.

Sunday-Schools.

BY REV. B. F. LEWIS.

The Sabbath-school movement in the Mississippi Conference has been almost, if not quite, co-extensive with the organization of the church and Conference. We have at hand no authentic records of earliest statistics; but from a small beginning the movement grew in favor and importance until it became, and has been for years, cause for severe criticism to report a pastoral charge and no Sabbath-school; and the church is rapidly converging towards that point where it will be thought worthy of equal criticism to report an organization without this co-ordinate appendage. While the growth of the movement has not been all that might have been desired, yet it has been steady and permanent, keeping pace with the development of the church.

To go no further back than 1883, nine years ago, we find reported at the Annual Conference, which met in the city of Natchez, 316 Sabbath-schools, 1,596 officers and teachers, with 10,735 scholars—a total in our Sabbath-school brigade of 12,331. There was also reported a church membership of 25,636, showing that there were nearly one-half as many in the Sabbath-school as there were communicants in the church.

In 1887, four years later, there were reported 389 schools, 1,949 officers and teachers, 14,610 scholars with a membership of 34,265—a slight decrease in the per cent., due, no doubt, to inaccuracy in statistics. In 1891, four years later, we had, according to the pastors' reports, 398 schools, 2,212 officers and teachers; 17,051 scholars, with a membership of 38,213. Thus it will be seen that there has been an average of about one half as many in the Sabbath-school as in the church. It will be seen further that in the past eight or nine years alone, our Sabbath-school work has grown from 316 schools in 1883 to 398 in 1892—an increase of 82. From 1,596 officers and teachers to 2,212—an increase of 616. From 10,735 scholars to 17,051—an increase of 6,316. This has been an average increase of 9 1/2 schools and 770 2-9 in the membership of the schools per year.

The most gratifying feature of this department of church work is the large number of Sunday-school scholars who are every year taken into the communion of the church on profession of faith. The institution of Children's Day brought about a new era in Sunday-school work. It made the children feel that the church had not lost sight of them, and inspired new zeal in the officers. Above this, the liberal and missionary spirit is being rapidly cultivated in the children, and a new era in finances may be expected. The institution of this "day" has also resulted in the organization of a large number of new schools, and filling the libraries of scores of others with books through the agency of which the lives and characters of the young will be moulded, and their hearts the more intelligently turned towards God and their life-work.

We have no accurate statistics, and can, therefore, give no detailed statement of the amount of work done further than this: The first year of the observance of Children's Day, $395.95 were raised; in 1890, $698.21; in 1891, $568.26. This is simply the amount reported to the treasurer. Several charges raised money and made no report at all. In 1891 over $1,200 passed through the hands of the treasurer for books and periodicals, which were scattered from the Mississippi river to the Alabama State line, and from the northernmost boundary of the Conference to the Gulf.

Several schools are, and have been, organized into missionary societies; some independent, some under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society. Last year $986.58 were reported in the Conference Minutes as raised by the schools; and at its last annual meeting the Woman's Missionary Society reported 400 juvenile members, and collections by them of $119.14, making a total raised by the children during the past year of $1,105.72. The Epworth League has been organized in a few churches. It has not been what was desired. In some instances the reasons are obvious; in others they are not. It is to be sincerely hoped that as we become better acquainted with its constitution and work, more interest will be taken in it. The great need of the move is recognized by all.

Gould and Shinkle.

Yesterday morning, Dec. 2, at his palace in New York died, of pulmonary consumption—just as the pauper dies of it—Jay Gould, financier, speculator, manipulator, "worth," as they say, in 1882, seventy-three millions that he made a show of when somebody questioned his solvency. In 1892 worth nobody knows how much. He became a broker in 1859; and, having broken most people he touched, was himself broken by death, Dec. 2, 1892. No man honestly earns a hundred millions in thirty-three years; no man consecrates his soul to money-getting and has dealings of a saving sort with Jesus Christ.

Jesus Christ put greed of gold in the category of vices. He distinctly and repeatedly taught that this vice keeps more men out of the kingdom of God than all others. He knew what is the greatest evil in the world; he said it is love of money. They did not believe him then; they do not believe him now. He pronounced upon a man who had given his soul to money-getting: Christ said of such a man, "Thou fool!"

The career of Jay Gould has not been an honorable one. He has not deserved well of the human race. Money will procure a princely tomb—they say it cost $500,000—to stand over his bones—like any beggar's bones they are; but money can not buy the honor and love of mankind. As to God—he does not respect money; gold gathered at the expense of honor, honesty, justice, mercy, God hates.

How far apart are Gould and Amos Shinkle, of Covington, Ky., who went to God on Sunday, Nov. 13, while happy, grateful, loving people were dedicating a church he had built for them in the city where he lived! Shinkle, too, was rich, but not richer than an honest man of exceptional business capacity might become in an active life where there were opportunities worthy his enterprise. Call it two or three million dollars. For every dollar he gave an honest equivalent. For one thing, there is the noble bridge he swung across the Ohio river. It yielded him large returns and was a blessing to two cities and to two States.

He did not hoard; only ignoble souls do that. He gave as he earned, for he believed what Jesus said: "It is better to give than to receive." Those who know tell us he gave away over a million, and yet left for those who come after him as much as is good for them. Some churches he built himself; scores he made possible by paying as much as the congregation paid. For many years he supplemented salaries in the Kentucky Conference (he was of the Northern Methodists), paying out as much as $50,000 a year, time and again; to make the preachers of his Conference comfortable. He was not narrow, and upon occasion went outside of his church to relieve distress and to help the good cause.

A rich man like Amos Shinkle does not kindle communistic fires. Nobody is jealous of such a man. His soul went out while the bells of the new church he had built were making welcome, rich and poor.

Which of the two now wishes he could change his career?

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Sunday law was enforced in this city on Dec. 12, and, owing to the energy of the police, it met with a general observance.

A riot occurred in Wonatchie, Wash., a town on the Great Northern railroad, between Italians and railroad graders on Dec. 8. The Italians vanquished after much blood had been shed.

The special committee of the National House on the World's Fair will probably be called together some time this week to take up in earnest the question of the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday.

Plaquemine, La., was visited by a most destructive fire on Dec. 10. A large portion of the business section was destroyed. About twenty buildings were burned. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

There is fearful suffering among the cattle in the drouth stricken district of New Mexico. It is said that for more than two years there has been no rain, consequently the water courses are dried up and the irrigation ditches useless. About 70,000 head of cattle have died from starvation and lack of water.

Homestead, Pa., appeals to the country to succor its starving. Nearly 1,000 persons, embraced in 318 families, are destitute and in immediate need of food, fire and clothing. The citizens' relief association of Homestead have issued a formal plea for aid for the unfortunates, who are all victims directly or indirectly of the great and stubbornly fought strike just ended.

The proposition to choose the President by the direct vote of the people promises to meet with more than usual consideration by the committee on the election of President and Vice-President and representatives in Congress. The committee had its first meeting of the session on Dec. 9. At the last session of Congress a joint resolution was introduced providing for a presidential and vice-presidential term of six years, with intelligibility of the incumbents to re-election, and to also provide a scheme for electing them by the direct vote of the people. This and other resolutions of like nature will be acted upon by the committee.

FOREIGN.

While returning to Ennis, Ireland, from an election meeting, Timothy M. Healy and other members of Parliament were attacked with stones and other missiles. The car windows were smashed and other things were damaged. No one was injured.

The new French Cabinet is generally approved by the moderate section of the public, although many assert that the ministry must fall before long. A more general opinion is that M. Ribot will retain his position until the election in June.

The Panama Canal investigation continues in Paris. It has been discovered that numerous journals were in the employ of the Panama Canal Company, large sums being paid to secure their advocacy or silence. Several members of the Chamber of Deputies are compromised in the scandal, and will be tried by a committee of that body.

The bimetallic delegates to the International Monetary Conference are discussing whether or not they shall unite in signing a memorandum on the obstruction offered by Great Britain to a determination of the questions before the conference. If the conference resumes its sittings after a prolonged adjournment, such a protest is conceived likely to induce the British government to present to the conference a decided policy through its delegates acting in union thereon.

WHOLE NO. 1896.

C. W. CARTER, Editor.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

The seventy-ninth session of the Mississippi Conference convened in annual meeting in the Sabbath-school room of the Methodist Church in the city of Natchez, Miss., Wednesday morning, Dec. 14, 1892, Bishop J. O. Granbery, D. D., presiding. The Conference was opened by the Bishop, who read the first chapter of Acts, announced Hymn 739.

"Jesus, we look to thee, Thy promised presence claim," and prayer.

After singing the hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul," the Conference was led in prayer by Rev. R. S. Woodward, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, who prayed most earnestly for our presiding Bishop.

The roll was called by the secretary of the last Conference, and a large number of preachers answered to their names, but, as yet, only a small number of laymen. Others are expected to-day.

Dr. C. G. Andrews, who has been secretary for thirty-three years, was re-elected, with Revs. J. A. B. Jones, W. R. Sims, J. W. Chambers, J. G. Galloway, W. L. Linfield and G. H. Galloway as assistants.

The bar of the Conference was fixed as all forward of next the last post from the pulpit. The hours of 9:30 A. M. and 1:30 P. M. were fixed for meeting and adjournment.

The following committees were appointed:

Public Worship—D. A. Little, H. E. Partridge, H. M. Ellis, and W. A. Gunning.

Memoirs—Geo. H. Thompson, chairman.

State of Church—E. L. Rawls, chairman.

Bible Cause—B. H. Rawls, chairman.

Sabbath Observance—J. G. Galloway, chairman.

Temperance—J. G. Sibley, chairman.

Publishing Interests—J. G. Cammack, chairman.

District Conference Records—A. J. Brown, chairman.

Conference Relations—W. H. Huntley, chairman.

Bro. Downer offered a resolution in reference to publishing the Minutes, for which Dr. Hunnicutt offered a substitute, providing for an appropriation for this purpose from certain funds raised by the Conference, which, after some amendments and discussion, was passed. This resolution looks to a free and more general distribution, which is a most wise move.

At this point Hon. Richard F. Reed, an officer in the Jefferson Street Methodist Church, in which the Conference is meeting, delivered an address of welcome on the part of the church, which was most aptly responded to by the Bishop.

Rev. H. E. Partridge, of Florida; Rev. R. W. Bailey, from the Los Angeles Conference, California; Rev. V. H. Cowart, pastor of the Baptist Church, city, and Rev. Dr. Stratton, for many years pastor of the Presbyterian Church, city, were introduced to the Conference.

Communications from Barbee & Smith, agents, Publishing House, Nashville, and Dr. Morton, Secretary Church Extension Board, were read and referred to appropriate committees.

The Bishop then called—

Ques. 6. "Who are received by transfer from other Conferences?"

R. W. Bailey, in elder's orders, from the Los Angeles Conference. A personal letter from Bishop Haygood, recommending Bro. Bailey to our cordial fellowship, was read by the secretary of the Conference.

Ques. 20. "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?"

The names of the following were called, their characters were passed, and their names referred to the Committee on Conference Relation for superannuation: D. Merohant, T. Price, A. B. Nicholson, T. Y. Armstrong, G. T. Vickers, W. E. Ballard, E. A. Flowers, B. Jones, and J. W. Harmon.

A letter from Rev. Jno. A. Miller, a presiding elder of the Louisiana Conference, in the bounds of which Bro. T. Price lives, was presented to the Conference, giving a favorable account of his year's work. Bro. Ballard was present and made a few remarks in reference to his case.

The name of Jno. A. Vance was referred to the same committee for the supernumerary relation.

The names of the following presiding elders were called, and their characters were passed: D. A. Little, of the Vicksburg district; E. H. Mounger, Jackson district; R. S. Woodward, Brookhaven district; C. McDonald, Brandon district; T. L. Mellen, Meridian district; J. A. Ellis, Seashore district; P. A. Johnston, Woodville district.

A communication from G. W. Barton, in reference to the Van Houten Bequest Fund, was read, and it was referred to the Board of Conference Endowment.

Ques. 2. "Who remain on trial?"
H. B. Vandenburg, W. T. Griffin, M. J. Miller, C. C. Evans, T. E. Winecoff, W. T. Currie, P. M. Brown, J. T. Haney were called, their characters were passed, and they were passed to the class of the second year.

The names of T. J. Norsworthy, W. T. Woodward and I. F. Hawkins were called, their characters passed, and they were continued in the class of the first year.

Ques. 8. "What traveling preachers are elected deacons?"
The names of the following were called, their characters were passed, they were elected deacons, and passed to the class of the third year: G. A. Gulce, J. W. Crisler, K. S. Enoch, W. W. Wallace.

The characters of the following were passed, and they were passed to the third year in local deacons' orders: W. J. Ferguson, G. H. Thompson, J. W. Tinnin.

The characters of the following were passed, and they were continued in the class of the second year: B. W. Lewis, E. L. Rawls, R. H. Barr, J. C. Ellis, J. T. Abney, W. J. Dawson, M. L. White, G. R. Ellis, W. M. Sullivan.

Dr. Andrews read the following telegram:

Meridian, Miss., Dec. 14, 1892.
Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., Sec. Conference:
Whisky petitions all badly defeated. Psalms ninety-eight, verses one and two.
L. P. BROWN.

To which Dr. Andrews was requested to send the following reply:

Natchez, Miss., Dec. 14, 1892.
L. P. BROWN:
Mississippi Conference joins you in devout thanksgivings, and commends you thus: Well done, thou good and faithful servant!
O. G. ANDREWS, Sec.

After announcements, Conference adjourned with benediction by the Bishop.

SECOND DAY.

The Conference was called to order at 9:30 A. M. by Bishop Granbery, and the religious exercises were conducted by Rev. D. G. W. Ellis, who read the ninety-seventh Psalm, announced Hymn 486, and prayer. The roll was called, and quite a number of the members who were absent on yesterday morning answered to their names.

On motion, the calling of the roll was dispensed with. The minutes of yesterday were read and approved after a few slight verbal changes. The following communications were read and referred to appropriate committees, viz.: Dr. I. G. John, Secretary Board of Missions; Rev. D. L. Mitchell, publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE; Board of Trustees of Centenary College, Millsaps College.

Bro. Mellen presented a memorial volume sketch of the life of Dr. J. W. Lambuth to the Conference, presented by Mrs. Lambuth. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we do accept the book in memory of our late brother, J. W. Lambuth, so thoughtfully sent us by his widow, and that the secretary of our Conference do communicate our thanks for the book to Sister Lambuth, as well as our sympathy with her in the trial through which she has been called to pass.

Resolved, That the memorial volume be deposited in the library of Millsaps College for preservation.

Ques. 3. "Who are discontinued?"
Ira F. Hawkins, at his own request.

Bro. Hawkins locates to attend Vanderbilt University.

Ques. 8. "What traveling preachers are elected deacons?"

J. T. Leggett's name was called, his character was passed, and he was passed to the class of the third year in deacons' orders. J. R. Whittington, J. J. Smylie and H. B. Trevlin were called, their characters passed, and they were continued in the class of the second year. The names of the brethren who were to be admitted on trial were then announced by the Bishop, their names having been called under this question, and to-morrow morning fixed as the hour for their formal reception.

Rev. R. G. Porter, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Dr. I. G. John were introduced to Conference, the latter addressing the Conference on the special department of which he has charge.

During his remarks Bro. Mellen made some statements in reference to his work as Conference solicitor, reporting that over one thousand dollars had been raised for the debt. He offered a resolution approving the plans devised for the raising of this money, pledging co-operation, and assuming our portion of the missionary debt. After some further remarks by Dr. John, he raised the sum of $300 for Mrs. Lambuth, now in Japan.

Ques. 1. "Who are admitted on trial?"

Henry W. Van Hook, Jackson—First Church; Clarence M. Crossley, McComb City; Thomas H. King, Adams circuit; Robert E. Rutledge, Hazlehurst station; Holbert A. Luster, Udoia station; Albert C. Burt, South Vicksburg station; John H. Foreman, Shiloh circuit; Paul D. Hardin, Trenton circuit; Williams M. Williams, Fannin circuit; Simpson J. Tubby, Neshoba circuit; Waldo W. Moore, Waynesboro and State Line; Adolphus T. Bell, Waynesboro and State Line; Fletcher B. Ormond, Marion circuit; Geo. W. Huff, North Wilkinson circuit; William J. Roberts, Clinton and Slaughter; Jno. S. Hodges, East Feliciana circuit.

A resolution was offered asking for a committee to look into and formulate a plan for the establishment of an orphan asylum, to be under the control of the Mississippi Conference.

Ques. 3. "Who are discontinued?"

J. C. Campbell, at his own request.

Ques. 7. "Who are deacons of one year?"

The characters of Hervie Mellard, William H. Lewis, Hicks M. Ellis, Charles W. Crisler, Henry L. Norton, Patrick H. Howse were passed, and they were advanced to the class of the fourth year. The characters of Henry C. Brown and William M. Stevens were passed, and they were continued in the class of the third year.

Bro. Curtis, of the Tennessee Conference, was introduced to the Conference.

After announcements, Conference adjourned with doxology and benediction by Bishop Granbery.

THIRD DAY.

The Conference was called to order at nine A. M. by Bishop Granbery, and the religious exercises consisted in a short prayer meeting. After reading of the minutes of yesterday's session the Joint Board of Finance made a report recommending an appropriation of $5,000 for Conference claimants for 1893, the payments to be made quarterly. They recommended the observance of the first Sunday in March as "Veteran's Day," collections for Conference claimants to be taken on said day. On circuits the following Sundays in March to be observed, etc. The report was adopted.

Rev. D. L. Mitchell, publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and Rev. W. B. Murrah, D. D., president of Millsaps College, were introduced to the Conference. Dr. Murrah made a fine address on the present and future of Millsaps College.

Ques. 6. "Who are received by transfer from other Conferences?"

H. E. Partridge, Florida Conference, and H. R. Singleton, California Conference—both in elder's orders.

The Bishop then called before him the class for admission into full connection, and delivered a most forcible charge. It had been our purpose to give a synopsis; but, after looking over our notes, came to the conclusion that we would do the address such great injustice, we decided to desist. It has made an impression on the Conference body.

At the conclusion of the address the class was admitted into full connection.

Ques. 7. "Who are deacons of one year?"

The names of the following were called, their characters passed, and they advanced to the class of the fourth year: Wm. G. Forsythe, Geo. D. Anders, N. J. Roberts, J. G. Shibley. The following were also elected elders, under Ques. 12: R. W. Tucker, J. M. Cowan.

James G. Cammack was continued in the class of the third year.

Ques. 12. "What traveling preachers are elected elders?"

The characters of W. P. Jones, James G. Galloway and Geo. W. Ferrer were passed, and they were elected elders. B. H. Rawls was passed and advanced in elder's orders. F. M. Keen was continued in the class of the fourth year.

Ques. 5. "Who are readmitted?"
W. W. Hopper, James N. Tucker—both in elder's orders.

Ques. 20. "Are all the preachers blameless in life and official administration?"

The preachers of the Vicksburg district were called, and their characters passed. The name of J. T. Nicholson was referred to the appropriate committee for superannuation.

The following resolutions were offered and adopted:

Resolved, That our sympathies are extended to Bro. and Sister Nicholson in their affliction, and that our prayers shall go up to our Father in heaven for the speedy restoration of our brother to his wonted health.

Resolved, That a copy be sent to the family.

The names of the pastors in the Jackson and Brookhaven districts were also called, and their characters passed. The Committee on Temperance made its report, which was adopted.

The report of Board of Trustees of Fort Gibson Female College was referred to the Board of Education without reading.

The Conference then adjourned with doxology and benediction.

FOURTH DAY.

The Bishop called the Conference to order at ten o'clock. The religious services were conducted by Rev. P. A. Johnston, who read a request for prayer. The minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

Ques. 6. "Who are received by transfer from other Conferences?"

C. F. Evans, from the Louisiana Conference.

A communication was received from Rev. W. H. Hayes, commissioner of Paine and Lane Institute for the colored race.

On motion, it was resolved that the educational collection be pro rated between Millsaps, Centenary, and Paine and Lane Institute on the basis of $1,000, $1,000, and $300, respectively. The paper was referred to the Board of Education.

On motion, to-morrow, at 3:30 o'clock P. M., was appointed as the hour for the memorial service, to be followed by the ordination of elders.

The Bishop appointed the following committee on the orphanage, ordered on yesterday: A. F. Watkins, M. L. Burton, H. M. Ellis, W. A. Gunning, Peter James.

Ques. 10. "What local preachers are elected deacons?"

H. W. Van Hook, R. E. Rutledge, W. T. Griffin, T. H. King, Milton Ferrer, W. P. Meador, D. C. Rawls, G. W. Huff, W. H. Carroll, G. B. Anders, W. T. Woodward.

On motion, the Conference proceeded to select a place for the next session. Hazlehurst and Yazoo City were nominated. Hazlehurst was selected.

A resolution explanatory of the disciplinary clause, "English brancher," was presented by the Committee of the First Year, and ordered put in the Minutes.

Rev. Mr. Patterson, assistant pastor of the Presbyterian Church, city, and Dr. Morton, Secretary Church Extension Board, were introduced to the Conference, and the latter addressed the Conference on the work under his management. At the conclusion of his talk he took up a collection amounting to $179.65.

The Board of Education presented a report relative to the transfer of our interest in Centenary College to the Louisiana Conference. The report, as a whole, was adopted, without amendment, after a lengthy discussion.

Conference adjourned with benediction.

FIFTH DAY—SUNDAY.

The day was the most beautiful of the season. The love-feast, at half-past nine A. M., conducted by Bro. R. S. Woodward, was a delightful occasion. It was remarkable how many of the brethren had been required by the heavenly Father to drink of the bitter cup of sorrow during the year; but it was gratifying—yes, joyous—to learn from each how the Divine Spirit had sustained and consoled each.

At eleven o'clock Bishop Granbery preached a very practical sermon on the office and work of the Christian ministry, which was greatly enjoyed by all. At the conclusion fourteen were ordained to the order of deacon.

At half-past three o'clock the Bishop called the Conference to order, and called—

Ques. 10. "What preachers have died during the year?"

The memoir of Rev. E. R. Strickland was read by Bro. A. J. Harris; that of Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D., by Rev. T. L. Mellen; that of Rev. L. Pearce by Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, and of Rev. L. W. Wood by Rev. O. A. Powell. Quite a number of brethren testified to the faithfulness and exemplary life of these, our brethren who have fallen on sleep. At the close of the service the Bishop ordained five young men to the order of elder.

The Protestant Churches were all filled by members of the Conference, and their ministrations were greatly enjoyed by the several congregations, and, it is hoped, greatly built up.

SIXTH DAY.

The Conference was called to order at 9:30 A. M., Bro. T. S. West presiding by appointment of the Bishop. The religious exercises were conducted by Bro. Norsworthy, and the minutes of Saturday and Sunday evening sessions were approved.

A resolution was adopted looking to the publishing of the Constitution and By-laws of the Brotherhood; also the Committee for Admission on Trial announced its interpretation of the disciplinary clause looking to an English examination, which was adopted.

A resolution of thanks to the citizens of Natchez for their generous hospitality, and to the railroads, was adopted by a rising vote.

Bro. J. M. Pugh presented the report of the Committee on the State of the Church, which was very gratifying indeed. The report was adopted.

Bro. Harmon read the report of the Board of Church Extension, which was adopted.

Bro. W. A. Gunning read the report of the Joint Board of Finance, which showed that the experiment of paying the Conference claimants quarterly was eminently successful. More money has been collected for this fund than ever before, the total amount received by them during the year from all sources being $5,150.15. The report was adopted.

Rev. W. H. Lewis presented the report of the Committee on Publishing Interests, which was adopted.

Revs. W. B. Lewis, R. J. Jones and J. W. Chambers were appointed on the Publishing Committee.

The secretary read the report of the Sunday-school Board. After a few alterations the report was adopted.

The Conference Endowment Board made its report, which was adopted. Also the Conference Board of Colportage, the Committee on Quarterly Conference Records, the Committee on the Observance of the Sabbath. Two amendments were offered, accepted by the committee—one to the effect that our college of Bishops be requested to change the day of meeting of Conference from Wednesday to Thursday; also that a committee be appointed to memorialize our congressmen to stand by their action to close the gates of the Columbian Exposition on Sunday.

The report was adopted. The following were appointed as a committee: J. M. Weems, J. P. Drake and J. W. Chambers.

The statistical secretary submitted his report, from which we gain the following information as to the work done this year:

Local preachers, 159; members, 38,920; 1,341 infants and 1,034 adults have been baptized; 403 Sabbath-schools, 2,113 officers and teachers, with 16,240 scholars; 421 churches, valued at $446,325; 104 parsonages, valued at $95,865; 2,515 additions on profession of faith, and a net increase of 707.

The Board of Missions made a report which was adopted. The first week in January or the first week thereafter, when practical, was appointed as a week of prayer and self-denial. Bro. Mellen made a statement as to the amount collected for the missionary debt by the Conference, showing that $1,154.74 had been collected for this purpose. Dr. West reported the amount received on the Lambuth fund and sent to the treasurer at Nashville.

The Committee on Orphanage reported that they had met and organized with W. A. Gunning as president, A. F. Watkins, secretary, and M. L. Burton as treasurer.

It was moved and seconded that the action by which the report on education was adopted be reconsidered. It was reconsidered. That portion of the report was stricken out referring to severing of our connection with Centenary College. After many parliamentary tactics it was resolved that $1,300 be raised for Millsaps College, $400 for Centenary and $300 for Paine and Lane Institute. It was carried. The motion, as a whole, was then adopted.

The report on Bible cause was read and adopted.

Ques. 20. "Are all the preachers blameless in life and official administration?"

The names of W. B. Illnes, R. S. Gale, J. W. Sandell and H. J. Harris were referred for superannuation.

The Bishop reported the following ordinations on yesterday:

Traveling Deacons: G. A. Gulce, J. W. Crisler, H. W. Wallace, and K. S. Enoch.

Local Deacons: H. W. Van Hook, R. E. Rutledge, W. T. Griffin, T. H. King, M. Ferrer, D. C. Rawls, G. W. Huff, W. H. Carroll, J. T. Anders, W. T. Woodward.

Traveling Elders: J. G. Galloway, W. P. Jones, G. W. Ferrer, R. W. Tucker, J. M. Conaway.

Ques. 5. "Who are readmitted?"

H. J. Harris.

Ques. 20 was resumed. The names of the preachers in the Brandon, Meridian, Seashore and Woodville districts were called, and their characters passed.

Ques. 3. "Who are discontinued?"

E. L. Rawls, T. E. Winecoff.

Ques. 16. "Who are located?"

B. M. Drake.

The Joint Board of Finance and Board of Missions made supplementary reports, which were adopted. The minutes were read and approved. After prayer the appointments were announced, and Conference adjourned.

THE BEAUTIFUL STORY.

BY KENNIE WILSON.

"This beautiful story that down through the ages comes to gladden our hearts with its mellowing sublimity. A sweet story inscribed on the holiest pages. Which are bound in the mystical volume of time.

On the earth evil reigned, and deep darkness brooded. Over fallen humanity's hopes like a pall. As to ruin souls wandered by error deluded, With no hand to deliver from sin's fatal thrall.

God so loved the doomed world in its long bondage grieving. Vainly yearning for peace amid discord and strife.

That he gave his dear Son, so our lost race believing. In his name might inherit the heavenly life.

The sad burdens of human sin, sorrow, and weakness. Christ descended from bright glory realms to assume.

For our guilt to atone with ineffable meekness. And achieve joyful triumph o'er death and the tomb.

Earth afforded no place but a manger-bed lowly. To receive him whose coming brought rest and release.

But with loving devotion in heart-temple bely. We may now fondly welcome the pure Prince of Peace.

Out-repeated, yet ever new story of Jesus. We rejoice in thy message, O meagreless love.

And to God be all glory for mercy that frees us. From sin fetters, and grants us glad life from above.

Letter from California.

I have just read, with thrilling interest, the history of your Methodism in the Louisiana Conference. That was a happy conception of the editor and Conference, for it gives us, on the outside, an acquaintance with the peculiar phases of your work we could gather so well from no other source. More than ever, I appreciate the difficulties under which your preachers have wrought through all these years, and congratulate you on your triumphs and the vantage-ground you now occupy. From an occasional contact with a part of your territory, and what I know of the history of your Louisiana population, especially New Orleans, I am prepared to echo your words, that "it requires grit, as well as grace, to stay in the ministerial work in Louisiana," and that "the same work done in older fields would have accomplished five times as much as in Louisiana." Much of your labor has been expended in overcoming hostile forces, which in the older Conferences do not exist, and, with populations friendly to our church and our forms of Christianity, they find a ready avenue to the hearts of the people who come under their ministry, and, almost with the first proclamation of the truth, revivals issue and churches grow.

The peculiar experiences through which I have been passing for six years in California prepare me to sympathize with your work. In many respects the fields are similar, with this difference: that where you are measuring arms with a foreign and largely Catholic element, we are measuring arms with an element equally hostile to us from the North, and thoroughly equipped both with men and money. Nevertheless, we have effected a lodgment in the city of Los Angeles, which has already culminated in the erection of four churches, each with respectable memberships and fine Sunday-schools, and with that as our center, we are going out into the regions roundabout. At nearly every important point, where we have planted at all, Southern Methodism has a monument worthy of itself in churches and parsonages. As to my own work, after five years spent on districts, Bishop Haygood has favored me this year by giving me a smaller sphere, where I can find ample employment, and yet give myself more to my family and to my books. I enjoy the change; it is a real recreation. (So much for the beauty of our system.) A preacher with us need not go out of the ministry to find the most genuine recreation, and yet keep himself busy all the while. I have associated with me this year one of our New Orleans boys—H. D. Kleckerbocker; and it will be a pleasure to his friends to know he is winning golden opinions for himself, both for his piety and his preaching. In Santa Barbara, which he claims as his peculiar work, he is drawing finely, and, as evidence of the appreciation in which he is held by his brethren of other churches, he, though by all odds the youngest pastor in the city, was selected to deliver the sermon on Thanksgiving Day, which I am informed he did before a large congregation with decided credit to himself and to his church. He is an accession to our ministerial force, and if his health improves, we shall be glad to keep him.

I am living in Carpinteria, the other of the two appointments. Here we have a delightful parsonage, and here the district parsonage is located. In all Southern California I have found no more beautiful valley than this. Ten miles in length, and at its maximum two miles in width, with mountains on the one side and the ocean on the other, and with a quiet and thrifty population of, perhaps, fifteen hundred, we have what resembles to me Longfellow's "Acadian Village." This valley is prolific in the most delightful fruit of nearly all varieties. The walnut and the lima bean, however, constitute the staple of our industries. The sun shines on no fairer land than this Southern California, and Southern California boasts no fairer spot than Carpinteria Valley. We sleep to the music of the ocean's roar, and through well-nigh the live-long year there are ever-changing attitudes of ocean or mountain, which yield you a perpetual inspiration, and almost make you feel you live in a land of enchantment. The only element this country needs, to realize my ideal, is to have Christ dominant in the hearts of the people, and his religion permeating its institutions, and Southern Methodism leading the way. With a connectional paper at San Francisco, and one of our most aggressive Bishops at Los Angeles, surely the church has taken all the stock in California we could ask; and so, with these standard-bearers in our front, we move on, with high expectation that God shall use us more and more in conquering this land to Christ. With my aged father and his family living in your midst, and a real personal affection for many of your preachers, I wish for you and your Conference—soon to convene—a happy session, and a new year of unwonted prosperity. R. H. PARKER

Carpinteria, Cal., Dec. 2, 1892.

There Are Critics and Critics.

The critical habit—for habit it comes to be—is not a good one. It is not good for the subject of it, nor for the object of it. It tends towards the cultivation of a censorious and fault-finding spirit, and the critical spirit grows rapidly by what it feeds upon. The criticisms we pass upon others, sooner or later, come to the ears of those criticised, and they bite like a serpent and sting like an adder. If what we have to say of others by way of criticism were said to their faces, privately and gently and lovingly, good might come of it in fully one-half the cases. But when said behind their backs, and said disparagingly, no good at all, but much harm is sure to follow. Much of the criticism passed upon others is, when boiled down, nothing more than saying, in other words, "He (or she) is not like me, and, therefore, is not right." This is one of the worst forms of egotisms, and all the more dangerous because the critic is wholly unconscious of it.

The critics are found among all classes of people, in all the professions and in all lines of business. There are preacher critics who criticize every sermon and every preacher they hear, and always adversely. When this is done in the family, and at the table, as generally happens, before the children, it is a great evil and a sin against God and the children. It tends to harden the children against preaching and to set them against the preacher. By the time they are ten or twelve years old they are as critical, sneering and cynical as their parents and seniors. They grow up with the idea that a large part of their duty is to find fault, to criticize. And so by the time they are well grown, they are as thoroughly hateful and spiteful as they can well be; and their minds and hearts are closed to the gospel and towards the minister, only to find fault with the message and the messenger.

The same fault-finding spirit extends to the preacher's family—to their dress, the quality of the goods, to the style of the dresses, hats, and such like. Critics of this class, and of these things, generally say: "We need a change of preachers, a cheaper preacher—one that will not need so much money. His family is entirely too dressy, too extravagant." This is unkind and thoroughly mean. Oftener than not the statement is false, without foundation in fact, and purely a matter of jealousy and spleen. This class of critics assumes the right to manage the preacher's private business and to control and direct the private affairs of his family—a piece of impertinence as ungentlemanly and unladylike as it is unchristian.

There are, also, critic preachers who are critical of preachers. They tear every sermon they hear into shreds and find flaws in sermons, styles and manners, whether there are flaws or not. They know everything about preaching: the build and make of a sermon, the style of delivery, the manner of a preacher, and all of that. Aback of all this there is generally this thought, implied, though not expressed: "I am right, and preachers ought to be like me, and their sermons like mine." Preacher critics of preachers are dreaded by many, feared by a few and heartily despised by nearly all.

There are merchants who are critical of other merchants—of their mode of conducting business, of the quality of their goods, of their prices and of the statements they make concerning their goods. They never miss an opportunity to say an unkind thing of their fellow-merchants. This is bad policy, to say nothing of the moral wrong of it. Nine hundred and ninety-nine times out of every thousand it drives custom from the orrillo to the merchant criticised. It is just so much free advertising for the other party. It is cutting off one's own nose to spite the other fellow's face. The more the critic looses trade the more the merchant criticised prospers. The poor, blind critic never once sees that he is driving his own customers away, and keeping his fellow-merchant prominently before them, and is steadily begetting in their sympathy for the merchant so persecuted. This is one way of killing the goose that laid the golden egg. The critic falls into the pit he dug, or thought he was digging, for the other man. How foolish this! How unchristian, how unkind!

These are some of the critics, and what is said of them applies as well to all other critics of all the other classes, professions and avocations. GILDEROY.

Pickens, Miss., Dec. 3, 1892.

P. S.—Even this is critical of critics. G.

Mission Work in South Louisiana.

I read with much interest, in the ADVOCATE, a few days ago, Bro. F. N. Parker's article on "Missions in South Louisiana," also one from Bro. Armstrong in the last issue. I am glad to know that some of the brethren are waking up on that subject, the importance of which I knew but little until I came to Southern Louisiana. Since here I have been studying carefully the situation and what was necessary to our success as a church in this country. I will give my views as briefly as possible.

In the first place, we need men of ability and experience in the pulpits. It is useless to send inexperienced preachers to this country, and I say this at the risk of being lifted out myself—I am ready. The next thing necessary is to devise some means by which we will be able to hold and develop what we already have in sight. This we can never do while the Catholics are permitted to educate our children, which they are doing to an alarming extent. Wherever you see a Catholic Church you will see, hard by, a Catholic school. They are considered better schools than any we have in this country, as the public and little private schools do not amount to much. We have in this town (Franklin) between fifty and seventy-five Protestant children attending the Catholic schools. If we had a good Methodist school here, it would have a patronage of from seventy-five to one hundred and fifty children; not only a self-supporting, but a paying institution. All the other towns, from Morgan City to Lake Charles, are so far as I know, in the same condition.

What we need, and what we must have, is just what the Catholics have already—a school in connection with every church. The Protestant denomination that comes into this country and works on this line is the one that will capture and hold this country for all time to come. (Brethren, wake up!) We do not need colleges; we need what might be considered first-class primary schools; some of which will grow into colleges when needed.

Let the church raise within the next five years thirty thousand dollars—much less than one college building would cost—and build thirty school-houses in Southern Louisiana, and it will accomplish more in the way of "Christian education" than all the colleges in Louisiana and Mississippi put together, and it will be the means of holding this—one of the most beautiful and productive countries on earth—for Christ and for Methodism. No reflection on any college or colleges is intended. I say, with all my heart, endow and keep the colleges going. It may occur to some that one thousand dollars would not build a suitable house. It might not be sufficient for some localities, but where more is needed it could be raised among the people. If we had one thousand dollars in hand, we could build in the town of Franklin a house worth from two to three thousand dollars, and this might be done in many other places. I am aware of the fact that we, as a Conference, can not do this work without help from the Parent Board of Missions. Then let that Board do one of two things: either appropriate and place in the hands of our Conference Board five thousand dollars annually, or reduce our assessment for foreign missions to four thousand dollars, which will enable our Conference Board to raise the assessment for domestic missions to six thousand dollars, or more. Why is it that the Holston Conference, with ten large presiding elders' districts, is only assessed $9,000 for foreign missions, when ours, with six districts, and at least, one-half of the territory strictly missionary ground, is assessed $8,000? I suppose it is for the reason they have an assessment of $7,000 for domestic missions. If the Parent

Board refuses to lend us a helping hand in this difficult work, then let us raise the assessment for domestic missions to six thousand dollars, and collect it, and, at the same time, do all we can for foreign missions. I would like to call the attention of the Woman's Board to this field. I know of no field which they could work more effectively than this. Let them come in and possess the land; they are able to do it. I do not think we are ready for "French-speaking preachers," unless they could speak and preach in English, so they could be placed in charge of churches already organized. I have neither time nor space to give the "whys and wherefores;" may do so at some future time. J. B. CASSITY.

Our Obligations.

It is an indisputable fact that every human being, from the very moment that he reaches the age of accountability, has resting upon him obligations, from those of minor importance to those of the most serious nature imaginable. Every individual who can be held responsible for his actions, be his sphere of action in life what it may, has resting upon him obligations, permanent and universal; obligations which he can neither create nor destroy. It is now my purpose to notice briefly the great mistake so frequently made by individuals who entertain the delusive idea that they can create these obligations. The words of the Greek poet, Menander, when he said, "I am not to live, to live for self alone," have been echoed and re-echoed to the present time. In the words of Scripture, "None of us liveth to himself." As soon as man becomes conscious of the strife between a higher and a lower nature within him—a warring between the spiritual and carnal—he begins to feel what is right and what is wrong, and to recognize his choice between the good and evil, which establishes his free agency. Then it is that the individual must exercise his choice by meeting, on the one hand, or on the other disregarding already existing obligations. Every true patriot will recognize his obligation to promote the best interests of his country when legitimate and available opportunities are presented.

But how many enter upon the stage of active life, and fall to play the part of true patriots! The fact of not having acknowledged by some public demonstration or prescribed ceremony the existing obligations, does not excuse such individuals or lessen their obligations in the least. How many children feel no neglect of duty to their parents, unless in a failure to obey absolute commands, while they are continually under obligations which they practically deny. Again, how many there are who seem to have little or no idea of their paramount duty to the great Creator, and are wasting golden and God-given opportunities, and rushing heedlessly down paths of vice and ruin under the satanic delusion that they have created no obligations with God, and are, therefore, free to act as they please. This mistake should be avoided, and our obligations to God recognized as above our own creation or control, but whose fulfillment is entirely in our hands. These obligations begin with life and end with death. They rest upon the parent in his relation to the child, and upon the child in his relation to the parent; upon the master in his relation to his servant, as well as upon the servant in his relation to his master; upon man as a member of the state and human society; and, above all, upon the human family, individually, as children of the living God. All should cultivate broad views of life, have a true conception of its duties and obligations, and "Learn as if we were to live forever;

Live as if we were to die to-morrow."

A Book for the Times.

I refer to Dr. Sawyer's "The World in the Church." The strong voice of the prophet of a spiritual religion is raised here with no compromising sound. It is the voice we need just now more than ever. The ADVOCATE recently, in a clipping, pictures "the signs of the times" thus: "The power of ungodliness embodied in the subtle materialism of the present day; the atheism of modern scientific writings; the semi-iconoclasm of the higher criticism; the practical paganism produced by the almost universal liquor traffic; the steady aggressions upon the sanctities heretofore investing the Sabbath day; the liberalism in social life and the lax laws of custom that palliate lewdness, profanity, and public immoralities, as of the lotteries, the race courses, the speculative exchanges," etc. And the writer might have added the increasing worldliness in the church.

It is this last which Dr. Sawyer, with his accustomed vigor, sets himself against. He holds that there are many in the church who are living for self rather than Christ, and are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," and have "only a name to live, being dead." He charges that there is "a great deal of deliberate sinning on the part of hundreds of church members, and that the careless, even reckless, living of many other hundreds is something amazing." Doubtless, this picture applies more to the cities than to the country. Yet the case is sad enough everywhere. The spirit of worldliness is in the air. The prophets of religion need to rise up and rebuke it. Nothing stronger in this line has been said than this little book. Preachers ought to circulate it. The people may not want to read it, but that would show all the more conclusively that it needs to be read. The truth is not believed till it is preached. Reforms are not had without agitation. To "cry aloud and spare not" is the prophet's duty; and right well has this prophet done his. It is a book for the times. J. W. MEDLOCK.

An Open Letter.

To Judge Foote and "A Member at Large."

Dear Brethren: I have been much interested in reading your respective articles lately published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE apropos of "much-needed legislation."

First of all, I like radicalism—the centrifugal force in politics, science, philosophy and religion. "A Member at Large" supplies this force. Then, I like fogalism—conservatism, if you prefer—a centripetal force in all things. I find this in the communication of Judge Foote. Were it not for the influence of the latter force, the former would "run things into the ground." But with these forces so well balanced, the church can rest assured that we will "hold our own."

At this rate, however, we will be A. D. 3784 just where we are now—1892. We need a third force—a sort of apocryphic gravity; a force which settles things according to their weight; a progressive conservatism placed on advanced ground, where the hasty can be stopped and the tardy pulled up. This scribe is not this force, but is, in a measure, under the influence of it, and wants you brethren to adjust some matters before you go any further.

You, Bro. "Member at Large," must provide for those feeble churches which are so much in Judge Foote's way, and in the way of your theory; while you, Judge Foote, must provide the "slings of war" for those frequent moves which you suggest.

There is a notion abroad that if the churches had to pay the expenses of moving, there would not be such a clamor for the short-term theory. Under the four-years' rule the preachers average a little more than one move every two years, at an average expense, I suppose, of $50 a move, or $25 per year, plus the waste attendant upon a move.

Say the average efficient life of an itinerant preacher is twenty years; then $25 plus waste plus twenty years equals $500 plus waste. Now, if you can suggest some plan by which this $25 per annum is to be paid, or the family of the dead preacher is to receive $500 at his death, you will become a benefactor to widows and orphans thereby.

It will not do to say that the "Conference collections" is for that purpose, since the amount paid to the family of a deceased minister is, as a rule, inadequate for the payment of the interest on unpaid salaries.

If you are going to "hustle" us, have the church pay the expenses of the hustling. Yours truly,

J. A. PARKER.

Our Christmas Day.

BY REV. SAMUEL PLANTZ, PH.D.

The twenty-fifth of December, the shortest day in the year, has been celebrated for many ages and among many peoples as a time of rejoicing. On this day the Egyptians held a festival in honor of the birth of their god Horus. The Romans called it "the birthday of the invincible sun," and dedicated it to Bacchus, rejoicing with him that the sun was about to return and revivify the vineyards. The Persians observed it with ceremonies of birthday of Mithras, the mediator, a been a joyous holiday, and in India it is a day in which homes are decorated with floral and flowers, and presents are exchanged much as in America.

Just when this day came to be celebrated as the birthday of Christ, history does not tell us. We know that Christmas was observed in the early century, for in 138 A. D. a bishop issued an order concerning it. It was apparently already a popular festival. There seems to have been, however, a difference in the date upon which it was kept, as the Eastern church observed it on the sixth of January, and the Western church during the latter part of the century. Finally, in the fourth principal theologians assembled the evidence, and they fixed on the twenty-fifth day of December as the date of Christ's birth and the appropriate day to hold the Christmas festival.

The customs which have attended the observance of Christmas are part pagan, easy to distinguish between the two. The Christmas log is the yule log of under which the Christian youth kisses the Christian maid is a remnant of Druidism. The Christmas tree finds its pagan prototype in the German Yggdrasil, a great tree, whose roots were hidden in the ground, but whose top reached to Walhalla, the old German paradise, where its leaves nourished the goat upon whose milk fallen heroes restored themselves. The pagan origin of our jolly friend, Santa Claus, is too well known to need consideration here.

In this country at first Christmas was excluded. The Pilgrim fathers rejected it because of its pagan connections. Thanksgiving largely occupied its place, and was nicknamed the New England Christmas. But the Dutch settlers brought over with them their Christmas festival, and it soon rooted itself in the affections of the people, till it became our most joyous and welcome festival day. We need not hesitate because Christian and anti-Christian elements mingle in it. What paganism there is has been baptized to a noble service. But one thing we do need to guard, and that is that our feelings in the celebration be Christian and not pagan, that we recognize the religious meaning of Christmas, and that we observe it with that spirit of thankful gratitude which should characterize those for whom Christ came and died rather than with the wild spirit of dissipation which characterized the yuletide days.—Epworth Herald.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Dec. 25, 1892.

By Rev. WM. H. LA PRADÉ, D.D.

Christmas Lesson. — The Birth of Christ.

Luke II, 8-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy." (Luke, II, 10.)

Our Christmas lesson is on the wonderful event—the most wonderful in history—foretold by the prophets and anticipated in all previous revelations of God to man: the birth of the Lord Jesus Christ. The time was four or five years before the A. D. era, as it is commonly reckoned, or B. C. 4 or 5. The exact period of the year we cannot tell. Our December 25 has for so many centuries been regarded as the date as to fix it in the mind of Christendom. There is no proof that that date is not correct.

Vers. 3, 9. In Judea, near Bethlehem. In the fourth verse of this chapter reference is made to Bethlehem as the place of Jesus' birth. To protect the flocks from thieves and from beasts of prey, and to prevent them from wandering in dangerous places, shepherds attended them constantly.

An angel suddenly stood by them. To the Jewish mind it was appropriate that by an angel revelation should be made. So it had often been. This mode of communication had been used all along Jewish history. A supernatural light shone—the manifestation of the presence of God. The rude peasants were chosen to receive the message, not the members of the great Sanhedrin. Truth is revealed to the sincere heart, not to official dignity, unless, as was not the case then, dignitaries be true and simple-hearted also.

Vers. 10-12. "Good tidings"—Good indeed, for it meant salvation. Tidings of God come to dwell among men; of deliverance from sin and its consequences.

"Of great joy"—The "joy of God's salvation," of entrance into the kingdom of his grace and his glory. To all people!—Our Lord said, afterward, that the gospel must be preached "to all nations—to every creature."

Bethlehem was the town of David. There he lived with his father Jesse, until called to lead Israel. The prophet Micah had foretold that the Messiah would be born there. (See Micah, V, 2.) The shepherds would need some distinguishing mark by which the Babe should be known; hence the mention of the manger. (See Ver. 7.)

Vers. 13, 14. The announcement being made, a mighty host of angels appeared, singing praises to God for this wonderful gift to men. The song embraces the effects of the work of Christ; it is all there except the glory of the resurrection and the final triumph; that will be hailed with a new song. (See I. Thess. IV, 16, 17.)

Vers. 15, 16. The words of the angel had suggested that they were to go. So, naturally, they would wish to do. Bethlehem was near by, and the shepherds knew where to find the public fountains. As the angel had said, so they found the Babe.

Vers. 17, 18. Through the "wise men from the East." (See Matthew's account.) Herod and the Rabbinists heard of this wonderful event through the Judean shepherds, the simple folk of Bethlehem and the surrounding country. Prophecy fulfilled, history now must be made known. Such was God's purpose, in star and in angel.

Vers. 19, 20. Mary was a woman only—"blessed among women," truly, and yet only a woman. Much had been revealed to her already concerning this wonderful Child, but much she did not understand. Woman-like and, in particular, mother-like, she "pondered them in her heart."

All the references to Mary in the Word of God show that she was simply a pure minded, godly woman who trained her child Jesus according to the requirements of the religion of her fathers. Highly honored she was, as a woman, but in the work of redemption had no place except that she was chosen to be the mother of the human side of our Lord's nature. During her life on earth she worked no miracle; she taught no truths, except as other women did, and in no special manner; she was connected with the messianic work of Jesus. She was, save through the atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ, like any other woman who is saved, and has no authority and no power in spiritual things other than belongs to any redeemed soul.

Vers. 20. These simple men of Judea did not know all the deep and far-reaching meanings of this most wonderful event; but they knew that it meant good to Israel and to themselves. Their rejoicing was natural. That all men do not rejoice at the coming of Christ, with only joy, is very strange. But for blindness of heart they would, and Christmas would be a day of "peace and goodwill" in the highest, purest sense.

China Mission Conference.

BY BISHOP J. S. KEY.

The sixth session of the China Mission Conference has just closed. The laborers have hurried off to their various fields.

We met in Soochow, a city of 500,000 population, nearly one hundred miles east of Shanghai. This is the silk metropolis of the Orient, of great age and wealth and wickedness. It was a city of importance when the Jews, under Ezra, returned from captivity in Babylon, and when Xerxes invaded Greece. It was started only two hundred years after Rome laid out the city of Rome. There is inspiration in the contact with a city and people who had organized national existence when Babylon fell and Nineveh was destroyed, and Greece and Rome crumbled to dust.

Heathenism is here with the weight of four thousand years of falsehood and superstition. There are more than three hundred temples of idolatry in Soochow, and three thousand heathen priests and one hundred nunneries and seven great pagodas, one of them 250 feet high. We are certainly needed here.

This is also the literary center of the empire. It is estimated that more than twenty thousand students assemble at one time to pass examination in the Confucian classics for literary degrees. These all worship Confucius. In the midst of a most fertile plain, densely populated, Soochow is a base of missionary operations from which many millions can be reached. It is here we have located one of our centers of educational and evangelistic work, and from this point we radiate in every direction.

China is a wonderfully watered country. Rivers and lakes and canals run through the whole land, and form the only highways along which a traveler can pass. Boats innumerable ply these waters, and furnish the ready means of transportation through the adjacent country. These we are using. Before the Conference met I spent eight days and nights consecutively on house-boats, visiting our different mission stations.

At Soochow we are well established, and here we are gathering supplies and training our forces for the conflict which is coming. We have already two good churches—one of them dedicated during our Conference session—and we stationed here two foreign and two native pastors. Brington College is located here, under the presidency of Dr. Parker; and the Girls' School of the Woman's Board, under charge of Mrs. Campbell. These institutions are doing untold good in bringing the young to Christ and training them for future service.

Shanghai is our other center. There we have two good church-buildings. The Anglo-Chinese College is located in Shanghai. It was founded by Dr. Allen, and is still under his presidency. It has an organized church, with preaching and other worship in the College Chapel. The Woman's Board has also a Coptic School, under Miss Richardson; and McTear's School, with Miss Laura Haygood at its head. At all these points our schools are well located, and equipped with good buildings on ample grounds. The church has good reasons to look for large results from these valuable agencies.

I took great pleasure in going through our mission field, and carefully inspected the work; and I now report to the church that the faithful men and women who represent you here are doing all in their power—some of them beyond their power—and God is with them. Results here, as they are seen and judged from the home view, seem small and not in proportion to the on-lay. Remember, this is China—idolatrous China, Confucian China, buried under millenniums of ignorance and superstition and depravity. This is Satan's citadel. He reigns and triumphs here. His heel is on the neck of China's millions, and he will not surrender his scepter and retire at the mere bidding of the church. He must be overthrown and driven out. Idolatry is devil worship, and the superstitious fears of the Chinese, fostered and fed for ages by its observance, have emasculated them to the last degree. They are in perpetual "bondage unto fear." I had no dream of the depths to which they had descended, or the paralysis which has fallen upon them. China, as compared with Christian countries, is a thousand years behind in the race of national progress; and what is worse than that, she means to stay so if it be possible. Without railroads or post-offices or schools or courts or laws or rational currency of her own, she is about like a great hulk without rudder or sail, drifting with wind and tide, and four hundred millions of souls on board. The Mongolian mind, naturally phlegmatic and unsuspicious, has grown stolid by these ages of repression and unbelief. Dullness of spiritual perception characterizes the Chinaman. The statement of immortality through Jesus Christ our Lord bewilders him. His faith power is well-nigh gone. His very language is inadequate for spiritual instruction, and missionaries find themselves embarrassed in the use of it.

Those are some of the hindrances, to weak faith and timid hearts discouraging. Our brave, true, devoted workers here see them, but, undaunted, are grappling with them in the name of the Lord of hosts. And they are making progress.

A year ago we enlarged our field and entered three new cities. Of course, we encountered opposition. "The heathen raged, and the people imagined a vain thing. The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers took counsel together against the Lord and against his anointed." This literally occurred in two of these cities. In one the chief official attempted to close us out, and in the other the owner of our rented chapel rose up against us; but he that sitteth in the heavens laughed; the Lord had them in derision, and we are now firmly established in both places; and on my visit to one of these stations I had the great privilege of baptizing two converted heathen men, and of receiving an application for membership from a third one. And now instead of three there are scores of cities lying close around us, each numbering from fifty to five hundred thousand souls, into which no missionary has entered, where no Sabbath is known, no Bible read, no Christ preached. Idolatry is the only worship. Ignorance of God and eternity and their own immortal destiny has darkened and bewildered them. Like children in the darkness, frightened and confused, they are feeling around for help and crying for the light.

People of God in America, do you know these facts? Members and ministers of my own church, do you? I am sure your indifference is born of your unacquaintance with the situation. If famine prevailed in China, and these millions were perishing for bread, you could not be unmoved. Public meetings would be held, appeals would sound through the press, collections would be taken, ships would be loaded, and men would volunteer to distribute the food. See the uprising to relieve the stricken Russians. I declare to you, from personal observation, there is a far worse state of things in China. Four hundred millions of blood-bought immortals are perishing here. Multiplied millions have already passed beyond the reach of help. Why can not some one wake up the church, and roll these dying heathen on her conscience? As I see it from this standpoint, unconcern and inaction by the church toward the lost world means either ignorance or sin. How long can this ignorance continue without sin? I wonder at the indifference of the ministry. For months we have been calling for volunteers for China and Japan, and no response comes. With crowded Conferences and scores of evangelists, all zealous to win souls from sin to Christ, no man's zeal prompts him to preach to the heathen. I am told that the brethren are waiting for a special call from God—a voice, or a vision, or an angel. Could they have seen the eight happy-hearted women of the Woman's Board who landed in Shanghai yesterday, it might have been a revelation to them. Sixteen women of our church are now in China, teaching, superintending day schools, and doing all sorts of missionary work among women, and they are not called to preach or to go to China. The Woman's Board have just doubled their working force in this field. Two devout laymen are employed by us in Japan, and six godly women. In China we have one splendid layman—Dr. W. H. Parker. When the consecrated ministry decline, it is well that volunteer laymen go into the army. When men called and set apart to the ministry refuse to respond, it is fortunate that a company of women whose hearts God has touched are ready to go forth to take their places.

In the China Mission Conference we have, all told, thirteen preachers and one layman; two of the preachers are home, by permission of the Board, on account of broken health. The Woman's Board have sixteen, all present. The eight new ones just arrived have scattered out to their work, and will, first of all, bend their energies to acquiring the language. The ladies already in the field received them literally with open arms. It is a timely reinforcement. Several of these hard-worked women are about to the limit of their endurance. They must have relief, or a break-down is inevitable. The woman's work out here is admirable. I have visited all their stations, and have been delighted with what they are doing, and their plans for the future. As soon as the newly-arrived ladies learn the language they will enter a field of Bible woman's work, now open to them, and very inviting. The condition of the heathen woman is desperate. Something surely must be done to reach and save them. Only women can get access to them. But if we had five new men, we could place them at once in most important centers. Where are the men? I am coming back to hunt for them. I hope to reach the session of the North Texas Conference, and possibly some others. Meanwhile, if any brother hears the cry of the perishing, and is moved to come and help, let him write to me at Fort Worth, Texas.

Below I give the appointments of the preachers in the China Mission Conference:

A POOR EXCUSE.—One of the commonest excuses for small contributions toward the general work of the church, by congregations and by individuals, is that "there have been so many extra expenses at home." It is one of the meanest excuses that can be made. Just because you have expended extra sums for the improvement or indulgence of yourself, individual or congregational, it has become your duty to give a proportionate extra amount toward furthering that part of the work of Christ which does not directly benefit yourself. The true Christian before treating himself to an extra luxury always asks, not, "Will I have enough to be benevolent?" but, "Will I have enough to buy it and give of Christ? To spend on ourselves, and then take from what we owe Christ and his church in order to make it up, is sheer robbery—robbery of God. To spend on beautifying our own church, and then withhold on that account what would help to build a church in our home mission field, or to feed and clothe a missionary, is, if possible, still worse.—The Moravian.

A person is prematurely old when baldness occurs before the forty-fifth year. Use Hall's Hair Renewer to keep the scalp healthy and prevent baldness.

"Don't allow yourself to underrate your pastor. If you think he is not sanctified, do not allow yourself to speak against him, or to become irritated at him. If your experience is brighter than his, pray for him. God will be able to use him for a great work, even though his experience is not the richest and may, through your humbleness and gentleness, lead him into the blessing."

"To C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:
"Two years ago I had a severe attack of the Grip, which left me in a terribly weak condition. Last winter I had another attack and was again very badly off, my health nearly wrecked. My appetite was all gone, I had no strength, I felt tired all the time, had roaring noises in my head, like a waterfall. I also had severe headaches and

CHRISTMAS.

The next Sabbath will be Christmas Day. Again we have come to the time which, by the common consent of Christendom, is set apart and hallowed as the birth-time of our Lord. The incarnation of the Son of God is the greatest event of the world's history and the greatest fact of time, and, therefore, is well worthy of celebration by all Christian people. It should be a time of holy gladness, a time of thankful reminiscence, a time of pious rejoicing, a time of hopeful expectation. We wish all our readers a happy celebration of this sacred season. That it be so, let all remember kindly Christ's representatives—the poor. In each one of them our Lord is pleading for recognition and help. To neglect or fail to remember them at this season is to worship vainly, and does not become any true follower of the lowly Nazarene. To give to them is to "lend unto the Lord," and he will repay that loan. Let, then, this hallowed season be spent as becometh servants of the Most High, and then shall all be better prepared to enter upon the great duties and hardships of the golden opportunities of the coming year.

The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen.

LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The forty-seventh session of the Louisiana Annual Conference convened in the Methodist Church in Lake Charles, La., Dec. 14, Bishop C. B. Galloway in the chair. The Bishop opened the session by religious services; reading a portion of Scripture from II Timothy, singing Hymn 228, and praying most fervently for God's blessing upon the Conference and its work. The congregation then united in singing part of Hymn 546, after which Dr. Ahrens led in prayer. The secretary of the last Conference called the roll, and a large number of preachers and laymen answered to their names.

J. T. Sawyer was elected secretary, and F. S. Parker was elected assistant secretary. The hour of meeting was fixed at nine A. M., and the hour of adjournment at twelve M.

Committees appointed:

Conference Relations—J. A. Parker, J. D. Harper, C. F. Evans, H. Armstrong, T. H. McClelland, F. G. Hocutt, T. K. Faunt LeRoy.

Public Worship—J. A. Miller, T. J. Upton.

Bible Cause—F. N. Parker, T. B. White, J. F. Wynn.

Church Publications—J. B. Walker, B. F. White, R. M. Blocker.

Temperance—J. M. Beard, R. Parvin, Dr. A. S. Helmick.

District Conference Records—N. S. Cornell, J. W. Dawson, H. W. May.

Memoirs—W. H. LaPrade, F. N. Parker.

Dr. Morton, of church extension committee; D. M. Smith, of the publishing house; T. M. Cobb,

Paine and Lane Institute, and Bro. Price, of Mississippi Conference, were introduced to the Conference.

On motion, a Committee of Three was appointed on Paine and Lane Institute.

A communication from the Board of Church Extension was read and referred to the Conference Board.

At this point Dr. Morton made an interesting and instructive talk on the subject of church extension. He explained several features of his work which were not so clear to many, especially the birthday cards.

A communication from the Board of Trustees of Centenary College was read and referred to the Board of Education. A communication from the publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was read and referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals. A communication was read from the Secretary of the Board of Missions and referred to the Conference Board. A communication from the Book Agent was referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals, and one from the Sunday-school Secretary was referred to the Sunday-school Board.

R. M. Blocker, T. H. McClelland and J. F. Foster were appointed a Committee on Paine and Lane Institute.

Ques. 20. The names of the presiding elders—C. W. Carter, R. J. Harp, J. A. Miller, J. L. P. Sheppard, H. O. White, J. I. Hoffpauir—were called, and after brief reports of the work on their districts, their characters were passed.

The names of J. H. Stone, P. H. Dieffenwerth, Jesse Fulton, E. W. Yancy, George Jackson, R. S. Trippett, Enos B. Foust, J. L. Wright, M. C. Manly were called, their characters passed, and they were referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for superannuation. The names of A. M. Wailes and Christian Keener were called and referred to the Committee on Conference Relations, for the supernumerary relation.

W. H. LaPrade, J. A. Parker and B. F. White were appointed a Committee of Investigation on the case of T. J. Upton.

Ques. 1. John H. Stafford and Albert Lutz, from the New Orleans district; J. F. Johnston, from the Opelousas district; Robert H. Wynn, from the Alexandria district, were admitted on trial.

Ques. 2. Samuel S. Bogan, J. R. Roy, N. B. Norwood, John B. Kent, C. R. Seward, B. H. Sheppard, W. F. Sanders, H. W. Knickerbocker and E. T. Denson reported and were continued on trial.

W. D. Gaskins was continued in the class of the first year.

W. A. Richardson surrendered his credentials and retired from our ministry.

Bro. Wilkinson, a supernumerary of the Southeast Indiana Conference of the M. E. Church, was introduced.

Ques. 3. H. M. Banks was, by vote, discontinued.

The committee on the case of J. M. Brown was appointed: J. W. Medlock, J. L. Wright and J. B. A. Ahrens.

Rev. Lyman, pastor of Presbyterian Church, was introduced. After announcements, the Conference adjourned with benediction by Wm. Price.

SECOND DAY.

Conference met at nine o'clock, and the opening services were conducted by Rev. Robert Parvin. The minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

Ques. 2—"Who are admitted on trial?"—was then taken up and the names of Lyman F. Jackson, James N. Gibbs, Wm. A. Clark, of the Shreveport district, were called, and they were admitted on trial.

On motion, the Conference reversed its action in the case of H. M. Banks, and he was continued on trial.

Ques. 5—"Who are readmitted?"—was called, and the name of W. W. Drake, of the Shreveport district, was called, and readmitted and passed to class of the third year.

Ques. 2—"Who remain on trial?"—was taken up, and the names of H. M. Banks, B. H. Sheppard, H. W. Knickerbocker, E. T. Denson were called.

The committee appointed to investigate the case of Rev. T. J. Upton reported no trial necessary.

Ques. 20—"Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?"—was then resumed, and the names of Rev. W. H. LaPrade, J. M. Beard, S. S. Keener, J. B. Walker, F. N. Parker, J. T. Sawyer, H. S. Johns, C. F. Evans, A. E. Clay, J. B. A. Ahrens, F. D. Van Valkenburgh were called, and their characters passed.

The Committee on Paine and Lane Institute made its report, which was adopted. Rev. T. M. Cobb, of Southwest Missouri Conference, was introduced, and addressed the Conference on the subject of Paine and Lane Institute, and took a collection to which nearly everybody contributed a dollar each. The collection resulted in $68.35 being laid upon the table.

Ques. 8—"What traveling preachers are elected deacons?"—was then taken up, and the name of H. W. Knickerbocker was called, and he elected to deacon's orders.

The trustees of the New Orleans Depository made their report, which was adopted and referred to the Joint Board of Finance.

Sister F. S. Lyons, the president of the Louisiana Woman's Parsonage and Home Missionary Society, was introduced, and addressed the Conference on her work.

Ques. 7—"Who are the deacons of one year?"—was then taken up, and the names of H. H. Ahrens and E. L. Singletary were called, their characters passed, and they were continued in class of third year.

The names of I. T. Reames, W. G. Evans, Wm. Schuble, C. E. McDonald, J. J. Kelly, W. W. Drake were called, their characters passed, and they were advanced to class of fourth year.

After announcements, and the singing of the doxology, the benediction was pronounced by Bro. Cobb, and the Conference adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

Conference met at nine o'clock, Bishop Galloway in the chair. Devotional exercises conducted by Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy. Minutes of yesterday read and approved.

Ques. 12—"What traveling preachers are elected elders?"—was then taken up and the names of Jas. E. Riddle, Jno. F. Foster, T. L. Lallance, G. E. Greene, C. F. Staples were called, their characters passed, and they elected to elder's orders.

Ques. 10—"What local preachers are elected deacons?"

R. Roy, E. T. Denson, R. C. Grace, T. W. Pipes, F. M. Henry.

Ques. 14—"What local preachers are elected elders?" C. R. Seward.

Ques. 1—"Who are admitted on trial?" R. C. Grace.

Ques. 20. The case of J. M. Brown was referred to the presiding elder of the Delhi district for investigation. The names of J. L. Pierce, S. H. Whatley were called, and their characters passed.

Rev. J. E. Harrison, one of the editors of the Tennessee Methodist, was introduced, and made a talk for his paper.

Ques. 20 was resumed, and the characters of the following brethren were passed: T. K. Faunt LeRoy, J. H. Brown, W. F. Henderson, J. E. Denson, L. A. Reid, S. J. Davies, J. S. Sanders, J. B. Williams, A. D. McVoy, Sr., S. S. Holladay, T. S. Randle, R. J. Harp, R. M. Blocker, H. Armstrong, C. B. Carter, F. S. Parker, J. B. Cassity, T. B. White, R. Randle, C. M. Lyons, J. F. Searlock, J. M. Johnston.

Rev. H. C. Morrison, Missionary Secretary, addressed the Conference for a few minutes, and got the Conference to accept and subscribe its apportionment of the missionary debt, amounting to $2,562.

Report of Mansfield College was read and reported to the Board of Education.

The report of the Committee on Bible Cause was read and adopted.

Report of the New Orleans District Missionary Committee was referred without reading to the Board of Missions.

Ques. 17. A. M. Wailes, Christian Keener.

Ques. 18. J. H. Stone, P. H. Dieffenwerth, Jesse Fulton, E. W. Yancy, George Jackson, R. S. Trippett, Enos B. Foust, J. L. Wright, M. C. Manly, J. O. Bennett.

Ques. 20 was taken up, and the character of J. O. Bennett passed, and his name referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for a superannuated relation.

The names of W. H. Hill, J. F. Patterson, F. G. Hocutt, J. F. Wynn, Wilson Moore, J. W. Davis were called, and their characters passed.

After announcements, singing of the doxology, the benediction was pronounced by J. L. Wright, and the Conference adjourned.

FOURTH DAY.

Conference met at nine o'clock, and was opened by religious services conducted by J. L. Wright. Bishop Galloway took the chair, and the minutes were read and approved.

The Committee on Conference Relations reported in favor of granting J. O. Bennett a superannuated relation. The report was adopted.

Ques. 20. J. A. Parker, H. W. May, J. W. Medlock, J. D. Harper, R. Parvin, D. C. Barr, R. A. Davis, W. J. Porter, T. H. McClelland, R. S. Collier, B. F. White, C. T. Munholland, C. R. Godfrey, R. S. Isbell, R. P. Howell, N. S. Cornell, R. Harry, G. A. Mandeville were called, and their characters passed.

A. A. Cornett surrendered his credentials and retired from the ministry.

The Committee on Temperance reported through its chairman, J. M. Beard. The report was read and adopted.

Ques. 4 was then taken up, and the name of J. M. Henry called, and he admitted into full connection.

The Board of Education presented its report, which was read and adopted.

The agent of Centenary College, Rev. R. Harry, addressed the Conference in behalf of his institution. Rev. A. D. McVoy, Sr., president of Mansfield Female College, spoke in the interest of his school.

J. E. Harrison, of the Tennessee Conference, made an address to the Conference on the work of Vanderbilt University for the cause of Christian education in the South. Bro. Faunt LeRoy also made a capital speech for Mansfield Female College. This is a very important factor in the Methodist forces in North Louisiana, and should be sustained heartily by all the Methodists in the State.

The Board of Finance, through its chairman, S. S. Keener, made its report, which was read and adopted. The amount collected from all sources was $3,354.60 for widows and orphans, $732.70 for Bishops, and $155.30 for General Conference delegates.

Dr. Walker, chairman of the Committee on Church Publications, made the report for his committee. It was a most interesting document, showing the number of religious newspapers at work for Christ in this country and the great influence they exert for good. Bishop Galloway made a talk of great pertinence and value in regard to our religious papers.

After announcements, the Conference adjourned with doxology and benediction.

EVENING SESSION.

The Conference met at three o'clock, Bishop Galloway in the chair. The devotional exercises were conducted by B. F. White. The minutes of the morning session were read by the secretary and approved by the body.

The report of the corresponding secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference was read by J. L. Pierce.

A resolution, recommending that the educational collection be divided between Centenary College and Mansfield Female College, was offered by S. J. Davies, and after considerable discussion by Bros. Evans, J. A. Parker, Faunt LeRoy, Davies, Parvin and Upton, the resolution was adopted.

The Sunday-school Board reported through its chairman, A. E. Clay, which report was read and received. This report was exceedingly clear and instructive.

The Church Extension Board made its report. There was collected from all sources $1,440.50 for church extension work.

The Board of Colportage reported through F. D. Van Valkenburgh the work done. The work is enlarging gradually and promises much good in the near future. Nothing is more important in church work than the judicious dissemination of a pure and healthy literature. The preacher who works earnestly on this line is doing that which will result in the greatest good to the church.

A resolution, increasing the number of members of the Board of Missions from nine to twelve, was adopted.

Statistics are as follows:

Local preachers, 75; members, 20,628; infants baptized, 876; adults baptized, 418; Sunday-schools, 219; teachers, 1,283; scholars, 10,429; collected for foreign missions, $5,834.30; domestic missions, $1,545.40; churches, 238; value, $405,889; parsonages, 60; value, $68,530; education, $453.45.

The report of the Committee on District Conference Records was read by N. S. Cornell, and adopted.

The Conference resolved to meet next year at Homer, La.

A resolution, requesting our congressmen to resist the repeal of the law requiring the World's Fair to close its gates on Sunday, was adopted unanimously.

The Conference adjourned to meet Monday at 8:45 A. M.

FIFTH DAY.

Conference met at 8:45 A. M., Bishop Galloway in the chair. Religious exercises were conducted by J. A. Parker. The minutes of Saturday afternoon's session were read, approved and adopted.

The Committee on Memoirs, through its chairman, W. H. LaPrade, made its report on Walter Dunstan, who died in New Orleans since the last Annual Conference. After several short addresses the report of the committee was adopted.

Resolutions of thanks to the citizens of Lake Charles for their hospitality were passed by a unanimous rising vote.

A resolution, asking the Bishop to attend the District Conferences and travel through the Conference during the year, was passed.

The minutes of the session were read and approved.

Louisiana Conference Personal.

The preachers look to be in good condition, notwithstanding the hard work and rough times through which they have passed during the year.

We had a delightful home with the family of Prof. Thomson, where, in company with Bro. Harp and Bishop Galloway, we spent the week very pleasantly.

The presiding elder of the Shreveport district reported that eleven churches had been built during the year in that district. That is a splendid chapter in the history of church extension!

The sallies of wit and humor from the chair and occasionally from the body of the Conference greatly relieved the tiresome tedium of routine business. There is nothing equal to an occasional flash.

The old soldiers of the cross as well as the new recruits were encouraged and comforted by the annual reunion, and looked as though they would all go forth to fresh battles, inspired and strengthened by a new baptism of power.

To say that Bishop Galloway pleased the Louisiana preachers is to say too little. He attracted and delighted and captured them. He will be more than welcomed when he comes again. He will be received with open hearts and open arms.

This personal from a daily shows the accuracy of the ordinary reporter when he gets into fields ecclesiastical.
Rev. J. M. Henry was admitted into all connection and was drilled by Bishop Galloway in church discipline, which was a loving and able presentation of Christian points, messages and charges.

The hospitality of Lake Charles was dispensed in royal style to the sons and daughters of Levi. Every preacher looked like he had the best place in town, and he did not hesitate to say so. Bro. Upton has again demonstrated his entire fitness to be the host at an Annual Conference, and we trust he will be placed in that office again.

Bishop Galloway's sermon, Sunday morning, on "The Weakness and Power of the Christian," was as refreshing as a shower upon the thirsty ground. It was helpful to the weak, encouraging to the faltering, hope-inspiring to the doubtful and uplifting to all. It was enjoyed by everyone of a huge multitude of interested and anxious hearers.

Sunday was a high day at the Methodist Church, and the crowd was immense. Bishop Galloway in the morning, Dr. Walker in the afternoon, and Dr. Morrison in the evening discussed the word plentifully to eager listeners. The other churches of the city enjoyed the gospel preached by their ministers. We know the fruit from these sermons will appear in the lives of those who listened so eagerly and bring much honor and praise to the Master.

Dr. Morrison, our Missionary Secretary, addressed the Conference during the session of Friday in a plain, strong statement of facts in regard to the liquidation of our mission debt. He presented five different methods by which the money necessary to raise the amount of indebtedness can be secured, and then called upon the Conference for pledges, the money to be paid in by March 31, 1893. The amount apportioned to Louisiana is $2,561, and in a few minutes $2,562 were pledged. Considering everything, this is a very handsome work for the Louisiana Conference.

Louisiana Conference Notes.

A Methodist Conference can out-sing any other body in the world.

The tenderness of the Bishop's opening prayer subdued all hearts and suffused many eyes.

The visitors to the Conference room seemed to enjoy the proceedings, and were on hand early and lingered till adjournment.

The calling of the roll of superan-nuates and the responses of those who are present always awaken in the hearts of the preachers the deepest sympathy. Those scarred veterans of the Lord's army are held in highest esteem by the rank and file.

Mrs. J. J. Lyons, president of the Louisiana Conference Parsonage and Home Mission Society, made a very neat address in the interests of that department of the work, and the brethren feeling bound to do what they can in helping forward that good cause.

The brother who stood up to pray not only violated the traditions of the Methodist elders, but violated the Conference sense of propriety. We don't want the practice to become general among the preachers, whatever the people may do. The proper attitude for the preacher to assume in prayer is "kneeling upon his knees."

Dr. Cobb, representing Paine and Lane Institute, made a most interesting address on the subject of education of the colored people, and the Conference resolved to raise two hundred dollars to help in the support of Paine and Lane Institute. This is a small amount, and we trust the brethren will raise it early in the year and send it forward at once.

Bishop Galloway's address to the class for admission into full connection was eminently practical, full of the savor of sound sense and wise suggestion. Not only the class, but the whole Conference was interested and instructed, encouraged and warned, electrified and warmed up by the eloquent sentences of the Bishop. If every preacher will follow the Bishop's counsel, Louisiana Methodism will take a new stand.

The addresses on the report of the Board of Education by Robt. Harry, agent for Centenary College, and A. D.
McVoy, president of Mansfield Female College, were interesting in the fact that they brought before the Conference the needs of the State on the subject of Christian education, and what our church is doing to supply these needs. Great needs exist, and the church is not doing what she can, nor what she ought, to reach the needs of the case. Louisiana Methodists ought to wake up on this subject.

Lake Charles is a growing city. It has already attained unto the "first three" outside of New Orleans. There is on every side evidence of thrift and push. It has all the improvements of modern civilization, such as street cars, electric lights, banks, schools, churches and saloons. One of the greatest industries is the lumber trade.
Everybody seems to be in a hurry to do something. There seems to be nothing "poky" about Lake Charles.
There has been no boom, but a healthy growth, which has brought the place to its present enlarged proportions.

The Church Extension Meeting was held Wednesday evening. The house was packed from pulpit to door. Dr.
Morton's address was characteristic of that great leader of the church extension brigade. It was eminently practical, and for that reason very interesting to the audience. He explained in detail the working of the Church Extension Board, and showed that the result of that work during the past year was one church built in every eighteen hours of time. Bishop Galloway followed in a short and eloquent speech, capturing everybody and winding up with a collection which amounted to three hundred dollars!

The Missionary Meeting, Saturday night, was a grand success. Dr. Morrison was "in the vein," and for an hour poured forth glistening, yet solid truth upon a crowded house to the delight of everybody. The Board of Missions had resolved to procure, if possible, a French-speaking missionary for South and Southwest Louisiana, and Dr. Morrison brought the matter before the audience in an intelligent way, and a collection was taken for the missionary's support, which resulted in pledges amounting to nearly six hundred dollars. These pledges are to be collected quarterly and paid over to the treasurer of the Conference Board,
W. B. Thomson, 65 North Rampart
St., New Orleans. This is an important move on the part of our Conference Board, and we trust that every Methodist man and woman in Louisiana will co-operate heartily in this work. The heathens are at our doors, and we must give them the pure gospel of the Son of God or quit our claim to be a church of the Lord Jesus Christ. The movement has the hearty endorsement of all the preachers, and now let the laity of every section of the Conference respond liberally, and the work will move out to a glorious success.

Natchez and the Mississippi Conference.

A matter of business for another party made it possible for me to attend the session of the Mississippi Conference in Natchez, the fair city that stands on a bluff that overlooks the mighty Mississippi and a large part of Louisiana on the other side.

This is the first time I ever attended any other Conference than my own. Natchez is larger by long odds than I had imagined it to be. I had heard of this city all my life. It has been famous, and used to be infamous
"under the hill" for long years.
The "under-the-hill" Natchez,
I understand, has gone up the hill in manners and morals until now it is on a level with the bluff. As long as the tendency is upward let her go.

The Mississippi Conference is large and composed of fine-looking men, nearly as good-looking as the members of the North Mississippi Conference. This is a high compliment, but I charge nothing for it.

The preachers are all well-dressed, and look like they had been well-fed. A few of them are of the "lean kind"—not kine—like your correspondent, and would not show good living if they had enjoyed it. Some men are fat on the inside, and others are fat on the outside, and some fat on all sides. Most of them are young, stout, hale and hearty. A large number of them are middle-aged, growing gray on head and chin, and a few gray on their chins only.
Perhaps this happens to them, as to your scribe, from working their chins more than their heads. A few are bald-headed, made so, perhaps, from hard study or hot hats. There are a few venerable fathers, mighty men of God, who felled the timber, cleared up the land, and opened the garden of the Lord in this territory. The present prosperous conditions, this goodly heritage was made possible by the toil and sweat and blood of these mighty men of God. Oh, how we ought to love them,
honor them and care for them!
Everyone of them is near and dear to the heart of God, and we ought to esteem it an honor and a pleasure to put them on the pension-roll of the church.

I have never before attended the session of an Annual Conference where so few of the wives of the preachers were present. The hard times account for this. Preachers, like other men, generally practice self-denial on their wives. God only knows the self-denial of these good women. I doubt not many of them stayed at home that their husbands might have new suits to wear to Conference. So the preachers are here wearing their wives' dresses made up in pants, coats and vests. Many a wife's winter hat is a slick beaver or a fine derby on her husband's head. Some preachers' stars will sparkle in their wives' crowns in the other world. The women of the Methodist ministry are at the "laboring oar" of the itinerant craft. Some of them never got any recreation or rest only to attend a Conference now and then. To many of them "now and then" never comes.

The conviction grows upon me that we need two Bishops at each Conference—one to confer with the young preachers just outside of the door, and the other to attend to business in the Conference room with the older brethren. The Conference is not a court, but sometimes there is a good deal of courting done at Conference.

They say your correspondent and Dr. John favor, but when we met neither felt highly complimented.

There were more preachers and less preaching at this Conference than any I ever attended.
I speak of quantity, not quality.
One sermon a day is not enough.
Preachers need preaching. Most of them are hungry for it, and, no wonder, considering the fact that they hear so little—even when they hear themselves.
Your correspondent was filled and greatly refreshed by what he heard.

When Tubby, the full-blood Choctaw Indian, up for admission on trial, told the story of his life the glory of the Lord filled the place where we were assembled. It was the old story told by all who have gone from sin to salvation—a state of sin; conviction by the Holy Ghost;
genuine repentance wrought in the heart by the Spirit; faith inspired by the Spirit; regeneration by the Holy Ghost; a conscious experience of pardoned sin and a call from God to preach.

The Mississippi Conference makes better provision for her retired heroes and widows and orphans of dead heroes than any Conference west of Virginia.
Let Dr. Lafferty know this.

The class of eight up for admission into full connection will not soon forget the able, thoughtful, suggestive and spiritual address by Bishop Granbery. It bristled with good points.

Methodist preachers give more like princes than pensioners on the bounty of the church; but why not? They all carry a carte-blanc to draw at will on the inexhaustible treasury of the Lord.

A carpet on the Conference floor and a tongue-depressor in some peoples' mouths would greatly facilitate the pleasure and the business sessions of a Conference. Tramping and talking do not help hearing and speaking. The Bishop found use for the gavel quite frequently.

Each member had the best home, or thought he had. Your correspondent was delightfully entertained at the Jefferson Street Church parsonage. We had ten Partridges at every meal, but dared not eat one of them.
I am always at home in a house full of children. Bro. Partridge has his quiver full of them; but his quiver, like mine, is elastic, and expands to meet emergencies.

Mrs. Granbery was with her husband, and added greatly to the pleasure of his visit. A general superintendent needs superintending, and so it is not good for a Bishop, or any other man, to be alone.

Methodist preachers ought to kneel during prayer, particularly during prayer at Conference.
The spirit and practice of irreverence is growing rapidly among our people. Brother, kneel down on one knee, or, better, on both knees.

Millsaps College has taken deep root in the hearts of Mississippi Methodists. It is already a great tree with wide-spreading branches.

Whitworth Female College is an old love with all the people of the Mississippi Conference.
These institutions are doing a great work for Christ and for the church.

There are many items of great interest in and about Natchez—items of history and biography —that are tempting to a scribe;
but we forbear.

This scribbler met a number of old soldier friends whom he had not seen for twenty-seven years. The years have left their mark on all of them.

These notes are closed on Saturday morning. This visit and this Conference will be a green spot in memory as long as I live.
Here I have made acquaintances and formed friendships that will be taken up and extended forever in the good world.

GILDEROY.

Natchez, Miss., Dec. 17, 1892.

Mississippi Conference Notes.

Jefferson Street Sunday-school subscribed $100 to the support of Mrs.
Lambuth. Good for Jefferson Street
Sunday-school!

Natchez is the oldest town in the State in point of age; but in point of improvements and progressiveness it is one of the newest.

The Conference was much gratified to have a report to the effect that Bro.
J. T. Nicholson was improving. May the Father restore him to us!

Several of our young men ignored the strong resolution of last year in reference to appearing before the Examining Committee, and the Conference practically ignored it, too.

The representative of the ADVOCATE desires to express his high appreciation of the generous hospitality enjoyed in the elegant home of Mr. C. W. H. Patterson during the session of the Conference. Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Vicksburg, also enjoyed this hospitality with him. This will long be remembered.

The memorial volume presented by Mrs. J. W. Lambuth to the Mississippi Conference will be deposited in the library of Millsaps College for preservation. We are glad of this, as Dr.
Lambuth belonged to the Methodist of the State as well as of the Mississippi Conference, and this volume will now be accessible to all.

Dr. John, in explaining the phrase in his report from the Missionary Board, to the effect that less than one hundred preachers out of the four thousand in the Southern Church were agents of our missionary literature, said that less than one hundred preachers have sent in as many as one new subscriber. Is not that enough to put us to thinking? Less than one-fortieth doing anything at all!

The Bishop rendered a very startling (to some), but wise decision on Wednesday, viz.: That a Committee on Examination had no right to examine a young minister in the interval of Conference; that it must be done at the seat of the Conference, and by the whole committee or that portion present. Several young brethren had gone before the committees during the year, and, though they had passed satisfactory examinations, the Bishop refused to recognize it.

Simpson J. Tubby, the Indian who has figured so prominently in the Indian Mission work this year, was admitted into the Conference on trial.
His short talk relating his experience, etc., will not be soon forgotten. A thank-offering was taken up to aid on the work among the Indians amounting to $143 65. Upon a suggestion by Bro.
Weems, $395 was raised to send him to Millsaps College next September.
The matter was then committed to the Ministerial Educational Aid Association of our Conference.

MURPHY—Sister ALICE REBECCA MURPHY, wife of Rev. J. J. Murphy, was born in Choctaw county, Miss., Sept. 18, 1830, and moved to this State with her parents in 1870, settling in Blen-ville parish. On Sept. 17, 1879, she was married to Rev. J. J. Murphy, a local preacher on this circuit. She became a member of the M. E. Church, South, in 1873, of which church she remained a member until called to the church triumphant.

Sister Murphy was confined to her bed for some three months, or more, before her death, and each day found her growing sicker for the kingdom of God. Her death was no surprise to herself or any of her friends. During the greater part of her sickness she said she did not want to die, and, taking the promise of the Master to her comfort—that whoever she asked, believing, it should be granted her—she was strong in the belief that God would spare her life; but as the close drew nigh she bowed her head and acknowledged that God knew best, and longed for home. While talking to her she said that she feared not death; that it was only going home. A long-absent son in a foreign clime could not have longed for home more than she longed for the end of the journey, where she could be at home.

Death was robbed of its sting to her; she feared not his destructive hand, but looked upon it as something to be counted as the means by which her soul would be released from the bondage in the flesh. Near the close she longed to go home, and spoke of heaven as her home, in a manner strengthening to the faith of those that stood around, begging them not to delay death by warm applications, but to let her go as soon as God wanted her. The best of all was, God was with her. She died on Wednesday, Nov. 2, at 3:30 P. M.

JNO. F. FOSTER, P. C.

Arcadia, La.

THOMPSON—Little JOHN, youngest son of Frank and Minnie Thompson, departed this life Oct. 31, 1892. Just at bedtime the angel came and gently waited the sweet spirit of our little darling into eternal rest. God is gathering up his precious jewels. Alas! another little lamb has been gathered to the fold of the Great Shepherd, who has him sheltered from the storms of life. Another home has been made lonely and desolate, for truly little John was the joy and sunshine of that home. Six Summers had he gladdened the hearts of all around him. He was a favorite at school. By his sweet disposition and winning ways he had won the hearts of all who knew him.

His life was short, but was long enough for God's purpose. His ways are past finding out. But a faithful faith bids us see a Father's hand in all afflictions. Then, dear children, cast all your load of grief on Him who says, "My grace is sufficient for you," and "he will sanctify to thee thy deepest distress." Just think: you are the parents of an angel. How comforting!—your precious jewel is "not lost, only gone before." You may be sure that every little life plucked from earth is only transplanted across the "dark river," to burst in the bright fields of paradise. God knows best. He takes our heart-treasures to add them as links to the golden chain he holds to draw our hearts heavenward. The gem can not be polished without friction, nor the heart perfected without adversity. We do not think so when trials and troubles overtake us; but it is nevertheless for our good. Even if we do not realize it at first, we can see the "silver lining" of the cloud in the end. Farewell, darling; memory's casket holds many precious pearls for thee.

GRANDMA.

FURNISS—In Homer, La., Sept. 30, 1892, after a long and painful illness, NINA BEATRICE, youngest child of Samuel M. and Willie H. Furniss, aged one year and three months.

Another link in the golden chain that binds our hearts to heaven, another angel pleading for us at the court on high! But how gloomy is life without thee, precious one! The vacant chair, the desolate home, the breaking hearts, all remind us thou art gone. We know the Father hath need of thee in his house of many mansions, but it is hard to be reconciled to thy going. With thee came sunshine, and with thee it has fled. The home is so dark and gloomy now, so lonely without thy pattering footsteps and sweet childish prattle to break the awful stillness.

But grieve no more, fond parents; though your baby is gone, you have with you Him who said, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

—Little LOUIS was born Aug. 6, 1886, and died this life Oct. 25, 1892.

was a bright little fellow, and for some had shown evidence of his love for the which belong to God. In the Sunday-school he will be missed; but the Master knows, in his wisdom, he has called him home to aid the preacher, and already we miss his light smile and cheering words. His little soulmate followed him to his last earthly home-place, and each in turn placed a flower on his grave. Farewell, little brother; we will meet thee again!

THOMAS B. CLIFFORD.

CAMPBELL.—Mr. NICHOLAS H. CAMPBELL, the son of Peter Campbell and Tabitha Buckhalter, was born in Sumter county, Ga., Oct. 30, 1821, and died in Natchitoches, La., Oct. 22, 1892. In February, 1845, he married Miss Maria Rivers, and moved to Sabine parish, La. In 1859; thence to Natchitoches parish, where he lived, beloved and honored, until called to his reward a few weeks ago. His second wife was Miss Eloya Rivers, whom he married in October, 1875. In early youth he was inclined toward morality, showing a decided preference for the pure and good in life; but not until 1839 did he feel his heart strangely warmed into reconciliation with God, when he connected himself with the M. E. Church, South. The assumption of his church vows was of vital importance to him, and as he grew to maturity the Holy Ghost seemed to seal his church relationships more sacredly upon him; hence, as a private member, he was devout and conscientious; as a steward, he was prayerful and active, representing to the last the work of that kingdom he loved so well. He devoted himself to his agricultural life with unrivaled industry, providing well for his wife and children, for whom he lived with so much self-sacrifice and devotion.

As a citizen, he deserved the respect of every statesman and patriot; pure, unselfish, upright, serious; he bore for his native land a pardonable passion. During his short and painful illness he manifested great patience and resignation, giving lucid proofs of his connection with Christ, for as he would repeat, "There is a land of pure delight." "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you," his face would glow under the radiance of a new spirituality, and everything corroborated the Pauline thought, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

RUTHERFORD—Died, near Jackson, Miss., Oct. 12, 1892, Mrs. CORA RUTHERFORD, wife of Mr. R. K. Rutherford. The deceased was a native of Madison county. Her maiden name was Parsons. She was an estimable woman in all the relations of life; a dutiful daughter, an affectionate wife and mother, and a kind neighbor. At an early age she united with the Presbyterian Church, and was ever afterward true to her vows of discipleship. She had the loftiest reverence for things sacred—God's Word, his house, his ordinances. She especially loved the Sunday-school, and was a diligent, faithful worker therein whenever opportunity offered, though of late she did not enjoy that privilege, living, as she did, remote from church, and having the care of a family of young children. She quailed not in the presence of the grim monster. The same faith which strengthened her to bear life's burdens gave her comfort in the hour of nature's dissolution. Her death was calm and peaceful. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

A FRIEND.

POOL—Bro. R. A. POOL was born in Alabama, Sept. 6, 1826, where he lived to young manhood, when he moved to Huntsville, Miss. He was happily married to Miss Susan Kindred, of Kilmichael, Miss., April 10, 1856, which union was blessed with six children—one son and five daughters—the son having preceded his father to the better land nine years ago. Bro. Pool was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, about ten years ago. He was a faithful member of the church, serving in different positions. He was a good counselor, a tender sympathizer, and will be missed by all. Sorrowing friends and loved ones, look up, and be ready, and as the summons comes, oh, by one go to the happy reunion in the home above.

J. H. SMITH.

Weir, Miss.

BENNETT—MARSHAL GOODALE BENNETT, son of Jas. A. and Jennie A. Bennett, was born Jan. 1, 1870, and died Aug. 1, 1892. He joined the Methodist Church while attending school at Port Gibson. During the funeral services an eminent Episcopal minister, who had lived near his neighborhood and known him from infancy, spoke with much feeling of his love of home and obedience to parents, and expressed the opinion that had the young man lived he would have had much to do in shaping the lives of others. In his last moments he seemed to have the full assurance of a happy immortality, and went away in triumph.

PASTOR.

An Only Daughter Ornded of Consumption. When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Gradcock & Co., 1283 Race Street, Philadelphia, Pa., name on card.

God's purpose in the creation of men was that he might honor him in his body and spirit, and glorify him with his life, that he might enjoy him forever. Anything short of this fails to fill his purpose in man.

We will mail free, on receipt of two cents in stamps, a sample box of Dr. Davis' Liver Pills. They will cure costiveness, biliousness, dyspepsia, indigestion, piles, and all disorders that arise from a diseased liver and impure blood.

NOTES.

The Christian at Work says:

The political campaign is over. But the campaign against Satan and sin is still on. There is no let-up in that campaign.

No wonder Chicago is so great! It is said that the name itself has been spelled 187 different ways. The only that is not great after that would do well to retire!

"Canada does not allow a liquor seller or a saloon keeper to hold a municipal office." Just the reverse of that is what is the matter with many cities in this country. Bravo for Canada!

It is said that Dr. Howard Crosby, when asked once what the difference was between Jacob and Esau, replied, without a moment's hesitation, "Esau saw what he saw, but Israel saw what is real."

Dr. Stalker says: "It might be said that in every man there are four men—the man whom the world sees; the man seen by the person who knows him best; the man seen by himself; the man whom God sees."

The preacher must aim at the conscience, he must set forth the sinfulness and dangers of sin, he must be an awakening preacher, or he will be a failure. Brothers, seek to arouse the conscience, to reach the moral faculty, to move the heart and the will to tenderness and to action, and your ministry will not fall of good results.—Central Christian Advocate.

A colored brother's sermon contained this:

But it ain't no use to trample along that narrow path, less you can carry, folded up in yer creed, a good recommendation from yer creditors. Hehben ain't no place for a man who has to dodge 'round a corner for fear of meetin' some one who'll ask for dat little dat neber was paid.

That sort of preaching would suit some "buckra."

For errors in religious matters commend me to the reporter of the Picayune. In a three-quarter column on Dr. Sawyer and the Louisiana Avenue Church, in a Sunday's issue, there is nothing but error and misrepresentation from beginning to end. An error is inexcusable when the facts are as easily attainable as errors. That reporter is a genius and deserves promotion.

We do not know a great deal about a protective tariff or free trade, but we believe there is a point in our economy where these two should exchange places. For many years we have been importing, free of duty, a very objectionable class of people from Europe—the very class of people Europe is anxious to get rid of. If we would put a "high protective tariff" on that class of imports, it would be a good thing, and we believe that all right-thinking people will say amen to protection of that sort. The Democrats have now a great opportunity. Will they use it?

A great revolution is going on in the theological world. Calvinists are in Arminian pulpits. Arminians are in Calvinist pulpits. Universalists are in orthodox pulpits—lots of them, and some of them on the orthodox platform, too. Pastors cross from one denomination to another without the slightest regard to forms of church government, and as if no abyss of either doctrine or beliefing is claimed by ever growing numbers, and yet the retrogression of doctrinal lines is also going on at the same time and threatening disruption of the churches. To the extreme conservative the future looks black, to the radical advocate of new views it looks bright. We believe that God will override all things for the advancement of his kingdom.—Christian at Work.

The census of 1890 shows 141 different denominations, besides about 150 congregations unclassified. The 141 denominations may be properly classified in about 40 denominational families, as the Baptist family including 12 different denominations; Presbyterian, 12, and Methodist, 17. The Roman Catholics are largest in number of communicants, comprising one-fourth to one-third of the total church communicants, and have also the largest obituary property. The Methodists are second in numbers—one-fifth to one-fourth—and in church property. The Baptists are third, and Presbyterians fourth. About five millions of the people profess to be non-religious—to have no religious faith. All others call themselves Roman Catholic, Protestant, etc. Of denominational growth the Episcopal Church during the last decade showed an increase of 48 per cent.; Lutherans, 68; Congregationalists, 28; Baptists, 28; Methodist Episcopal, 30; M. E. Church, South, 47; all Protestant Churches, 43 per cent.; Roman Catholic, 29 per cent.

The consistency of Christians is rightly regarded as a test of their sincerity and of their life. But mere consistency is only a test, and not an attainment. The attainment is in the spiritual life, and not in the consistence. To be consistent for consistency's sake is in itself inconsistent with the believer's profession, because it raises another standard than Christ himself. The Christian must be honest and true, not because it is inconsistent with his profession to be dishonest and false, but because to be dishonest and false is right as measured by God's standard. We must practice, not because we profess, nor profess because we practice, but we must both practice and profess because we must follow the Master. This puts Christ above consistency, and is, in fact, the only principle that will stand the test of consistency.—Sunday-School Times.

The difficulty of making the several departments of obituary work succeed in many of our obituary leads to these suggestions: Let the preacher in charge select a member of his station or circuit that takes the most interest in the Sunday-school, the Epworth League, the missionary cause, the obituary extension, paragonage work, the circulation of the ADVOCATE, and other religious literature, induce this person to make said subject the particular matter of prayer, thought and reading the ensuing year. Suppose five or six persons could be induced to do this in each charge in a district; the presiding elder could ascertain who was the best posted in these respective lines of work, and he might request such persons to prepare papers to be read at the next District Conference; or the presiding elder might induce several persons to come to the Conference prepared to intelligently discuss special subjects pertaining to each department of our work. By separating the subjects, and inducing those most conversant with a special part to study same, difficulties would be met and overcome and progress would be made that would encourage both preacher and people to continue the effort.

The most important question of the day is not "creed revision," nor "biblical interpretation," nor bow to "roast beretics." The chief question is, how to save erring, fallen humanity by methods that are practical, and in the quickest possible time. Oh! the errors men and women in the obituary are guilty of who do not enter heartily upon the great work which engaged the life of the Son of God! The Christian at Work well says:

The Christian Church has failed to reach the masses as it should have reached them, simply because many of its representatives have been feeding the people on the dry bones of theology when they should have given them the living bread of life. There has been too much preaching in the air. There has been too much damnation and too little love; too much insistance upon form and ceremonial and too little upon practical every-day piety. The church will succeed in reaching the masses just so far as it adjusts itself in its forms and methods to the usages, needs, and circumstances of the masses. It can not reach and draw them in by sermons on the fall of Adam, or by insisting on conformity to medieval usages and ceremonies. It must catch the spirit and breathe the atmosphere of this present every-day world. It must bring itself into actual and vital relations with men and things as they now exist. It must demonstrate, so far as it can, by open, visible, and tangible means that Christianity is not a thing of abstractions, a matter that concerns chiefly another life somewhere beyond this, but that it is intended to help men now and here, to make them stronger and happier, and the world all around for everyone a purer, sweeter, and better place to tarry even for a while.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. E. Thomas, Oxford, Miss., Dec. 18: "I commenced a meeting in Oxford last Sunday, and have been assisted by Rev. George S. Inge and Dr. J. W. Price. The interest has steadily increased from the first service, and souls are being converted every day. I have never seen a better prospect for a sweeping revival."

Rev. Heslep R. Tucker, Houston and Wesley, North Mississippi Conference, Dec. 18: "Our reception by the kind people of Houston has been more than we could ask or deserve. On last Monday night we had a substantial expression of their love and good-will. The paragonage was filled to overflowing with friends, many of whom were children, and as they came each one brought something useful, and so when they had gone we had in the home the barrel of flour, and from that down articles, hot dry goods and groceries, too numerous to mention. We feel unworthy of such kindness. We place a much higher appreciation upon these things than their mere intrinsic worth. Thus encouraged, we enter upon our fourth year here, determined, by the grace of God, to render, if possible, service commensurate with such kindness. May God bless these people and this charge, and give to us the most prosperous year of our pastorate here!"

At a meeting of the Board of Trade and Transportation, in New York City, resolutions were adopted urging upon Congress the enactment of such further laws as will the more effectually exclude undesirable immigration, such as paupers, criminals and imbeciles.

Detectors, on Dec. 15, unearthed a gigantic lottery fraud in Chicago, a concern that for a long time has been turning out thousands of bogus tickets of the Louisiana Lottery and others for lotteries which do not exist. It is estimated by the Louisiana people that over 5,000 bogus tickets have been turned out by the concern, and all have been sold at full price.

A strong concerted movement has been started by the Chinese of the United States to resist the Chinese exclusion act. Three different plans of resistance have been decided upon. The constitutionality of the act will be tested. Then the Oriental Club of New York will try to arouse public sympathy through mass meetings and Congress will be flooded with petitions demanding a repeal of the law. A poll tax of $1 per head will be levied on every Chinaman in the United States to defray the expenses. This will mean a fund of over $100,000. Finally the Chinese government will protest, and, failing, retaliation will follow.

The first sod of the proposed road-bed of the Califa and Damascus railroad was cut last week. The railroad will skirt Mount Carmel, Plains of Esdraelon, pass through the Valley of Nazareth, cross the river Jordan, south of the Lake of Tiberias, and pass thence over the Hadoran Plains to Damascus.

The American delegates to the International Monetary Conference, held in Brussels, are booked to leave Southampton for New York on Dec. 22. The London Times, referring to the conference, says: "The American delegates must be held largely responsible for the ignominious failure of the conference. America called the meeting, as if prepared with a practical scheme, and then offered only vague platitudes."

The Russian Senate has promulgated a law requiring that the Jewish artisans shall only reside in places where official Boards of Trade exist, the pretense being that the Jews can thus be kept more effectively under official regulation and supervision. Official Boards of Trade exist only in about 10 per cent. of the towns in Russia, and the decree, therefore, means a vast addition to the misery and oppression under which Russian Jews already labor.

NOTICE.

Let every Methodist and friend to Methodism in the Sardis district, North Mississippi Conference, give something during Christmas holidays toward paying off the missionary debt. Make a "Christmas present" or "New Year's gift" to God's cause. Do without something in order to spare in spreading the gospel of Jesus. Be liberal in aiding as quickly as possible in raising four hundred dollars in liquidating a just debt. Also observe the week of prayer for this worthy purpose. God help everyone to do his best. Lank in Seeds.

"I didn't have very good luck with my seeds last year," a farmer was heard to say. This gives rise to the question: How many poor crops can be attributed to "luck" in the selection of seeds? Buying seeds is an important factor in farming and should receive the careful judgment and consideration of the farmer. It is almost always impossible to distinguish the good from the bad in seeds by sight, and the only infallible guide for the planter is the reliability of the seedsmen. D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Mich., have for many years been the leading seed house of this country, and their reliability is unquestioned. They issue a book annually which contains a complete digest of the very latest gardening knowledge by the best authorities. The 1893 edition is handsomely illustrated and contains information about the selection and planting of seeds which will prove of the greatest value to every one planting a garden or farm. It is mailed free to anyone making application to the firm's address.

Historied Methodism.

BY REV. E. H. PEARCE, D. D., Educational Secretary of Kentucky Conference.

Away up here in Central Kentucky your ADVOCATE was opened to read, with interest and refreshment, the congregational histories of Mississippi Methodism; of Meridian, Jackson, Natchez, Woodville, Canton and Baton Rouge. Bros. Brown, Lewis, Featherston, Holloman and Newsom, in your issue of the fifteenth, have done work that deserves gratitude.

Our people should have more, learn more, know more of historied Methodism. Our ministry in their individuality are quickened by it. Its remembrance, its inspiration has been a transcendent nerve of ministerial consecration and courage. Not a decade of the world's annals, since Methodism was born, but what has received enduring record of leadership and memorial that might be for inspiration for generations that follow. In broadest sense, history is the foundation of all learning. Just as the physician places the stethoscope to the breast to carefully note health or disease in the heartbeat of the patient, so we place history against the heart of the world, in all ages and for all conditions, to mark its welfare or its woe.

Hear Goethe: "That which history can give us, best is the enthusiasm which it raises in our hearts." Dryden: "It is the most pleasant school of wisdom." Lamartine: "Providence conceals himself in the details of human affairs, but becomes unveiled in the generalities of history." Cicero: "If no use is made of the labors of past ages, the world must always remain in the infancy of knowledge." Macaulay: "Historians rarely descend to those details from which alone the real state of a community can be collected. Posterity is too often deceived by the vague hyperboles of poets and rhetoricians, who mistake the splendor of a court for the happiness of a people." Bancroft: "It is when the hour of conflict is over that history comes to a right understanding of the strife, and is ready to exclaim, 'Lo, God is here, and we knew it not!'" Cervantes: "History is a kind of sacred writing, because truth is essential to it, and where truth is, there God himself is, so far as truth is concerned. The historian should be precise, truthful, unprejudiced. Neither interest nor fear, hatred or affection, should cause him to swerve from the path of truth, whose mother is history, the rival of time, the depository of great actions, the witness of what is past, the example and instruction to the present, and the monitor to the future."

Two Methodist congregations slowly smoldering to spiritual ashes in the blue grass fatness of Kentucky. Two mouldy, antiquated buildings inclosed them with cracked walls and mossy roof. A new pastor came first to one and successively to the other. In the dilapidated temple of the King, with the elegant homes of his subjects surrounding, his soul kindled with the reproach of the situation. Appeal after appeal was answered with petulant prophecies of discouragement, muffled mutterings of doubt, or bold questionings as to success for aught better. Months passed in both fields, in the pastor's lone-hearted endeavor. Like Samhallat, Tobiah and Geshem, with Nehemiah, other denominational environment "laughed him to scorn." A few faithful followers came up out of the Bahel valley of derision and doubt, and stood by the pastor's side. At last, "with patient vigil strong," delving here and there in different States, in family chronology, in church biography, in broken links of ministerial annals, through dusty recesses of forgotten records, the pastor unearthed the history of a hundred years, until he came to the fountain-spot of the organization of each society. Moral and physical heroism of the pioneer came to view; thrilling episodes of spiritual battle and victory lighted up the hitherto unexplored darkness as with the flash of holy signal fires. From them, the pastor's torch was again kindled; by them he once more furnished the sword of the word and prayed afresh, and then into the field he went at the enemy. Hard hearts softened, rusty hinges of avarice gave way, cowering forms of dependency heard the recital of the heritage and the most in the past; of the present, with its hour of reocancy; of the future, and its epitaph of possible shame and dishonor for the kingdom and its trust. The ranks of dependency transformed into a phalanx of ready soldiery; out of weakness came strength; out of ashes came beauty; from the spirit of heaviness came the garment of praise and gladness.

On the great iron highway to-day from New Orleans to Cincinnati, via Chattanooga, suddenly the defiles of the Kentucky mountains on the southern border of the State open into the broad campaign of the famous grass country. The first two parish or county capitals from the mountain barrier—beautiful for situation; Isles of pearl in an emerald sea—contain today, as the up-go of the past six or seven years, two beautiful, capacious churches of stone, brick, slate, iron and steel, with auditorium, lecture, Epworth room, class rooms, pastor's office, and all modern appointments of the King's material. The stranger has them pointed out to him as the ornament and heat of the city. Their Sunday-schools are the largest, their auditoriums have an audience, and they are occupied by a people called Methodists. They are the product of the blessing of God co-ordinate with the consecrated uses of a hundred years of history.

Dr. Hunnicutt on Public Education.

Now that the people of Louisiana are being aroused on the subject of education, it is to be regretted that the president of a college can see in the system proposed a means that will defeat its own end. Dr. Hunnicutt expresses his apprehension in this way:

The general destruction of the anti-war plan of education and the establishment of a public-school system have given a great setback to the cause of education, resulting in some advantages to the negro, but in greater disadvantages to the whites.

The ante-bellum plan of education here commended consisted mainly of governesses in the families of our rich planters, and of colleges situated north of Mason and Dixon's line, or near it on the south side. The Civil War swept this system away, because it swept away the wealth of those who supported it. One of its lamentable results to-day is a lack of school-houses. Towns of from 500 to 1,500 inhabitants can be found scattered all over this State, for the education of whose youth there is not the simplest structure.

True, the number of students enrolled at Centenary College up to 1881 was much larger than it has been since, but the cause of this difference is not the destruction of the ante-bellum plan of education. It is the decay of those great estates whose owners and managers had the means of keeping their sons in college. Looking over an old register of the Franklin Society while a student at Centenary, the writer noted a number of names once proudly associated with valuable properties in lands and slaves, whose owners are now sunk to poverty, their lands owned by others, and fit haunts only for rats, hares, and wild fowl.

Just how the public-school system has resulted in advantage to the negroes and disadvantage to the white people, Dr. Hunnicutt does not explain, though he makes that assertion in the face of thousands of intelligent men who are laboring hard to perfect and extend it. Living, as the two races do, under the influence of the same institutions, it would be remarkable, indeed, if the white people, who receive most of the public school fund, should be injured by it, while the negroes, who receive the least, should be benefited. This statement is in conflict alike with reason and fact. Over ninety-three per cent. of Southern youth who obtain any education at all, get it in the public schools, if full credit be given to the statistics compiled by the Commissioner of Education.

But Dr. Hunnicutt uses another argument in the same article that does not accord well with the quotation already made. It is this:

A young man could not afford either the time or means to spend two years in the preparatory department and four more in the college in order to graduate. Hence many, in view of the requirements of the case, becoming discouraged, left, after a year or two, without doing justice to themselves or honor to the college. Had those youths enjoyed the advantages of good preparatory schools near their homes, many of them would have graduated in Centenary College.

The public schools, condemned by Dr. Hunnicutt, will supply the elementary instruction, the lack of which he here complains of. That private institutions can not be relied on to provide it is abundantly proven by its failure to do so up to this time, and by the necessity, everywhere felt, of improving the public schools. If there is any conflict between them and the colleges, the interest of the few must yield to that of the many—the public schools must triumph. But this is not necessary. In the North Atlantic States, where the public-school system is best, more than seventy-one per cent. of the college students are in private institutions. In these States thirty-eight cents per capita of population is expended for superior private instruction, and only six cents per capita for superior public instruction. In the South Central States ten cents per capita of population is expended for superior private instruction, and five cents per capita for superior public instruction. In other words, those States that have the best public schools have also the best private colleges.

G. D. PICKELS.

Nashville Notes.

During the month of November our city was specially favored in having a series of protracted services in three of the leading churches. The meeting in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church was conducted by the Rev. R. G. Pearson, D. D., a most distinguished evangelist of that denomination. Your correspondent was fortunate enough to hear him twice. His preaching may be briefly characterized as eminently biblical. His great argument in proving his point is, "Now to the Law and the Testimony." He has the rare faculty of getting his sermon as well as his text from the Book itself.

The services at the Emmanuel Baptist Church were under the leadership of Carter Helm Jones, of Knoxville, Tenn. Mr. Jones is quite a young man, scarcely thirty, I should suppose, yet one of the most popular and prominent young preachers among the Southern Baptists. His sermon was a delight; manner dignified, yet by no means cold and lifeless; his language refined, without being strained; his thought deep, but perfectly clear and sympathetically and winningly expressed.

Good as were the meetings conducted by these brethren, we Methodists still believe that it is in our economy that the ideal revival of religion is most nearly approximated. So let us note briefly the services conducted at McKendree by Rev. H. C. Morrison, of the Kentucky Methodist. For three weeks this noted evangelist preached plainly, powerfully and pleadingly with that congregation. The pastor, Dr. Steele, and a noble band of consecrated members had prayed fervently for an old-fashioned revival to come upon their church. So strong was their desire that they were even willing to return to the old-fashioned methods. Prayer and fasting, deep study of God's word, full and free consecration—these were the levers of apostolic days and those our fathers used. They have not yet lost their efficacy, as the results at McKendree will show. Again, there is a certain kind of preaching which alone will do in a revival. Here of all places the trumpet must give no uncertain sound. A spiritual awakening can be put to sleep no sounder than by running out on some dead issue in theology or making the atmosphere hazy by expounding some of the finely constructed theories of the "higher critics." The Bible has stood enough assaults to warrant us in taking some things for granted. Bro. Morrison, in his preaching, seemed to have this point in view. He recognized that so strong is the hold of sin on the unregenerate heart that no motive less than a hell to shun and a heaven to win can move it. Hence his two basal propositions were: Men are lost and bound for eternal woe; Christ is able and willing to save and fit them for endless happiness. Salvation for sinners and sanctification for believers was the burden of his message. Under the influence of the Holy Spirit, it had its effect. About twenty-five sound conversions were reported, and the church, as a whole, spiritually quickened in a way that far exceeds anything in her history for years past. The "mother church" of Southern Methodism starts out in fine shape for a good year's work. The impetus of this meeting ought to carry her forward with increasing acceleration.

While rejoicing over the accession of souls into the militant body, McKendree was called upon to mourn one departure to the triumphant hosts. On Sunday morning, the eleventh, the funeral service of Mrs. Hume was held. This estimable Christian lady will be recognized by her maiden name, Miss Emma Johnson, almost throughout the entire connection as the leader of the McKendree choir. This post she had filled for the past six or seven years up to the time of her death. During that time she fixed the standard for sacred singing in Nashville. Behind a voice clear and sweet by nature was a character pure and gentle by grace; so that the words came not from her lips alone, but from her heart as well. More than one instance can her pastor give of a soul's being brought to the light by the gospel as sung by Mrs. Hume. McKendree's singers have lost their leader, but the choir above has welcomed her, and heaven has given us too much for us to begrudge a return even so great as this.

The Salvation Army is intrenching itself in our midst. On the evening of the eleventh they captured the stronghold of Southern Methodism, and gave a reception to the adjutant general of the Southern division. He goes by the familiar name of Smith; yet, from what I have seen of him, I venture to remark that he's not quite so ordinary as his name is. His address on the occasion had the right ring. He spoke fluently, eloquently and earnestly about the establishment of the work in our Southland. Some of his experiences sounded like a chapter in the life of St. Paul. Especially when he told of being "seven times in prison" for preaching the gospel, did the scenes of far-off days revert to the memory. The Salvation Army is having the experiences of the apostles and early Methodists, and, like them, is thriving. The churches, to a large extent, are standing afar off criticizing and, at the same time, petrifying. "The poor have the gospel preached to them" is the distinguishing feature of Christ's kingdom, and whatever sect has followed this as its slogan, has gone to victory. This is the war-cry of the Salvationists. They seek to preach the gospel in all its phases to ward men. The gospel of cleanliness, the gospel of health, the gospel of sanitation, the gospel of good teneaments, the gospel of social reform, the gospel of love to the poor and down-trodden, the gospel of the forgiveness of sins, the gospel of peace with God, the gospel of humanity, the gospel of James, the gospel of Paul, the gospel of Jesus—in fine, on whatever line they come across any "good news," they hasten with speed to hear it to the needy.

Quite a pleasant and hopeful thing happened toward the close of the meeting held in McKendree. At the end of Mr. Smith's address Dr. Steele rose to reply, and, in the course of his remarks, said that he was a member of the Salvation Army except as to the uniform, and sometimes he was even tempted to don that. Hereupon one of the "laddies" sitting on the platform doffed in a twinkling his jacket, and handed it laughingly to the speaker. The Doctor was for a moment quite abashed, but immediately recovered himself and threw the soldier's coat over his shoulders. This act meant more than a passing compliment born of a momentary enthusiasm. Dr. Steele's earnest street-preaching has shown him to be heartily in co-operation with anything that tends to bring the church any nearer to the solution of the great question, "How to reach the masses."

The purpose of the Army is to fix on some centrally located place, and there begin operations. A liberal sum was raised for them to expend in this way. They make the very reasonable promise that, seeing this work must be done, if those who are not willing to undertake it will supply the means, they will attempt to do it as best they may.

If I am so fortunate as to get space for this note, in my next I hope to give you some thoughts on the workings of the Epworth League among our Nashville young folks.

Programme for Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

JANUARY 2-8, 1893.

The following is a copy of the programme which the Board of Missions instructed the Secretaries to prepare for the Week of Prayer and Self-denial.

The programme provides for special services each day, suggesting topics for discussion. Responsive exercises, containing a large amount of information, have been arranged in pamphlet-form, and will be furnished free upon application.

Flexibility of outline and adaptation to local conditions being thought most desirable, no part of the programme is insisted upon, save that which provides for stated meetings for special prayer for missions during the whole week, to be accompanied each day by special offerings for the payment of the debt.

Let us pay the debt in one united effort, and, making the Week of Prayer the culminating feature of the movement, pray for a great missionary revival throughout our borders.

L. G. JOHN, Cor. Sec.,
H. C. MORRISON, Sec.,
W. R. LAMBUTH, Sec.,
Board of Miss., M. E. Church, South.

3. Offerings by the children.

NIGHT SERVICE.

The duty of the church to give for the support of missions.

The Greenville District.

Perhaps no territory in the bounds of our church has been so completely occupied by Methodist preachers, to almost the exclusion of ministers of other denominations as this.

For more than thirty years the itinerant and the devil have been contending for the possession of this rich country, known as the Yazoo and Mississippi Delta.

Of late years the Presbyterians and Baptists have been coming in and gathering up their stray sheep, and in some instances have won some from the enemy's ranks. The fact is, in some of our unoccupied places, they have outstripped us in work. To God be all the glory. If our lamps do not shine, God has other lamps. In the past, when the field was in some respects as difficult as that of Japan, we alone gave the people the gospel. Since the railroads have bridged swamps and bayous, others have heard the Master's call. We rejoice that they are answering (?). In some instances, the railroads have changed the centers of population, but we have been here watching, and have put our churches on wheels and rolled them to the people. We are not yet wedded to graveyards; for, strange to say, we have but few.

Many noble men have served in this district. To hear the old settlers tell of how those itinerants rode through one-track swamps, bayous, and suffered from swamp fevers; how they organized the handful of settlers here and there; how they bore up under disappointments that few of us know (the older preachers can read between the lines here and recall the overflows and epidemics), sounds like the thrilling incidents related by Bishop McTear, of Tobias Gibson, Nolley, and like heroes. T. J. Taylor, Charley Owen, in the prime of their manhood, fell on this field, and others dear to the church. Their charges that have been left us become more precious as we remember how they lived and wrought for the Master.

To Rev. J. W. Honnoll, presiding elder of this district for four years, perhaps, is due more than any other man the credit of organizing the different charges, so as to hold them together. To Bro. Standeford is largely due the great material development during the last four years. Under his administration we built seven churches after plans furnished by our Board of Church Extension. These are valued at $12,000. Besides this, as much money has been secured by notes to rebuild other churches. We have built and furnished six new parsonages valued at $6,000. All the others have been repaired and had many additions to their furniture. People are not apt to build so much and so well without great spiritual growth.

We rejoice to say that the gospel of our God is not preached in vain; our predecessors sowed in tears and we are reaping in joy. I would say, parenthetically, we have much weeping yet to do, as well as preaching. But few men are dearer to the people than Bro. Standeford. There are little children even all over this Delta who remember him in their prayers.

We believe the Bishop has given us the man we need in the person of John A. Randolph, bold, aggressive, consecrated. If he does not make the very best presiding elder in the Conference, we are deceived in the making of the man. Big positions develop big men, if the right kind of stuff is in them. By the grace of God, under our presiding elder's leadership, and under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, we expect this great country, rich in material wealth, to feel the mighty sanctifying power of the gospel of Jesus Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith and measure up to the stature of the fullness of our Lord Jesus Christ. Oh, for a baptism of power on preachers and people!

R. H. B. GLADNEY.

Bolivar, Miss.

Notice.

At a meeting of the Joint Board of Finance of the Mississippi Conference, held after adjournment, the following officers were elected to serve for the year 1893: Rev. J. W. Chambers, chairman; W. A. Gunning, secretary; Wm. Thornton, Treasurer. They are the Executive Committee of the Board.

THE OLD YEAR'S BLESSING.

BY ADELIAIDE A. PROCTOR.

I am fading from you, but one draweth near Called the Angel-guardian of the coming year.
If my gifts and graces coldly you forget,
Let the New Year's Angel bless and crown them yet.

For we work together; he and I are one;
Let him end and perfect all I leave undone.
I brought Good Desires, though as yet but seeds;

Let the New Year make them blossom into Deeds.

I brought Joy to brighten many happy days;
Let the New Year's Angel turn it into Praise.
If I gave you Sickness, if I brought you Care,
Let him make one Patience and the other Prayer.

Where I brought you Sorrow, through his care at length
It may rise triumphant into future Strength.
If I brought you Plenty, all wealth's bounteous charms,

shall not the New Angel turn them into Alms?
I gave Health and Leisure, Skill to dream and plan;
Let him make them nobler—work for God and man.

If I broke your Idols, showed you they were dust,
Let him turn the Knowledge into heavenly Trust.

If I brought Temptation, let Sin die away into boundless Pity for all hearts that stray.
If your list of Errors dark and long appears, Let this new-born Moorah melt them into Tears.

May you hold this Angel dearer than the last—
So I bless his Future, while he crowns my Past.

Letter from Oregon.

MR. EDITOR: THE ADVOCATE, OF Dec. 1, reached us to-day just as we were at dinner. I read to Mrs. Futrell and Mary Lee almost the whole paper before we arose from the table. How we enjoyed these biographical sketches! Bro. Brooks still goes in and out among the brethren. What pleasant memories are recalled in thinking of him! Mrs. Futrell says we just must try to plan a visit to Mississippi, so as to attend the Annual Conference.

To me "Gilderoy's" "Some Other Ministers" was refreshing. I, too, will never forget Bro. Davis, the blind preacher. And Nathan Sullivan—what a lovely character! Much of that part of my life that was spent in Tennessee was within the hallowed influence of this good man. So, also, of M. J. Blackwell and C. J. Mauldin. It seemed I could scarcely go anywhere but the influence of some one or more of these men was felt.

I was glad he made mention of my second presiding elder, A. B. Fly. I feel I owe much to his teaching and training. E. C. Slater was my first. He was a great help to me, and I would be a better preacher had I followed his instructions closer, especially in reference to writing sermons. As we read of the growth of the North Mississippi Conference, we could but feel a glow of satisfaction that we had a share in that growth.

The organization of the Conference at Water Valley was the close of my second year in the ministry. I had attended the Memphis Conference at Brownsville, and, though I had done as in my first year—brought up two years' course of study—on account of the change in the course I feared to stand an examination. But at Water Valley the Bishop told me if I desired to, to try. I did so, and was ordained elder by Bishop Doggett. The growth of the church has certainly been a gratifying one—nearly 1,000 per annum.

Of course, we were particularly interested in the history of Starkville, as it was (she says) the home of Mrs. Futrell. Here was my first station. Here my shattered health was restored. Here, too, though inexperienced, was quite a successful pastorate. My first year I took in fifty-seven members as a result of a meeting held almost alone, so far as ministerial help was concerned. I preached all but seven sermons in a meeting which lasted three weeks—two services per day. Here it was I found the best wife in the land, and one who has proven an invaluable help, worthy of more honor than I have been able to bring to her.

It was very gratifying, at the close of my second year, to be told by my presiding elder (A. C. Allen) that there was but one dissenting voice to my return.

We were much interested, too, in Greenville. It was a dark and gloomy time in December, 1878, when we reached there. The yellow fever had almost ruined our church. Of the forty-two members remaining, nineteen were widows. They, however, met the pastor and his wife, and said they would do what they could. By adopting a systematic plan of work, it was wonderful how well they did. Our income was ample—much better than they had ever been able to do before. And the beauty of it is, they have continued to grow ever since, until now it is a strong church. We can join Bro. Stander in saying a more consecrated, devoted people we never we were also interested to see the wonderful growth of Corinth. When we went there in November, 1876, the Board of Stewards just asserted it was an impossibility to support us; that they did not pay the preacher's board the year before, and were no stronger now than then. We persuaded them to adopt our financial system, and they paid $700 instead of $300, as before, and have, I believe, kept up in this neighborhood ever since. How delighted we both would have been to meet and commune with these good people again! Here Mrs. Futrell attended her first Conference.

But if I write much more, brethren will say, "They are homesick." In some things it is true. But the Bishop says we are needed worst here, and so we stay.

I still say this is the finest climate I ever saw; and where we now are is very much like the Yazoo Delta, with mountains in view on nearly every side, no view could be prettier. My congregations here are about 300 in the morning; not so many at night. They come from five or six miles around. We desire to ask all our old friends to pray for our success with this people this year.

The Preacher and the Press.

BY REV. J. W. HARMON.

Powerful agencies are at work, commanding the thought and arresting the attention of the world. In this age, however, regarded as the most enlightened and learned, two of its distinguishing characteristics center in the Preacher and the Press, so far as intellect, morals and religion are concerned.

The preacher may be ever so eloquent and brilliant in thought and in action; he may be persuasive and impressive, arousing intense emotion, but it flashes only for the hour and then disappears.

But the type-battery, traveling in the greatness of its power, gives out in unimpassioned language truths that become imperishable, and generations, as they come and go, are affected and influenced by them.

The preacher generally speaks within four walls; and to a limited number; but the type-battery, thundering through the power of the press, has reading or listening millions responding approval or disapproval.

The arguments of the preacher in the pulpit or the orator at the bar follow each other in quick succession, sometimes losing all their influence by inattention or by some slight interruption, and at best grow dim, unless some unique illustration or brilliant sentence fixes it in the memory.

The preacher may exhibit great eloquence and roll out his vehement and eloquent sentences to live only for a few days; but the impressive page of the type-battery is subject to no excitement, never exhibits timidity, never stoops to apologize, but continues its bold and unabashed statements, fixing its truths or errors in the memory.

The passion and posturing attitudes of the preacher may arouse an audience to a high pitch of excitement, but they soon die out amid the cares and friction of life; but the calm and cool utterances of the types electrify a continent, and its great thoughts, like crested billows, roll over the world.

The preacher in his most brilliant flights of truth or imagination may be compared to the lightning's flash that blinds only to leave us in darkness or uncertainty. (We had a preacher once in the Mississippi Conference who so dared the expert reporter that his pen fell from his fingers, and there was a failure to chronicle so eloquent a sermon.) But the type-battery is more like the sun, shedding its steady rays over the world of minds and hearts.

The pulpit and press—oh, wonderful power!—they have subverted thrones, changed the faces of nations, dethroned the world's most noxious rulers, erecting a kingdom and throne of their own, and from this royal seat of power are issuing doctrines and edicts which will govern the world.

They are the great telephonic trumpets of the world through which the living, spiritual words of the preacher are thundered into the ears of mankind and roll down the ages.

Wonderful combination of power! the pulpit and type-battery; and when sanctified by the power of the Holy Spirit they are truly the batteries of the eternal God wielding a mighty and majestic power among the transient dwellers of this world, and governments will do well to heed the lessons they give.

But a cringing pulpit to wealth or power; an apologetic pulpit; a pulpit destitute of spiritual power—and such a pulpit in combination with a degraded, lying, slanderous press—a press seeking gain and selfish ends, through the cries of childhood, and the groans of women and men of the liquor blood-money, ought to be gibbeted higher than Haman, amid the blistering hisses and burning scorn of all true people and right-thinking nations.

Sanctified pulpit and press, I pay thee courtly honors, and do homage to thy power.

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: May I ask the privilege of using the columns of your paper for the purpose of sending a message to the many friends throughout Mississippi who are interested in work for the Master in this distant land?

During my stay at home I found there were many persons in our church truly interested in mission work, and it pleased me to see how eager some of them were for tidings from the different mission fields.

Desiring that those whose hearts go out in loving prayer and sympathy for those who have gone to far-off heathen lands as witnesses for Jesus should know more of the work as it really is, I write this letter.

First of all, I should like to testify how faithfully God's promises were redeemed to our little band of missionaries as we were journeying hither.

Our party of eight, representing seven different States, met at St. Louis on Saturday, Sept. 10. After spending Sunday at that place, we started on the long overland journey, to San Francisco. I will not occupy space with an account of that journey which occupied four days, but will simply note the fact that our heavenly Father had prepared unexpected blessings all the way. The railroad officials did all that could have been asked to make the trip pleasant. Some one was waiting to meet us at every point where it was necessary to make any change of trains. Nothing was left undone which seemed in any way necessary for our comfort and welfare.

At Oakland, where we left the train, an agent of the Union Pacific railroad was on hand to meet us and attend us on the ferry-boat as we crossed the bay. When we landed at San Francisco, he did all that was necessary towards completing arrangements for our voyage, and saw us safely aboard our steamer, which sailed for China on Saturday, Sept. 17.

We can not soon forget how our loving Father's blessing attended us on all that voyage of seventeen days. To all but one of us this coming away from home and country was an untried experience, but each one was strengthened "with might in the inner man." We realized that it was God's own hand which led us forth, and were willing to trust him for all that the future might hold for us. However, as we stood on the deck of the City of Peking, and saw the shores of our native land grow faint and indistinct in the distance, and, finally, watched them fade from sight altogether, to, at least, one of us emotions were aroused which the pen will not describe. Only the love of God can sustain one in an experience like that.

I think I realized more fully than I did when I first came out to China what a vast expanse of water was to stretch between me and those on earth who were most beloved. This consciousness, however, caused no shrinking back. I was able to look forward with unquestioning faith to the future, believing that it was God's own hand which was directing me back to China.

On the steamer, as on the overland trip, unexpected blessings awaited us. We were pleased to find that we were not the only missionaries aboard the vessel. A party of nine Presbyterians en route to Japan, Korea and China contributed largely to our pleasure on the trip. As there were only seven cabin passengers besides the two parties of missionaries, we had exceptional privileges. We could have religious services at any hour we wished, and it gave us pleasure to have some of the ship's officers present at more than one of the meetings. We trust that good seed were sown on this voyage which shall yet bear fruit unto life eternal.

The captain and officers of the Peking were unceasing in their efforts to make the voyage pleasant to us. I note the fact because this is not always true on the Pacific steamers. Missionaries are not always treated with that courtesy and consideration which would naturally be expected. Our party, however, met with nothing but kindness throughout the entire trip.

Before landing at Yokohama we found that the Japanese steamer with which we had hoped to make connection had already left port. This meant a week's detention in Japan for us, which we regretted very much at first, but which, on the whole, seemed to prove a good thing for the entire party. It gave us time to rest somewhat after a long and rather tedious voyage, and the opportunity thus afforded for quiet thought and serious reflection concerning the work we were so soon to undertake was something not to be lightly esteemed. I will not dwell, however, on our week's stay at Yokohama, but will hasten on towards the end of our journey.

Just before leaving Yokohama we were gratified to learn that Bro. Newton, of our mission in Japan, would be going over on the same steamer with us as far as Kobe. His presence on the trip was a great blessing to us. At Kobe our vessel was detained for nearly two days, so we had ample time to go ashore and see the members of our mission there. We spent one night ashore at this place, and some of us had the happy privilege of spending the time with our beloved Mrs. Lambuth. The hours spent in this home where he, whose name is so much loved by Mississippi Methodists, once lived and labored, will long be remembered. The absence of our beloved Dr. Lambuth was forcibly felt; but it was not hard to realize that he had only gone "inside the temple" of the ever-living God.

Leaving Kobe at noon on Friday, Oct. 14, we reached Shanghai just four days later after a most delightful passage through the Inland Sea, having stopped for a few hours only at the two ports, Shimoda and Nagasaki. As our steamer entered the port at Shanghai a collection of friends were seen waiting on the wharf to receive us. Their cordial, Christian welcome did much to encourage us as we landed on a heathen shore. Almost every member of our mission in Shanghai was present. Bishop Key, too, was among the number who bade us welcome. He has left us now, going back to the homeland for the purpose of bringing the demands of our work here more prominently before our people. Dear friends, do not, I beg you, lightly regard the good Bishop's words in behalf of our China work. He realizes, as we on the field do, how important it is that we have men and women to carry on this work. More than one department of our work will suffer materially if help does not come soon. Why do Christians hesitate when God offers to them the privilege of helping in the great work of bringing the world to Christ?

Brothers and sisters of the Mississippi Conference, it was from your borders that our heroic Dr. Lambuth came forth to China almost forty years ago. Remembering how zealously and patiently he labored to establish our work on a sure foundation here, are you content that Mississippi have no further part in the carrying forward of that work? Is there not one minister in the whole of our Conference who will come and help Bro. Burko at Sung Kong? For more than five years he has labored, prayed and waited for help. Dare we keep him waiting longer? Our Master says: "Go ye; . . . teach them." Shall we not obey?

Praying that the Spirit of God will arouse men to a sense of responsibility in this matter, I am,
Very sincerely yours,

L. ELIZABETH HUGHES.

The Pew to the Pulpit.

The highest and holiest calling on earth is to preach to a dying world "the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto the salvation of everyone that believeth;" and it must necessarily be also the most important and the happiest calling on earth, when filled as it should be; but the most disastrous and miserable one when not. Therefore, the sanctity and responsibility of the calling must be correspondingly solemn and awful.

When "the angel of the Lord appeared unto Moses in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush," and called him to lead his chosen people out of Egyptian bondage into the promised land of liberty, and he turned to go thither, the Lord said to him: "Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." And equally sacred and holy is the call of God now to lead the people out of the bondage of sin into the liberty of the gospel; and with the same feelings of solemnity and awe that impelled "Moses to hide his face," should everyone who is called of God to preach the gospel respond. No one should presume to enter upon such duties without the most devout reverence for, and the most implicit faith in, and absolute obedience to, and humble dependence upon, Almighty God.

If all the called of God will go unto him, as they should, and be made just as he would have them be, and then live and preach just as he would have them do, they will all become irresistible agents in his hands for the accomplishment of the greatest good in this world, and the Lord will bless them with all needed comfort and happiness. He will give them wisdom liberally, and uphold them not, if they will ask him aright, and be well endued them with power from on high. He will supply all their needs, both spiritual and temporal. He will withhold no good thing from them, if they walk uprightly. If necessary, he will shower down manna from heaven for their bread, and waft quails on the winds for their meat. It be don't see proper to cause the people to feed them, he can send ravens to do it, or he can make the harlot of meat and the oruse of oil last indefinitely. He will feed them one way or another. "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised, for he is as good as he is great." But "he is also to be feared above all gods," for while "he is a sun and shield," he is also "a consuming fire."

"Have faith in God," doubting ones, and do your duty; then all will be well with you. "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." The Lord clothes the lilies and feeds the sparrows; will he not much more take care of you, O ye of little faith? If you lack faith in God yourselves, how can you inspire the people with it? The Savior himself says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." "Believest thou this," reader? St. Paul believed that the Savior meant just what he said, for he declared, emphatically and unqualifiedly, "We know all things work together for good to them that love God—to them who are called according to his purpose." Is that not enough? More anon.

Groanings and Amens.

MR. EDITOR: A worldly gentleman, who has a tender place in his heart for Methodism, remarked to a friend of mine the other day that he liked the Methodist Church very much, but stated that he greatly objected to the groanings and amens indulged in by our ministers during public prayer. He said it detracted his attention from the prayer that was being offered, and was a great strain on his sense of propriety. As I have frequently raised this objection myself, it set me to thinking, and hence this suggestion: Would it not be a good plan to discourage the practice of giving vent to our feelings aloud during prayer, as it is evidently objectionable to a great many, in and out of the church? While we would not think of taking the place of silent and unconcerned listeners, we could, with better effect, breathe our amens in a whisper, which would be equally as acceptable to God. It is the mission of our ministry to win souls to Christ; and if this great work can be better accomplished by giving up objectionable customs that have not the slightest tendency toward a compromise with sin and Satan, why not do it?

I am a Methodist, and would be far from yielding a single point in doctrine; yet, at the same time, I think we should strive to break down all barriers that stand before our doors, and if the custom treated of is calculated to "back" and annoy anyone, we should leave it off.
A STEWARD.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

RUM, RAGS, AND RELIGION. By Rev. O. M. Owen. Fourth edition. Full of startling facts! The mask torn off! 12 mo, 125 pages, neatly illustrated, 25 cents. Cloth, 50 cents. Address A. W. Hall, publisher, Syracuse, N. Y.

AN ARTIST IN CRIME. By Rodriguez Otologu. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. G. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $1.

This is a story showing the adroitness by which a rascal can carry on his rascality. It is thrillingly told. We don't know whether such publications do good?

THE REVIVAL QUIVER. By Louis Albert Barnes, D. D. Lee & Shepard, Boston. G. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $1.50. Dr. Barnes has done good service in giving to the world this "record of four revival campaigns." The chapters are the "germs" from which Dr. Barnes gathered his material for talks during revival meetings, and they are pointed and pithy.

POETICAL WORKS OF ROBERT BROWNING. By Thomas Mollivaine. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. G. F. Wharton, New Orleans. Price, $1.50.

These selections comprise some of the best of Browning's effusions, and are put forth in elegant style. Of course, we don't pretend to sit in judgment on Browning's merit as a poet. Each reader has his own opinion; but we can say this: If you want Browning's poems, you can't procure a more dainty volume than this one issued by the Frederick A. Stokes Company.

SIX SONG SERVICES, with Consecutive Reading, Designed for Special Religious Services and Christian Entertainment. By Philip Phillips and Son. Square 12 mo, Manila, 70 pages. Per copy, 20 cents; dozen, $2; hundred, $16. New York, London, and Toronto: Funk & Wagnall Company.

Here is something new and attractive for Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues, and others. The services with words, music, etc., are arranged topically, as follows: I. Christ in Song; II. Salvation in Song; III. Thanksgiving in Song; IV. Children's Services in Song; V. Temperance in Song; VI. Christmas in Song.

J. Fischer & Bro., 7 Bible House, N. Y., have sent us the following Christmas anthems:

1. Hail to the Day of Jesus' Birth. Soprano solo and chorus, by A. Diabelli. Price, 20 cents.

2. Christ is Born. Solo and chorus. Decio Monti. Price, 15 cents.

3. Joy Forth is Ringing. Duet for soprano and baritone, with chorus. O. B. Witzka. Price, 20 cents.

We cheerfully recommend these bright and beautiful anthems, and predict for them a hearty welcome in all church choirs. They are highly meritorious compositions, from most eminent authors, and can not fail to be appreciated by all good singers and choir directors.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—Jan. 1, 1893.

By Rev. Wm. H. LAIPRADE, D.D.

Returning from the Captivity, Ezra 1, 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee." (Deut. xxx, 3.)

Our Lessons for last Spring covered a very sad period of Jewish history. We learned there that, in consequence of their disobedience to God's commandments, the people were carried into captivity, some during the reign of Jehoiachin, many more afterwards, in the days of Zedekiah the king. We also studied the character of Darius and of his companions, made manifest under great trials and persecutions, and, in particular, the preservation of Daniel when cast into the den of lions.

This marvelous event took place during the reign of Darius the Mede. About two years later, Daniel being still alive, Cyrus became king of Babylon.

The prophet Jeremiah (see Jer. xlv, li) had foretold that the period of captivity would be seventy years. Now, in B. C. 537, the first year after Cyrus became king, the time had about expired. Isaiah (Isa. xlv, 28) had mentioned Cyrus, by name, as the agent by whom he would rebuild Jerusalem.

Cyrus was a great statesman, as well as a mighty conqueror. For the purpose of securing and maintaining strength he had favored the restoration, as tributary to himself, of the conquered races to their homes and accustomed modes of life. To restore Israel was to keep with this general plan, and he was, moreover, specially moved by God to do this, now that the time fixed by prophecy had come.

Vers. 1. There was no moral principle in Cyrus moving him to do this. It was in line with his general management of the nations subdued by him. Probably he had heard of Isaiah's prophecy concerning him, and God stirred him to action. The will of the king was "proclaimed" by edicts, and also sent in writing to all parts of the kingdom.

Vers. 2. To ascribe success to the favor of the gods was common among the heathen. The prophecy of Isaiah he regarded as a command from the God of Israel. As a polytheist, he attached importance to any divine message.

Vers. 3. Cyrus recognized Jehovah as a god, as the God of Israel, the God which is in Jerusalem. The proclamation was broad. All could go who desired. The purpose of the king was to furnish population for Jerusalem.

Vers. 4-6. We are informed by Josephus that "many remained in Babylon." Some had grown rich; others stayed behind for other reasons. Cyrus, no doubt, anticipated this, and his proclamation being permissive, and not mandatory, left each one to decide for himself. Those who might go would need aid; free-will offerings for rebuilding the temple would be made, but other funds were needed. So Cyrus arranges for that.

The number of those who went, together with the names of the heads of families, is given in chapter ii. We are informed that there were 43,360, with the additional number of 7,337 slaves.

Those who remained contributed liberally, both to the general fund and for temple service.

Vers. 7, 8. These sacred results were, no doubt, regarded with great reverence since the days of Belshazzar. Their surrender by Cyrus was, no doubt, due to the fact that he regarded Jehovah as a god; but their association, or that of a number of them, with the guilty feast and the prophetic handwriting on the wall must have been known by him, and made him all the more willing to send them away. It is an error to suppose that Cyrus put away other gods in order to worship the only true God.

Vers. 9-11. This is probably only an approximate estimate of the number. The worship of the Jews was so intimately associated with these vessels as to make the possession of them a source of great joy. Sheshbazzar is another name for Zerubbabel.

God allowed Israel to be led into captivity, as a punishment for their sins, but he cared for them all along. He had promised them deliverance, and now he redeemed his promise. All his chastisements are for good.

God uses many and various instruments for the accomplishment of his designs. "He maketh the wrath of men to praise him." "All things," the apostle tells us, "work together for good to them that love God."

Had Israel suffered no chastisement for sin, all the tribes would have gone into idol worship, and the knowledge of the only true God would have been lost to them. But, the purpose being accomplished, God restores them to the home again.

From every piercing sorrow
That leaves our breast to-day,
Or threatens us to-morrow,
Hope turns our eyes away;
On wings of faith ascending,
We see the land of light,
And feel our sorrows ending
In infinite delight.

Woman's Board of Missions, M. E. Church, South.

Four missionary teachers of ability and experience are needed for Brazil—two to go at an early date to fill vacancies and two to go in July.

This call is made by advice of Bishop Wilson, who is in charge of that field. He has recently visited the missions in Brazil, and says the work there requires these women.

Among the teachers in our home colleges and schools are four tried, consecrated women who will readily respond to this call.

Mrs. D. H. McGAVOCK,
For Sec. Woman's Board of Missions,
Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 1, 1892.

To the King's Daughters of the Methodist Church, South.

Dear Sisters: Being one of your number, and knowing our aim is to be an arm of service for the Lord, ever ready to lend a helping hand, I feel assured you will listen to a call upon you made—"In His Name." The Parsonage and Home Mission Society—the regularly authorized woman's home mission organization of our church—has undertaken to establish a school in the mountains between Kentucky and Virginia that we hope to make a base from which our Christian workers may reach out in all directions, bearing the living message of our heavenly Father to many who have not yet regarded it. The inaccessibility of their homes has kept from the many in those regions advantages enjoyed by more favored localities, while their poverty has made it impossible for them to go from home to seek them.

Ignorance fosters vice. Those who are able, appreciating its value, are willing to help to secure the school. No better opening for Christian labor can be found than this school in the mountains will afford. We, therefore, desire to make every effort to place it there at as early a date as possible, and need your help to do so. Will you not take this as special work until it is accomplished. If you have a circle in your church, call a meeting and adopt this as your work. If you have no circle, accept individually this call for service, and give your aid for Christ's sake. Reports of work done by our King's Daughters will be given in our Home, the organ of woman's home mission work in our church, and in this paper. "The King's business requireth haste." In his name I ask prompt responses. Your sister, LUCINDA B. HELM, Gen'l Sec'y.

Pastors for the Hour.

Thoroughly equipped pastors were never more demanded than now. Even physical health and development are not unimportant. Familiar acquaintance with the laws of good society is indispensable. Learning needs to be varied and accurate. Voice and manner must be cultivated. But this thorough furnishing is unto good works. It is a means to an end, and not an end in itself. The pastor is to covet earnestly the best gifts, but not to the neglect of the more excellent way. All his statements are worse than vanity unless they increase his efficiency as a shepherd and bishop of souls. He is not an idol to be worshipped; a lecturer to be applauded; a pet to be spoiled. He is to reprove, reprove, instruct with all long suffering. He is to gird himself, and minister to others. If he would have the regions roundabout flock to his word, he must go into the wilderness, gird with leather over his camel-hair raiment, and preach repentance unto life.

What mockery the cressendo organ swells, the thrilling choirs, the pomp of ritual, and the eloquence of speech—if the people starve for the bread of life! Undeveloped, prating of poets or reading essays on aesthetics or philosophy, and a travesty on the spiritual calamities of the race. Consecrate poetry, aesthetics, philosophy to Christ—and hide in him! If he be lifted up, he will draw all men unto him. He only is the way and the truth and the life. Other foundation can no man lay. He is bread for the hungry; water for the thirsty. It is our supreme privilege and duty to know nothing among men but Christ, and him crucified. By practical sympathy with all distress, by wise efforts in behalf of the material and moral good of community, by a personal experience of the deep things of God, by the faithful presentation of Christ as the panacea for all ills, social and spiritual, we are to continue to demonstrate that he is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.—Western Christian Advocate.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption
When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. A. Williams was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and breaks a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY
Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. Is Prohibition Feasible?

BY REV. W. G. THRAILL.

The advocates of this measure are often met with the objection, "Let us first enforce the statutes we already have, and when we succeed in that we shall be ready for absolute and unconditional emancipation." And is it not infrequent that the inefficiency of existing legal restrictions on the traffic is exhibited as an argument against placing other and more stringent laws on the statute books, which, it is contended, will be still more difficult or impossible of enforcement. And so these sophists tell us how the whole subject is brought into ill repute and the community at large demoralized.

The argument above quoted, plausible as it may seem upon its face, is unquestionably misleading as it is untrue. Little argument is necessary to show that certain evils may be entirely prohibited, which if once given license cannot be regulated. A pestilence might be prevented from touching this whole hemisphere, but let it get a foothold once, and no human power is able to control it. A mad dog may be easily and safely killed before turned loose, but let him go, and a whole community cannot regulate him. And the bite would be equally fatal whatever price or license the owner might pay for the privilege of turning him loose.

One chief difficulty in enforcing present restriction laws, is the quasi-sanction which by these very regulations is given the whole traffic. This compromises the government and weakens the arm of the law. If the drink traffic were once outlawed, declared out and out to be unlawful, at once the law would be materially strengthened in dealing with it. Experience has demonstrated over and over again that prohibition is a result much more easily attained than regulation.

Many restrictions, limitations and prohibitions attend the license system, varying in the different States, but nowhere are these limitations enforced. A man who has so little pride in himself, interest in his fellow, and cares so little for God, as to engage in the low business of running a saloon will be the last man to have any scruples against violating the law. And it is just as sure that the man who habitually visits the saloon and patronizes the bar will not by his own testimony criminate the proprietor for infraction of the law. There are none left to prosecute (with the rare exception of the police) these offenders but the good people who never go near the saloon, and consequently know but little personally of the lawlessness that abounds, except that it does exist. Hence the limitations of the license laws can not in the nature of things be steadily enforced. But the contrary is true of prohibition, as illustrated in those States where a trial has been made. With unconditional prohibition the traffic could only be carried on "on the sly." Sold on the sly and drunk on the sly. The sanction and support of the strong arm of the law would be withdrawn, and when public opinion had risen to the point of "downing" it one week the same work would not have to be repeated the next.

Kansas was never able to enforce the several regulation laws of the holy traffic; but when a prohibition law was enacted, though surrounded on every side by the men and money of the whole nation of liquor men, and trying what at that time was an untested experiment, yet the first year under prohibition Kansas settled, at least, one-third of the whole number of saloons. And not only that, but she decreased by a large number the inmates of her jails, penitentiaries, reformatories and almshouses, and steadily down to the present has every year made striking progress in diminishing the saloons. These facts are attested by high and competent officials. The chief denial is by the liquor traffic. And these men, though contending pretentiously that prohibition is a failure, will promptly contribute thousands of dollars to fight the measure whenever and wherever attempted.

Prohibition absolute, unconditional and eternal is the only measure and remedy that can perfectly avail in exterminating this evil. To accomplish this effect there must be a party, call it what you will. "Prohibition," "Reform," "Columbian," "Independent," or whatever, in which all God-fearing, home-loving citizenship, independent of all political and religious partisanship, shall heartily co-operate.—Christian at Work.

The Gambling Evil

We publish below a number of paragraphs taken from a tract issued by the National Anti-Gambling Society of England. What the writers have to say as to the evils of gambling is quite as applicable to this country as to England. Particular attention is called to the paragraph from the London Times on the subject of horse-racing.

From the London Times.
Horse-racing is an amusement to which is directly traceable more misery, more ruin, more demoralization, than to any other pastime. It is unnecessary to insist upon the manifold evils of the gambling habit, the ruined homes, the broken hearts, the blackened characters for which it is responsible, and the demoralizing effect upon the intelligence and the sympathies of the people of this arid and absorbing passion for swift and unearned gains. The curse of gambling, as Burns has said of another vice, is that "it hardens all within and petrifies the feeling." It is absolutely certain there has been an appalling increase in the facilities for betting and similar forms of speculation among the middle classes and even the working classes. A cheap press has brought the knowledge of sporting ovens to the homes of the humblest. Betting is no longer the exclusive appanage of aristocratic dissipation; it is the delight of shopmen and servants; it roars daily along Fleet street with its unseemly following of touts and roughs; it forms the favorite reading, morning and evening, of the clerks on their way to and from the banks and counting-houses of London and other great cities; it does in wait for the school-boy, almost as soon as he begins to feel an interest in athletic competitions; it entraps, we are assured, even women and children; it is a main element in the miserable story of an immense number of embezzlements and frauds.

From the Author of "Tom Brown's School-days."

Of all the cankers of our civilization nothing approaches the unblushing meanness and rascality that holds its head up to the much-hated British turf. It is quite true that a very considerable section of our aristocracy is on the turf, but with what result? Shall a man touch pitch and not be defiled? There is not a man of them whose position and character have not been lowered by the connection, while in the majority of cases it ends in bringing down the standard of morality to that of blacklegs.

From the Dean of Rochester.

It seems to me that no true nobleman, no true gentleman, should pay large sums of money and have nothing to show for it, money with which he might have relieved want and encouraged industry, and might have obtained the blessing of him who is ready to perish or have made the widow's heart to sing for joy.

From a Prison Chaplain.

The chaplain of the jail at Stafford says: "We are able to fill one of the spacious corridors in Stafford prison with young men of the clerk and accountant class, whose ages vary mostly from sixteen to twenty-three, and who receive salaries varying from £40 to £70. And in what I am now saying I am but re-echoing their own statements: it is betting and gambling of which these young men are the victims."

From Charles Kingsley.

Even before I thought seriously at all I found myself forced to turn my back on race-courses; not because I did not like to see horses run, but because I found that they tempted me to betting, and that betting tempted me to company, and to passions unworthy not merely of a scholar and a gentleman, but of an honest and rational hargaman or collier. Of all habits, gambling is the most intrinsically savage. Morally, it is unchristian and unchristian; the devil is the only father of it.

—Christian at Work.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrhs, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Slang in the Pulpit.

"Govern the lips
As they were palace-doom, the king within."

Much of what goes under the name of slang is smart. Most of it is generated in the sharp attrition of mind made acute either by the necessities of poverty or the exigencies of gambling, and reeks with the gutter, the saloon, the race track. All of it has the abandon of utter worldliness. It sticks like a hur. We can scarcely walk a block without getting full of it. But it detracts from grace and purity. Manners and speech suffer corruption. It is ruled out of good society, outlawed by education, and a price is set on its head by godly living.

Disguising whenever used, it is utterly revolting in the mouth of a minister of the gospel. We are to seek that grace of our lips which shall make the King our friend.

To play the clown in the holy desk, and shame the denizens of Smoky Row in the language we use, is to profane the sacred place and holy day. Next to this is lending countenance to any guilty of such offenses.

Let us avoid it in ourselves as we would sin, and shun it in others as we would the plague. Let the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable in the sight of God.—Western Christian Advocate.

For the Good of Others

Rev. Mr. Williams heartily endorses Hood's Sarsaparilla.

We are pleased to present this Rev. A. A. Williams, of the Sillsbee street Christian Church, Lynn, Mass.:

"I see no reason why a clergyman, more than a layman, who knows whereof he speaks, should hesitate to approve an Article of Merit

and worth, from which his family have been signally benefited, and whose conversion may serve to extend those benefits to others. My wife has for many years been a sufferer from severe

Nervous Headache

for which she found little help. She has tried many things that promised well but performed little. Last fall she took Hood's Sarsaparilla. It came surprising what one bottle could do for her. The attacks of headache decreased in number and were less violent in their intensity, while her general health has been improved. Her appetite is also better. From experience with

Hood's Sarsaparilla

I have no hesitation in endorsing its merits." A. A. WILLIAMS.

Notice.

The members of the Sub Committee of the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE are called to meet at the ADVOCATE office, 112 Camp St., on Tuesday, Jan. 3, at eleven o'clock, to execute a publishing contract for the ensuing year. The members of this committee are J. M. Beard, S. S. Keener, J. B. A. Abrens, W. B. Lewis, J. D. Cameron.

The Closing Year.

The Earth has made another annual round and we all are "one year's march nearer home." The steady, uninterupted tramp of humanity toward "that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns" is something exceedingly solemn to think about. Time pauses not; opportunities fly by as the wind; privileges vanish like shadows; hopes fade like mists before the sun, and we hasten after them. Whether we have used them well or ill, whether we have improved or abused them, makes no difference. They are gone before us with a record which we must needs face when we come into the audience chamber of the King. There will be no mistakes in that record to correct. There can be no additions or eliminations made. Just as the record is chronicled by the passing year and presented to the Master by time, so we must meet it and be judged by it. So, we say, the passing of the year is a solemn thing, and most of us take too little note of it.

There is, however, much in the history of the past year to rejoice in and to inspire hope for the year to come. In many places the Lord's vineyard has been diligently and faithfully cultivated, and the fruits have been garnered. The kingdom of Christ encloses in its folds a larger number of heaven born citizens than ever before. The leaders of God's army have learned wisdom from the struggles, the victories and defeats of the past year. The workers in the Lord's vineyard have acquired valuable experience by which to profit in the future. Preachers and people may look back upon a year "crowned with the goodness of God." While there is much to repent of, there is also much to glory in. Repentance for past neglects of duty may well precede rejoicing in the onward and majestic march of God's people to further conquests in the coming year. We may all draw inspiration for the future from the record of the past.

The outlook for the triumph of righteousness was never so broad and bright as it is in these closing days of 1892. The horizon is lifting itself all around, and humanity is rising to follow that uplift. The agencies for good are multiplying with marvelous rapidity, and the power to subdue the Earth to Christ is increasing in a manifold ratio. Recruits for the Lord's army are coming into the ranks from "every nation under heaven," and the tread of the Lord's soldiers as they march to the battle-fields of 1893 will make this old world tremble and send thrills of rapture throughout the heavenly kingdom.

It will be no easy fight nor bloodless victory. The enemy is stronger in numbers, better disciplined, has larger resources and is more determined than ever. Many a gallant soldier will go down in the storm of battle. The courage of many will be tested as in a crucible of fire. The fortitude of thousands will be strained to the utmost. "The patience of the Saints" will be tried as by a tribulation. But the Great Captain is at the head of his legions; and where he leads, even though it be to death, there will victory fling her banner to the breeze.

The fight is coming, and if there are any among us who are fearful and doubtful as to the result, let them retire before the battle is delivered in good earnest. One coward may infect a whole brigade and bring disaster which can not be remedied for many days. Therefore, we don't want them. Let them go and join the "mixed multitude" which always follows the Lord's people in their march to Canaan. Brother, if you don't intend to be a man and stand up and fight for Christ and humanity, then get out of the ranks and make way for those whose actions will not pain the Captain's heart nor bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of their fellow-soldiers.

The readers of the ADVOCATE will witness wonderful achievements during the coming year, and the earnest prayer of the editor is, that each one of them may be a potent factor in bringing about those achievements.

With this prayer ascending to our God and Father, the editor wishes you all a happy New Year in the Lord. Amen.

The Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

The Board of Missions at its annual meeting, last May, suggested that a week be set apart for prayer and self-denial for missions. The week chosen is the first week in the next year, and begins next Monday, Jan. 2. The Missionary Secretaries have prepared a programme for guidance during the services of that week, which programme is published in another part of this paper.

There is great need for united and earnest prayer. Our people have scarcely yet attained to a proper conception of the meaning of missionary work. Indeed, they can hardly be said to realize the magnitude of the work God has committed to the church. Very few of them seem to see the magnificent opportunities lying around them or the vast possibilities that the future holds in store. We need, then, united and earnest and fervent prayers that the eyes of our people may be opened to these wonderful things. People will never act intelligently with their eyes closed. They must be made to see things as they are before they will act as they ought. Praying brings people close to God, and then they have the divine vision. In God's light they will see light. In the revelation of Jesus Christ comes the revelation of his kingdom and the things necessary for its enlargement and growth and universal spread. It is only under the full baptism of the Divine Spirit that preachers and people feel the thrill and power of the missionary impulse and begin to speak in words of fire to men of other tongues. Pentecost was the birthday of the mission spirit in the church, and every repetition of Pentecost gives a new start and fresh vigor to missionary effort. God's grace is unvariable and is always ready with its divine supports and encouragements. All the church has to do is to get herself in the proper attitude to receive what God wishes to bestow. Then let the church get down on her knees before God and cry mightily for that supernatural work upon her conscience which will open her eyes to see her responsibilities and give her an appreciation of her privileges and constrain her to make the best possible use of her opportunities.

Another feature of this appointed week is the self-denial feature. How true it is that too few Christians know by experience anything about the blessedness of self-denial for the Lord's sake! We give, maybe, something from our abundance to the Master's cause, but we know practically nothing of that "grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich." It is not our wealth that helps the Lord's cause; it is giving that wealth and becoming poor that he may become rich in souls rescued through our co-operation with the divine agencies he has set to work to win the world unto himself. The divine command is, "Deny thyself;" "Sell all thou hast and give to the poor." These are the acts which, according to the Divine Word, build treasure-houses in the heavenly world. The man or woman who denies self for Jesus' sake, that his great cause may be promoted, is laying up treasure in the safest place in the universe, as well as contributing help to lift fallen humanity up into the atmosphere of a healthy, moral, mental and spiritual life. How many thousands of Methodists know absolutely nothing of the exquisite pleasure that comes from a real self-denial for Jesus' sake!

We hope that all our pastors will call their people together every day during this appointed week to pray earnestly for that divine blessing which will bring them all to a realization of their obligations and privileges and opportunities, and that each day will witness genuine acts of self-denial in order that the fruits thereof may go to swell the anthems of praise to Christ's name and promote the interests of his kingdom on earth.

Brethren, let us have a week of earnest praying and genuine self-denial.

The Sunday Law Violators.

Judge Moise, of our Criminal Court, did a righteous thing when he stirred up the Grand Jury upon the Sunday law. He showed them their duty in the premises, and stated that he would hold them to its performance. The Grand Jury, thus "brought up standing," reminded the police authorities of their duties in giving information in regard to violations of the law. They were made to realize that the best thing to do would be to report all cases of violation. The District Attorney was made to understand that the Court expected him to prosecute with vigor every case put in his hands. So last Sunday, a week ago, the police took the names and places of all violators of the Sunday law, and these were published in the daily papers, and filled more than a column closely printed. The good work thus begun needs to be watched very closely and prosecuted with great determination, or the whole business will come to naught, and "the last state will be worse than the first." People who have been for twenty-five years under the tutelage of the Lottery Company, one of whose chief aims was to teach by precept and example utter disregard for law, will not be brought to obedience by a mere spasmodic effort. They have formed the habit of disobedience, and habits are not generally broken up easily. In this matter there is need for judges and juries and good citizens to exercise "patient continuance in well-doing." The revolt against law-ful authority is wide and deep-seated, and only persistent determination will subdue it. We are satisfied that Judge Ferguson has started in for the campaign, and we believe that Judge Moise is filled with the same resolution. Now, if the good citizens of the city will back the two officers as they ought and as they can, we shall soon see a change for the better, and everybody will rejoice in it.

We believe in the enforcement of every law on the statute book, whether it be good or bad. If the law is good, enforce it for the good of the people. If it is bad, enforce it, and thus keep the people from being converted by the wholesale into law-breakers. No State, no community can afford to educate its young people, or its old people either, into the habit of disobedience to lawful authority. Such an education will undermine any commonwealth or city and bring it to utter ruin.

It will take us a long time to counteract the influence of the Lottery, but the two judges named above have started out on the right path, and the ADVOCATE congratulates them on their courage and bids them a hearty God-speed in their work. As long as they are fighting for the enforcement of law, they may count upon the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE as an ally.

City Work for the Churches.

Everyone who believes in the religion of Christ, and understands the trend of things, must at once see and recognize the fact that the great work of the church is to be enterprised and carried forward more earnestly in our cities than ever before. Their increasing populations, forced into the cities by the tides of immigration from almost every direction, create a demand upon the faith and energies and finances of the church which was absolutely unknown to our fathers in the ministry. We are glad to know the church is beginning to feel her responsibilities in this most important matter. The church people are waking up to the obligations which this new state of things have laid upon her, and are beginning to inquire anxiously how they may discharge their full duty in supplying the gospel and its accompanying blessings to the thousands who are coming so rapidly into our cities. For our part, we can not understand how any follower of Christ or any well-wisher of his kind can be indifferent to this great subject. And yet we have many members who can not be aroused. God is packing the people by myriads around our very doors, and by that action says to the church: "Give them the gospel."

We are glad to note that our brethren in St. Louis have inaugurated a splendid scheme of evangelization for their great city, and we pray that "their example may provoke many." The St. Louis Advocate says:

No city is building up more rapidly than St. Louis, and she now stands fifth among the great cities of the Union, having advanced one place since the census of 1880. This increase of population brings increased responsibility to the churches, and especially to Methodism, which is the church of the people. For some time the leading men of our church in this city have felt that a forward movement was necessary, and during the past month various meetings of the City Church Extension and Mission Society have been held, with the pastors and official members of the different churches, at which large plans have been under discussion. It is with very great pleasure that we announce that those plans have at last taken shape, and that it has been determined to raise $200,000 for church extension and city mission purposes, said sum to be subscribed and payable in ten annual installments, which will give the society $20,000 a year for its work. The plan has created very great enthusiasm among both preachers and laity, and at a committee meeting, held a few nights since, we learn that one church was pledged by its representative to raise $95,000, and two of our wealthiest and most active laymen agreed to subscribe $15,000 each, provided the whole amount of $200,000 was subscribed. The plan contemplates the enlistment of the entire membership of the church in the work, and it is the most magnificent home mission enterprise ever undertaken in the M. E. Church, South. If carried to success, as it certainly will be—for the men at the head of it know no such word as failure—it will place our church at the front in this, the largest city in the bounds of Southern Methodism, and ought to quadruple our membership and more than double the number of our churches in the decade covered by the movement. St. Louis Methodism is to day more united, aggressive and active than ever before in her history, and she means to do her part in the evangelization of this great city and in saving it for Christ.

That is a grand scheme, and we trust our brethren will win the largest success. Now, how about New Orleans? Are we to go on in the same old way? Can we not do better than we have done? Can't we carry on our regular work in the churches, and at the same time start and carry forward a work of evangelization which will be a blessing to the other thousands of our population? Could not some of our wise laymen—business men—inaugurate a plan by which we might come in possession of, at least, $5,000 a year for this work?

Brethren, God demands our service, full and unreserved, at this very point. These unseparated thousands God has brought to our doors that we may give them the gospel of his salvation. Will we do it? Will we do it?

A correspondent quotes from the ADVOCATE this paragraph from Dr. J. M. Beard's "Pointers on Church Extension:—

"Sir Francis Lycett, a Methodist layman, contributed one hundred thousand dollars to chapel building in the English metropolis, and did more in a decade for London Methodism than Wesley, Watson and Bunting in a century;"

and then proceeds to say:

"You should either disclaim it, or explain it, though it seems entirely indefensible. To me, it is the most astounding statement that ever appeared in a Christian paper, and for a Methodist to publish to the world that an expenditure of $100,000 is worth more than the life-work of the men named, gives, in my opinion, a view of a mind incredibly degraded."

Language is always to be interpreted by the subject in hand. Dr. Beard was writing on the subject of church building in London. He said nothing of the "life-work" of Wesley, Watson and Bunting, but had reference to their work in building chapels in the city of London. And we suppose it is true that the gift of £50,000 by Sir Francis Lycett to the chapel-building fund of the London Methodists "did more in a decade for London Methodism than Wesley, Watson and Bunting in a century" did along the line of church building. If we would study out the opinions of others, and see their bearings, we might be spared the ugly feeling resulting from the thought that they must be "incredibly degraded."

On the first page of this issue the pastors will find the programme for Self-denial week prepared by our Missionary Secretaries. We exhort every preacher to "keep the week" with his people, and let everybody know that the money arising from self-denial goes to the extinguishment of the missionary debt.

NOTES.

If you will spell "murder" backwards, you will find the occasion for nine-tenths of the murders that are committed!

A call has been sent out by prominent prohibitionists for a general conference of Christian prohibitionists to meet in Philadelphia, Jan. 24, next.

At last we have the total vote cast in November for President. It is as follows: Cleveland, 5,547,000; Harrison, 5,176,611; Weaver, 1,025,000; Bidwell, 258,327.

While the Prohibition party polled more votes at the last election than in 1888 by nearly 25,000, the fact that in sixteen States it lost votes shows that it is not making much headway all along the line.

There is no need in Louisiana, nor anywhere else, for "lynchers" or "white caps." Let our people everywhere resist all tendencies that look in that direction. There is nothing but evil in such outbursts.

Too many Christian people, by speech and life, make the impression that they think only heaven belongs to God and the earth to the devil. The devil really owns nothing. He is the only real pauper in the universe.

The Chicago Standard (Baptist) says that since 1887 the number of saloons in Chicago has increased 85 per cent., while in the same time the population has increased 50 per cent. The Standard gives this as one result of "high license."

Dr. Strong, the author of that widely-read book, "Our Country," is about to bring out another book, called, "The New Era." We predict for it a wide reading. The first chapter is given by permission of publisher and author in the January Missionary Review.

Not long since we heard a lady say of a man, "He is the best-tagged man I ever saw." Now, there are some men who, for the comfort of other people, are not tagged enough. Many people ought to have a tag in front in big letters: "Beware of my ugly temper." It would save a world of discomfort.

The way some interpreters of Scripture are talking about the limitations of our Lord's knowledge is simply nonsense. In reading the writings of some of these people we are forced to the conclusion that if what they say is correct, then at times our Lord really did not know what he was talking about. If such people would make the acquaintance of Jesus himself, they would better understand his words.

The Christian who thinks so much about heaven that he has no time to think of this world makes a mistake. A right use of the conditions and circumstances that make up this world is the training necessary to qualify for heaven. Heaven will not be heaven to those who are not qualified for it, even if they should get there. The man who meets and discharges the obligations that come upon him in this present world, will have the "right to enter in through the gates into the city," and no power in heaven or earth or hell can debar him of that right.

To acquire knowledge of a fact unknown before sets the mental machinery to work with a new impetus, though the fact may be a sad one. Lately we have had some experiences in a Bishop's cabinet, and acquired the knowledge of some facts, which, though known to others, were not known to us. One of these facts is a sad one to us. It is this: There are preachers who are not only in demand, but who are at a discount wherever they are known. The difficult thing to do is to get an appointment for them. No station would them, no circuit wants them, no presiding elder will have them unless the Bishop forces them upon him. This is a sad case for a man called of God to preach. There is something wrong somewhere. Who will tell us where the blight is?

Some papers and some talkers seem to be trying to make the impression that Sabbath legislation is made in the interests of the religious observance of the day. This is a gratuitous effort. Nobody of sense believes in Sabbath laws that look to compelling people to be religious. Sabbath laws are for the protection of the day, but for the protection of the laborer, not for the protection of the laborer's everlasting grind of labor. Man being and every work has the natural right to rest in every seven, and protection of that right that laws are made. And such natural right to protect its individual member, which has been bested them. The Sabbath law is its eagle, not over the day, but individual, and thus secures perpetuation of his physical powers by relieving his labor on the seventh day. It needs to be reconverted from the exhaustion of six days' work. Life may be prolonged, and the object of Sabbath legislation

The Reopening at Carondelet.

We feel very much like congratulating Bro. La Prade and his congregation. Though pressed by the stringency of the times, they have undertaken and carried forward to completion a work which might well have taxed their resources when times were easier. The interior of the old church, both audience-room and basement, have been brightened and beautified in a high degree. The Sunday-school rooms have put off their gloomy looks, and now rejoice in being places not only sunny with the smiles of childhood, but with the smiles of daylight. The audience-room has been made to look entirely new. The frescoing is of rare taste and beauty, the center aisles have been enlarged, the chancel rail has been moved out, the whole floor has been beautifully carpeted, and even the organ has put on garments of praise and looks as if ready to burst forth with the hallelujah chorus. Everything was in proper order for the reopening on Christmas Day.

A large audience assembled on Christmas morning, and at the hour appointed the pastor read and the choir and congregation sang with much spirit the following hymn composed by Bishop Keener:

O Spirit of the Triune God!
Thy mighty wing of radiant plume
With glory filled the rayless floor—
Move o'er my soul, its depths illumine.
Thy wing alone dispelled the night,
And filled the laughing waves with joy.
O may my spirit see thy light—
Thy love its raptured thought employ!
Ere the bright taintains of the sun
Hail thee the world with Orient gold,
Or Earth adown its orbit run,
Thou gav'st my soul a filial mold.
Now, "hail with Christ in God," enthroned,
My life shall burn on glory's height;
Until my Lord on earth be crowned
"Mid Seraphs" shouts and holiest light.

The Bishop followed with one of his great sermons on the Kingship of Christ. It had three points: The King, the King of Glory, the King of kings. For forty-five minutes the Bishop elaborated these three points in his own inimitable style. It was a good theme for the day and for the occasion. We hope to see this renovated church, under the inspiration of this sermon, start anew upon its mission of enthroning Christ as the King supreme in the hearts and over the lives of all who hereafter shall worship within its sacred precincts.

The Woman's Board and the Week of Prayer.

The following action of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Carolina Conference, we are sure, represents the feelings of the Woman's Missionary Society in all our Annual Conferences. The Parent Board needs the co-operation of all the women of our church in its efforts to carry on its work in large and growing fields, and in the various departments of missionary effort that demand its support. We rely confidently on their co-operation during the Week of Prayer. With their sympathy, offerings and prayers, the services of that week will result in a mighty quickening of the missionary spirit in the church, as well as liberal offerings for the payment of our mission debt.

I. G. JOHN, Sec'y.

RESOLUTION.

Being in full sympathy with the work of the Parent Board, and appreciating their consideration in allowing the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, to take up special collections in the interest of our Southern Bible and Training school at Eastern, we, the Executive Committee of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Carolina Conference, request the earnest co-operation of our members during the special Week of Prayer appointed by the Board in liquidating the debt of the Parent Board, and desire the pastors of the North Carolina Conference to so inform our auxiliaries.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The postoffice address of Rev. E. G. Kilgore is 222 Elliott St., Memphis, Tenn.

Rev. J. W. Hill ("Gulliver"), has been elected assistant editor of the Texas Advocate.

Several Mississippi brethren gave us appreciated calls on their way home from Conference.

Just think of it: Boston came within 1000 votes of passing a "no-license law" at the late election.

The health of Justice Lamar is a matter which gives great uneasiness to his friends and to the public.

St. Louis has postal street cars, and it is claimed that a great saving of time has been secured by their use.

We had a call from Dr. Murrah last week. He represents Millsaps College as moving on in a satisfactory manner.

Dr. McGlynn, so long under ban and deprived of his priestly office, has been restored by the Pope's legate, Satoli.

Rev. Robert H. Wynn, recently appointed pastor of Parker Chapel, in this city, will be in his pulpit next Sunday morning, Jan. 1.

Bishop Granbery and wife passed through our city last week, en route home from Mississippi. We regret that we did not get to see them.

The police of this city, stirred to duty by Judge Ferguson, are after the gamblers in good style. Go ahead, Judge, and clean out the rascals.

The grand jury at Greenville, Miss., recently returned one hundred and eighteen true bills to the court, seven of which are for murder in the first degree.

We call special attention to the fact that the week of self-denial and prayer begins next Sunday. Let everybody get ready to keep it in a proper manner.

Now, brother, you are on a new work for the year, and we give you a word of advice in regard to one part of your pulpit exercises: Don't fire your prayers at the congregation.

Rev. T. B. Malone writes from Grenada, Miss.: "We have met with a cordial reception here and are hoping for a year of prosperity." May the Lord give that prosperity!

Another Advocate has come to hand: The Oklahoma Christian Advocate, edited by W. Wimberly and C. P. Brewer, and published at Guthrie. We wish our brethren success.

Last week we made a mistake in giving the postoffice address of the treasurer of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions. It is: W. B. Thomson, 68 South Rampart St., New Orleans.

Let the stewards on every circuit and mission and station get together as soon as possible and do their work with great liberality. "He that deviseth liberal things, by liberal things shall be stand."

There are two of our Southern Methodist papers that seem from their actions to be banking after the connectional grazing grounds. We advise them to shorten their tether lest they become inextricably tangled.

We are sorry to lose our warm friend, Dr. Warren C. Black, who goes to Georgia to work for the Master. Dr. Black leaves a host of friends in Mississippi and Louisiana, and they all wish him abundant success in his new field.

Rev. R. S. Woodward, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, in a recent note, says: "My health is unusually good, and I am hopeful of a successful year's work for '93." May the Lord insure that success!

The publisher of this paper presents his compliments to Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks, of Natchez, Miss., for their elegant and courteous entertainment while he was their guest at the recent session of the Mississippi Annual Conference, held at Natchez, Miss. Such Christian hospitality weaves pleasant memories lasting as eternity.

Rev. John O. Keener, the telling pastor of the Broad Street Methodist Church, was tendered a farewell reception by his congregation last night, at the residence of Mr. Ira W. Porter. Mr. Keener was the recipient of a handsome set of chased silverware, while his daughter was given a handsome engraved silver napkin ring. It was with much regret that his congregation saw him depart that afternoon for his new field of work at Greensboro, Ala. Mr. Keener is a son of Louisiana's distinguished and beloved Bishop—Minister D. Smith.

Week of Prayer and Self-Denial.

MR. EDITOR: The time for the "Week of Prayer and Self-denial," which was appointed by the Board of Missions, and the Bishops for Jan. 1-8, is at hand. The interests at stake are of such immense importance that the attention of the entire church has been called to the observance of its religious services which have been arranged for.

Programmes have been sent to all the preachers, but many in their new charges may lose sight of the call. Responsive exercises have also been prepared for each day, and are being sent to all who have furnished us their post-offices and the number they will need. Let every loyal Methodist fall into line, and by prayerful consideration of the great work of the church in her mission fields at home and abroad, as well as by generous contributions to the treasury of the Lord, make the incoming year one of jubilee in all our coasts.

Woodville.

MR. EDITOR: The Methodists of Woodville anticipated Christmas one day by filling the parsonage with gifts of good things on Saturday. Upon his arrival the pastor found the house swept and garnished, but not empty, to the extent of a couple of barrels of flour, quantities of meat, coffee, tea, sugar, potatoes, pies, cakes, bread, butter, and a long list of accessories. He realized too late his error in coming alone, and is threatened with the serious consequences of economic notions as to the proper use to make of the perishables. The house was radiant with lamps and bright firelight, and the cordial welcome of the good ladies was limited only by his indolent solitariness. R. W. BAILY.

Let every Methodist and friend to Methodism in the Sardis district, North Mississippi Conference, give something during Christmas holidays toward paying off the missionary debt. Make a "Christmas present" or "New Year's gift" to God's cause. Do without something in order to share in spreading the gospel of Jesus. Be liberal in aiding as quickly as possible in raising four hundred dollars in liquidating a just debt. Also observe the week of prayer for this worthy purpose. God help everyone to do his best. Simplicity in Speaking.

Berjamin Franklin, in his autobiography, lays down a canon of good breeding in conversation which is worth keeping in mind. He says that he formed the habit of expressing himself "in terms of modest diffidence," never using the words "certainly, undoubtedly, or any others that give an air of positiveness to an opinion," on subjects that may possibly be disputed; saying, rather, "It appears to me, or I should think it so, or so, if I am not mistaken." This habit, he said, was of great advantage to him in persuading people to adopt his views, and also helped him to gather much valuable knowledge which otherwise would have been withheld. For, as a rule, people do not care to impart information to one who is firmly entrenched in his own opinions. Young people are very apt to have a positive, dogmatic way of expressing themselves, and should be trained to a moderate, as well as graceful, use of language. The use of slang has a tendency toward the error which Franklin tried to avoid.—Exchange.

A Christmas Present...

For BOYS and GIRLS.

WHAT IS IT? GOLDEN DEEDS.

A book of 300 pages, richly bound in cloth, containing a collection of strange and fascinating stories, told by one of the most charming writers who has ever wielded a pen in the interest of young people.

More strange and fascinating, often than the wildest fiction, these stories are valuable as teaching some of the grand truths in history, and leading to the further study, also in developing emotion in the mind of the reader which are elevating and noble.

The above book will be sent free to each yearly subscriber to SOUTHERN SUNDAYS. "SUNDAYS" is the only magazine in the entire South that is devoted exclusively to the interests, amusement and instruction of young people.

Each number contains from 64 to 100 hand-drawn illustrations, which are brimful of meaning and interest, and are new, original, and in fact, everything to make it a model magazine for the young folks. It is the handsomest young people's magazine in America. Subscription price, $1 per year, with Golden Deeds. SOUTHERN SUNDAYS, Box 363, Atlanta, Ga.

LANE-Dawson Theodore.—Subject of the following sketch—was born May 22, 1849, in Morgan county, Ga., and entered into his eternal state, Sept. 4, 1892, at the age of forty-three years three months and twelve days. He was the son of W. H. C. and M. F. Lane. He moved with his parents, at the age of three months, to Oktibbeha county, Miss., where he resided until the year 1868; from whence he removed to Jackson parish, La., where he resided until the day of his death. He united with the M. E. Church, South, in the month of August, 1874, under the ministry of Rev. J. M. McKee, in Vernon, La. About a month later he gave his heart to God at an old-fashioned camp meeting under a memorable hickory tree at Oak Ridge, near Vernon, La., while Rev. James Mays was wrestling at the throne of grace in his behalf, and for the remainder of his life he remained in communion with the church of his choice—a steadfast defender of its doctrines and a true follower of its precepts. He was always loyal to the M. E. Church, and manifested great interest in all the public and social means of grace as well as the business affairs of the church. Yet, notwithstanding his intense loyalty to the Methodist Church, he continued his labors in the cause of Christ to no particular denomination or sphere, but labored with all Christians and in all churches where opportunities presented themselves.

He was a staunch supporter of the institutions of the church; a wise counselor to both old and young. His exemplary, righteous life is worthy of imitation of all. He had the grace of God always abounding richly in his heart, and the older he grew the closer to God was his walk. There was nothing vague or shadowy in the religion of Dawson T. Lane. It walked up from the great deep of his heart and permeated his entire being. It ruled in him, and reigned over him. His light so shone that others, seeing his good works, were constrained to quit the evil of their way and follow him.

He was a very prompt man in every relation of life, and never failed to fill his place in the various duties of a pure Christian. He was a man of great earnestness, strong convictions and impulses. He could easily forgive and forget an offense, and hasten to obtain pardon for a wrong done his fellow-man. He even wrestled with God over it till his soul was eased. His love, affection and devotion to his family was a beautiful thing. It was the scene of his ambition to provide for the comfort and happiness of his pious and aged mother and his two sisters. He delighted to make them happy. In his death the community has lost a noble, honorable, useful and highly respected citizen; the church has lost a strong supporter, an indefatigable worker, and his family an obedient, loving, dutiful son and brother. His death fell like a dark pall over the entire community, and hovers over the once happy home like a cloud of sorrow. His death was a triumph; one; the heavens were cloudless about him. Death was robbed of its sting, and the grave was the gateway to paradise.

He leaves behind him to mourn his loss a mother, two sisters and three brothers; but they mourn not as those who have no hope, for most of them, like himself, are children of the heavenly King. Farewell, dear friend and brother; thy voice in prayer and exhortation is forever silent in this world; thy wise counsels have ceased, and thy pure soul has entered the pearly gates. Peace to thy dear ashes, and may thy mantle fall on some one as worthy as thyself!

H. W. SHERBARD.

ALLEN.—Mrs. Josina T. Allen (nee Kilcrease) was born in Claiborne county, Miss., April 7, 1828, and died at her home in Brookhaven, Miss., May 25, 1892.

She was married to Bro. A. J. Allen, April 5, 1842, and very soon thereafter, with her husband, united with the M. E. Church, South, and remained an earnest, constant member to the date of her death.

Her husband died in 1860, leaving her to raise and rear for a large family of children, to whom she devoted her time and thought, with the devotion of a consecrated Christian mother. Her every thought and effort was to develop her children into happy, useful Christian lives, and the measure of her success was also that of her earthly comfort in her old age. The last two years of her life were filled up with the most intense bodily suffering—often at death's door; but her faith was stronger than her infirmities, and she never lost the sweet comfort and joy of her religion.

The writer was with her during her last illness, and it was, indeed, a benediction to see the spiritual so completely triumph as to give her songs of praise to God while death's sting was being so keenly felt. And now that she is gone from us, to be so sadly missed by her loving children, the community and the church have also suffered a loss that can not be easily repaired. Yet since it was "our Father" who took her from us, we can only offer while we say, "Thy will be done!"

HATCHER.—On Sept. 15, 1892, just as the night was fading away, and the light of another day was breaking, the death-angel invaded the home of G. W. and E. E. Hatcher, and took from their pained circle their precious Mattie Young, born July 20, 1887, aged five years one month and fifteen days.

Mattie was her mother's darling and her father's idol. She was sick only a few days, and ere friends and loved ones were aware of her great danger, the death-angel had come and was ready to bear her pure spirit out of this cold and desolate world to that beautiful world beyond.

Weep not, dear father and mother; your Mattie is not dead, but asleep in Jesus, and is now at the golden gates of heaven, waiting and watching for you! A loving friend,

F. C. B.

JOHNSON.—Died at his residence, near Jankson, Miss., Oct. 15, 1892, Harrison Allen Johnson, Bro. Johnson was born in Rankin county, Miss., in 1846. In 1866 he removed to Hinds county, where he resided until his death. He was married in 1875 to Miss Mollie E. Johnston, of Madison county, with whom he lived in happy wedlock until 1882, when she died, leaving three sons, one of whom soon followed her to the grave. In 1886 he was married to Miss Kate M. Gordon, of Hinds county, who still lives to mourn his untimely death. By his second marriage he had one child, a daughter, now about four years of age.

Bro. Johnson was a man of admirable character. Reared in the lap of Methodism, he was an exemplification of the truth of the inspired injunction: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Although he did not become a member of the church until about twenty years ago, his general deportment was always that of a Christian gentleman. He was a man of the strictest integrity—one of those straightforward, upright characters whose word is their bond. He was a pattern of sobriety, industry and perseverance, and, in consequence of this, was prosperous in business. He was an amiable and one of those genial, companionable souls whose friends are legion. Soon after he became a member of the church he was appointed to the office of steward, which position he filled with great acceptability and usefulness ever afterwards. He was the preacher's friend—one on whom he could always rely for sympathy, counsel and help. He was a benevolent man, always ready to give for the relief of the distressed. He was a public-spirited man. As an instance of this, he gave liberally to Millsaps College—both to the endowment fund and the Jackson location fund. His death was that of the righteous. There have been in all the regions round about few death-bed scenes more glorious than his. He left a dying testimony which will remain with his family and friends as a benediction and an inspiration for years to come.

MITCHELL.—Mr. David Mitchell was born in Onslow county, N. C., May 5, 1821, and died in Goodman, Miss., Oct. 27, 1892. He was most happily married to Miss Sarah E. Dulaney on the thirty-first day of March, 1841.

Mr. Mitchell was for many years a member of the M. E. Church, South. He was deeply and painfully afflicted during the last year of his life, being confined to his bed and room most of the time.

Mr. Mitchell was a genial, cordial man, given to the largest and most generous hospitality, his home being the center of the social circle in the community where he lived. He was above the average in point of intelligence and general information, and this gave him a commanding and leading position in public affairs. He stood very high in the ancient order of Masonry, and he was for a considerable period grand lecturer, and also grand master of the order in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. Mitchell was a tender, affectionate and devoted husband, and an indulgent father, who made companions and associates of his children. His motto was, "To rule by love more than by fear." He was a good citizen, and an obliging and accommodating neighbor. He leaves a deeply afflicted wife and four children to mourn his loss and to cherish his memory. He was laid to rest in the Richmond Cemetery by the order of which he was so long an honored member. GILKREY.

HEARD.—Mrs. Sallie Aline Heard, daughter of J. M. and Nanny Baker, was born in Catahoula parish, La., in 1869, and died in Crowley, La., Nov. 28, 1892. Sister Heard joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1882; was converted in 1888.

There are circumstances that conspire to make this violation of Providence one of the saddest that could befall any family. A young wife, rejoicing in the fullness of life with apparent promise of the three-score and ten limit; the idol of her husband; the well-beloved of father and mother; the pride of sister and brother, is taken. Home life is robbed of one of its most precious members, and heart and hearth for a time left as dreary as a desert in which there are no streams of water. Such times and afflictions as this is what bind all of us together; for these are common afflictions; in them we all experience the feeling of sympathy. But we are assured that we should not mourn as those without hope, for our departed friend was a consistent Christian, loving him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life." We extend to the family and friends our sympathy in this dark hour, bidding them look up; for when we look toward earth we see the shadow of death and hear the voice that says, "All flesh is grass," but when we look toward heaven we see the light of God, and hear that other voice which says: "They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

HOLCOMB.—Wm. W. Holcomb was born in Covington county, Miss., Oct. 2, 1867, and died Nov. 8, 1892, near Williamsburg, Miss.

It is a painful duty to record the death of one we love and trust; but when that one is called away from us in life's young prime it is sorrowful indeed. It puts a mighty stress on our affections, and also on our faith at the same time, and we would ask ourselves what are the signs of the goodness that providence which we believe is in every event of our lives.

Our dear brother, Wm. W. Holcomb, was bound to this life by as many tender and loving ties as cluster around the heart of anyone. He was young and strong, capable and willing to do good and true work in the church of God. While his life seemed so necessary to some, it was so helpful to all and of a promise so large to the church. He was the recording secretary of the Williamsburg church, and was hoped to see him a pillar in God's house. We looked to him with hope and counted on a long and useful life in the church; but we bow with reverence to the divine will of God. He leaves a host of friends and relatives and also an aged father and mother to weep over the departed one. May the God of our fathers bless and keep them by his Spirit and save them in heaven is my prayer.

J. H. EVANS.

CAHOUN.—God has seen fit to call from us little Thos. Cahoun, just in the bloom of youth. He was born in the State of Mississippi, and died near Babb's Bridge, La., at the home of his mother.

We do not deplore him, for he has gone to a home beyond the skies. He was a kind, upright and thoughtful boy; obedient to his mother. He gave her no perplexing anxiety about his every-day life, being always found at his post of duty. He was the pride of the family. Thomas bore his short, but painful illness with great fortitude. When he saw that he must die, he called the family one by one, and gave them parting words full of hope, and a farewell kiss, and then fell asleep in Jesus, where he is resting to-day the "sweet redemption song." He leaves a dear mother, four brothers and four sisters to mourn his loss; but, "I thank be unto God, who giveth us this victory through our Lord Jesus Christ," they can meet him in heaven.

Written by one who stood by and saw him depart.

J. C. CARROLL.

HILL.—Miss Mary R. Hill, daughter of J. K. and Mrs. R. G. Hill, was born in Copiah county, Miss., March 25, 1833, and died in Crystal Springs, Miss., Dec. 2, 1892. She had lived over fifty-nine years in her native county and twenty years in Crystal Springs. Nearly all her life she has been a sufferer from rheumatism. The last three years have been years of confinement and painful suffering. She was a Christian, baptized in infancy, and formally recognized as a member of the church at the age of thirteen. She has known Christ from her youth up. She will be remembered by many of her former pastors still living as a patient, trustful sufferer. They will remember how greatly she appreciated the pastor's visits and prayers. For three years past she has been confined to her home and bed. She was the center of a large circle of sympathizing friends. Oh, how she enjoyed the ladies' prayer meetings held in her home for her special benefit!

Just one week before her death she requested the ladies to meet and hold a praise and prayer service with her, and on Tuesday afternoon, before her death on Friday morning, several ladies met and enjoyed with her this service. As long as she could read she read her Advocates and Bible. She took large and lively interest in her church and religious matters generally. She always seemed so grateful for the blessing of life, and the comfort of religion. She suffered long and much, but her end was peace, and she lives with God forever. "Being dead, yet speaketh." She is no more among us, but lives in our lives and memory. Her life eloquently recommends the religion of Jesus to us who live.

R. D. NORWORTHY.

FAITH.—Died, at her old home in West Carroll parish, near Floyd, La., on Nov. 4, 1892, Mrs. S. E. Faith.

The deceased was born in Alabama in 1817. Her parents moved to this place in 1832. In 1865 she united herself in marriage to George R. Faith, and has lived since then almost continually in our midst until 1891, when the family moved to Texas. While there an incurable disease fastened upon her, and the angel of death whispered there was no hope. So her spirit longed to return to her old home, where she could once more look upon old familiar scenes that had been impressed on her from childhood's earliest days. She could once again kiss loved ones, and could listen to words of affection from those near and dear unto her.

In early life she connected herself with the M. E. Church, South, and lived a consistent member of that body. She was the mother of ten children—five of whom have been gathered home by the Master in early childhood, and five are left behind to mourn that she is not here to comfort and counsel them. To know Lizzie was to love her as a wife, mother and friend, for she exemplified all the Christian graces that constitute and adorn lovely womanhood. When the angel messenger came to summon her to go up higher, she murmured not, only repeating leaving loved ones behind, for she was clothed in the armor of Christian faith, that hid defiance to the grim monster, death. Thus she passed away calmly and peacefully, showing that "blessed are those who die in the Lord." A FRIEND.

FUNCHUS.—At his home in Terry, Miss., on Oct. 3, 1892, the spirit of Bro. Eddie Wicha Funchus passed to its reward. Surrounded by the family, relatives and friends, who had ministered to him so cheerfully through a lingering illness, he closed his eyes in a sweet and peaceful sleep. It was the writer's privilege to visit him often during his last illness, and always found him perfectly resigned to the will of his Maker, and ready to go and be at rest with God, who he had loved and trusted for many years.

Bro. Funchus was born in Hinds county, near Dry Grove, Dec. 7, 1848. He spent most of his life in this county. As a boy, he was always obedient and lived a moral life. He was converted early in life, and joined the Methodist Church, and remained a consistent member until he wanted to join the church triumphant. He was married three times, and leaves a wife and ten children to await a reunion in a better world. In his death our church loses a staunch member, a true Christian; the community, a man of influence for good, always being respected and loved for his upright, noble character. May those left alive to imitate his exemplary life! W. T. GRIFFIN.

MOORE.—Died, Sam P. Moore, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Moore, of Goodwater, Miss.

Little Sam was born Dec. 13, 1889. He was beautiful, unusually bright and healthy for a time; but he became afflicted, and the tender care of mother and father, and the treatment of physicians, could not restore him to health. While suffering from a severe illness, he was borne from this world to a brighter, Oct. 11, 1892. How often does his dear little voice of greeting ring in the ears of his father as he returns from his duties.

A short while before his death he was sitting beside his mother, and, having heard her and his little sister sing the song, "Angels, bear me home," he sang, "Angels, bear me, me, sis and Buddie home." This little voice, which then had a sad, sweet meaning to his mother, she now remembers with sorrow. But we must not grieve for him, since it is our Master's will that he should precede us. God has borne little Buddie home, and may the Lord be around to look forward with faith and hope to the time when they shall be with him and his two little brothers and the Savior forever!

FRINK.

WEEKS.—Mary Weeks (nee Woolton) was born March 17, 1856, and died Oct. 10, 1892.

Sister Mary was a faithful, loving wife, a devoted mother and a good neighbor. By her example the children under her care were taught to be truthful and honorable. She was loved by all who knew her. The bitter pain of sorrow has been pressed to the lips of every member of that bereaved family.

She leaves a husband, seven children (one a little babe two hours old), an aged mother and father, three sisters, two brothers, and many relatives and friends to mourn her departure. Her death was sudden—ill only a few hours. Her meek, patient, humble life assures us that our dear sister is forever at rest.

Our comfort is this: that she is in companionship with thapure in heaven, forever free from sin, with its sorrows and sufferings. Let us, by the grace of God, meet her there. M. A. W.

LEECH.—Our friend, Sidney M. Leech, was born Feb. 2, 1862, in Lowndes county, Miss.; died at Danton, Texas, Nov. 27, 1892. His remains were sent back and placed in the family graveyard. Typhoid fever robbed a mother of a dear son.

Our friend, though, early heeded the command, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." He has been a member of the Methodist Church since he was ten years old. He loved the Sunday-school, but God had a better place for him. We feel assured that he is now basking in the sunshine of God's glory.

Weep no more, fond parent; thy son is not dead, but asleep. While earth has been made darker, heaven has been made brighter. His death was a sincere blow to his many friends. He faithful, mother and little sister; God will take care of Sidney until you come! A FRIEND.

A Sensible Woman

She's putting the wash-board where it'll do some good. She has suffered with it long enough; broken her back over it, rubbed the clothes to pieces on it, wasted half her time with it.

But now she knows better. Now she's using Pearlina—and when a woman uses Pearlina, the only way to use the wash-board is in the kitchen fire. There's no more hard work, no more ruinous rubbing, but there's washing that's easy and economical and safe.

Are you as sensible as this woman—millions are?

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as" Pearlina. IT'S FALSE—Pearlina is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearlina, be honest—send it back. 312 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

OBITUARIES.

SCOTT—Carl, son of Rev. J. O. Bennett, of the Louisiana Conference, was born Jan. 21, 1852, and died Nov. 14, 1892.

In this short life we have one of the most beautiful examples of child-piety the writer ever known. He was a remarkably bright boy, learning to read while quite young, and the first loved the Bible better than any other book. When about six years old he would take the family Bible, and laying it on the floor, lie down over it, and resting his face between his hands, read it for hours. He was pious from childhood. He was perfectly truthful; would not tell a falsehood, or conceal a fault or avoid punishment. He was obedient to his parents, and never knew a disobedient boy than he. He never seemed to question the wisdom of a command or a prohibition from his parents, but recognized obedience to them as his first duty. His ready "All right!" showed how cheerful his obedience was. I do not remember a single instance of rebellion when told by father or mother to do a thing, or refrain from doing something he wished to do.

When about seven years old a strong wind suddenly came up, while his father was a short distance from home. In his fear for the safety of his father, he went alone to pray, and soon returned to his mother with a bright face, saying, "Papa is all right; I asked God to stop the wind."

For years past, while his father was away, he would ask a blessing at the table, and in his childish way hold family prayer. When his father would return, and say, "Have you been praying for papa?" he would say, "Yes, I never forget you; I always pray for you." He had a profound reverence for the church, and took great pleasure in attending all religious services; was never absent when he could avoid it, and never failed to learn his Sunday-school lesson well. He showed a deep interest in the preachers he knew, and loved them truly, especially the presiding elders.

He was sick about five weeks, but never murmured or became impatient. To his little sister, lying sick by his side, he would say, "Gracie, you ought to be more patient; it is not for us to be sick." A short time before he died his mother said, "Son, suppose you should die, and he said, 'It will be all right. I am not afraid to die, but I would like to do good. I want to get well, so I can do some good in the world. I feel that I could do good most teaching the Scriptures and leading sinners to Christ.' He said, 'I know I do wrong sometimes, but I always ask the Lord to forgive me, and he does it.' When told that he would not be well, he said, 'I am still hoping, and trusting, and praying.'"

A friend at his funeral said, "The brightest boy I know." Another said, "The most lovely little fellow I knew."

He seemed to love everybody, and won the love of most of those who knew him.

I have written this extended sketch of this dear child for two reasons: First, to show the result of careful, prayerful, parental training of young children, and this encourages parents in this blessed, but delicate, duty; and, second, to show the children who may read it that they may be good and happy while they are young.

TALLEY—Departed this life, near Pearl River, La., Dec. 8, 1892, Mrs. Mary Jane, wife of J. D. Talley, in the fifty-seventh year of her age.

Sister Talley had long lived a consistent member of the church, and enjoyed religion. She was the mother of eight children, nearly all of whom are on their way to heaven, and her dear husband already there, who were waiting to welcome her to everlasting habitation.

What a blessing to the earth is a godly household! Her soul and daughters trained to fear the Lord in youth, and to these pious children what a sweet remembrance of a loving mother, whose influence of a holy life has left sweet perfume of hallowed piety on earth, which will in dearest memories when the tender hand that guided is moldering in the grave. Oh, hallowed memory of a mother's love!

Dear children, blessings of earth and heaven may be yours, for they are promised to the children of the just; but never more will that dear parent's voice direct, that kind hand lead you in the cheerful world. And as she called you to her dying bed and bid you meet her in the skies, so let your lives portray her dear teaching, till like her, you shall change your earthly home for heaven. God bless the memory of her name; and not among her relations alone will it be sacred, but also the way minister of grace, who always found a warm welcome home beneath her roof, even the wild Indian of the woods, from whom they got kind food and shelter, will by the tear of grateful friendship at the remembrance of her name.

With the green sod of Covington's cemetery near where her childhood and her youth spent, she lies a quiet sleeper, till the resurrection morn shall call to life renewed.

BENTLEY—Charlotte F. Montgomery was born in Trion County, Ga., Feb. 27, 1840; married A. T. Bentley, Jan. 11, 1859, and died at New Orleans, La., Dec. 14, 1892.

When about sixteen years old Miss Montgomery joined the church at Flat Lick, in Claiborne Parish, La., under the ministry of Rev. T. B. White, by whom she was baptized. In all the relations of life, social or religious, Sister Bentley served well her place and her purpose. Profoundly in sympathy with all distinctive features of Methodism, and deeply imbued with the spirit of the Master, few was seldom absent from the house of God in quiet, unobtrusive way she spent her life, and died in full possession of Christian hope.

Although she left no children to mourn her death, she had many companions with her for thirty-three years, and many pious ones to whom she was a blessing in her life, and mingle her many tears of real sorrow. We cherish her memory for the felicity of our departed.

LDS—Mrs. Margaret Auld was born in Louisiana, Ga., Nov. 15, 1812; moved to Louisiana, La., in 1818, and to Louisiana, La., in 1823. At the latter place, on April 7, 1880, she was married to Mr. Auld. At Hattiesville, La., in 1883, she identified herself with the Methodist Church. In 1884 she moved to Kemper county, Miss., and later to Louisiana, where she resided until her death, which occurred Nov. 2, 1892. She lived eighty years and three days; the mother of ten children, and had one son and fifty grand- and great-grandchildren. She lived a consistent member of the Methodist Church.

She was a kind, gentle, and loving mother, and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear, pop, crash on the least provocation.

Common glass is misty, milky, dusty, you can't see through it; Macbeth's is clear. Though clear glass is worth fine work, and a perfect chimney of fine tough glass is worth a hundred such as you hear, pop, crash on the least provocation.

SCOTT—Died, in New Orleans, Oct. 26, 1892, Mrs. Sarah Scott, wife of M. J. Scott, and daughter of Ethan and Malinda Cotton. She was born in Covington, La., Feb. 5, 1843, where she joined the church while young, and was married Feb. 16, 1865.

Sister Scott was a kind, good Christian; faithful, far as she was able, to all the duties of a wife and mother, for she was an invalid for many years; yet, though ailing and afflicted, God spared her long enough to raise her family and see a part of them converted.

She was fond of her Bible, and read it constantly, and this, with other pious books, supplied to her the means of grace when unable to attend the sanctuary. She advocated and professed the blessing of sanctification, lived one of those quiet lives which compose the great body of the church, endeavoring to hear her long-continued ailments in gentleness of spirit. It was no wonder, therefore, when the messenger arrived that she was ready, and exhorting those around to meet her in heaven, and sending messages of love to absent friends, she gently closed her eyes and fell asleep in Christ.

WOOTEN—Our home was made happy, Oct. 27, 1892, by the birth of our first child, little Willie Wooten; but the angel of death visited our home, Nov. 20, and took our sweet little babe to the One who gave it, and now we are left alone again. We will never see its sweet, bright eyes on earth again; but, oh! how sweet it will be when we meet in that sweet by-and-by, where there will be no more sighing or shedding of tears, but all will be joy and love! We know that "the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away," but how hard it was to give up our only child! But while its place is vacated on earth, it fills a place in heaven. If it were not for our blessed religion, the darkness of our home would be unbearable. We were longing to hear the patter of its little feet, and its prattling voice around our hearth-stone; but now it is gone. Oh, how sad! Is it possible that we will never see its bright eyes and lovely face on earth again?

Sleep on, dear son; mother and father will meet you in heaven, where we will part no more.

MOTHER AND FATHER.

HUGHES—The subject of this sketch, little Thomas R. Hughes, was born Oct. 31, 1886, and died Nov. 22, 1892. He was the only son of his parents, and was a bright, cheerful and loving little boy. He suffered much, being sick fifty-nine days; but, although a child, he bore his afflictions with patience and never complained, but was cheerful all the time.

Little Tommie was mislaid at home by papa and mama and little sister, to whom he was much devoted. But God is gathering up his jewels, and while we mourn our loss, heaven is made richer, and the angels shout for joy, and little Tommie has joined in the songs of praise. Cheer up, papa and mama. Look up, for your little boy is watching and waiting for you, and longing out, "Come home, papa and mama and little sister; I'll meet you out on the way."

May God bless the bereaved ones, and bind up their broken hearts, and may they ever be found ready as Tommie was when God calls for them! Is the prayer of a friend,

J. M. BELEV.

CHUNKY, Miss.

WOOTEN—Little Arnel Jackson, son of J. A. and M. A. Wooten, was born Oct. 7, 1892, and died Nov. 20.

The parents were at the home of Sister Wooten's father when the messenger of death called for their darling babe. Little Arnel was the joy of their home and the idol of their hopes, and when the precious bud was plucked, a mist of cloud seemed to have hovered over the place and shut out the light-house of earthly ambition. But while our hearts are saddened, and the world made darker, heaven has been made brighter, and they place their confidence in him who saith, "He is not dead, but sleepeth." I had the pleasure of seeing the corpse of little Arnel; it was so beautiful, so sweet.

Mourn not, dear loved ones; your babe has gone to that beautiful city to dwell with Jesus!

B. W. LEWIS.

TREAT—Died, in Plaquemine parish, La., Dec. 3, 1892, Sister Catherine Lydia Treat, aged seventy-three years and twenty days. Interment took place in Woodland Cemetery, Plaquemine parish.

Sister Treat was for over forty years a member of the M. E. Church, South, living a consistent life to the end. A short time before she died I visited her, and administered communion, at which time her faith was strong and her devotion deep. Sister Treat let her light shine, and she had the pleasure of seeing the good she accomplished before passing away. In the Aiklers Church are now living witnesses of her influence put forth many years ago. She died at the residence of other nephew, Mr. Victor Treadaway.

DICKERSON—Miss Sallie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Dickerson, died at her home near Shrook, Miss., aged twelve years eleven months and one day, on Dec. 15, 1892.

On her death the church has lost a bright and devoted member, and the family a kind, affectionate and loving daughter and sister. Oh, how we sorrow for the lovely departed! She is not dead, but sleepeth in the arms of Jesus. God grant the sorrowing family strength to bear their loss patiently.

Grieve not, father and mother, for she is with her blessed Savior—a bright and shining jewel in his crown. Grieve not, brothers and sister, for she is happy with Jesus.

BENNETT—Whereas, God has seen fit to take from us our much-beloved little friend and classmate, Carl Bennett, who died Nov. 11, 1892, aged ten years, and whose loss we deeply deplore (but we know that God doeth all things well), and while in his death we sustain a great loss, we know that he is gone to add one more jewel to deck the Savior's brow; therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Sabbath-school has lost one of its brightest and most promising young members. The little which little Carl left was one of unshakable and punctuality. He was kind and obedient to his parents and teachers, and always punctual in the discharge of his duties. He was truthful and audacious, and a great lover of the Sabbath-school, and the life he lived should be an example to all his friends and classmates.

Let us not grieve for little Carl; God has called him to his home. He has entered through the gates of pearl, and is waiting for us at the throne.

F. E. HAYES, for Com.

If you look at a dozen common lamp-chimneys, and then at Macbeth's "pearl top" or "pearl glass," you will see the differences—all but one—they break from heat; these don't; you can't see that.
